SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 1916) authorizing the Texarkana and Fort Smith Railway Company to bridge Little River, in the State of Arkansas; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PUBLIC LANDS IN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 3d instant, a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, submitting a list of all public lands located in odd sections in the States of Oregon and Washington; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of that court in the cause of John A. Fairfax vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I submit a conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I will simply state that the House conferees receded from the disagreement of the House to all the amendments of the Senate, except the amendment striking out the provision for a census abstract. That is left in. The clause which was stricken out of the bill as it passed the House providing for an abstract of the census is restored, and with that exception all the Senate amendments are agreed to.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556) "to provide for further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

"For wages of workmen and adjusters, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, $52,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For compensation and mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories on account of fiscal years as follows:

"For 1893, $3,334.

"For 1894, $15,900."

To pay the clerk to the Speaker's table, for services rendered as clerk to the Committee on Rules during the first and second sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $500; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. M. COCKRELL,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask a leave of absence, for ten days, for my colleague, Mr. MCLAURIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the leave of absence is granted.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented a memorial of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, of Northwood, Iowa, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the preamble of the Constitution of the United States recognizing the Deity; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Johnson Division, No. 67, Order of Railway Conductors, of Waterloo, Iowa, praying for the adoption of certain amendments relating to ticket scalping, etc., to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of J. H. Merrill and sundry other citizens of Iowa, and the petition of E. P. Fogg and sundry other citizens of Epworth, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the lottery traffic; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of W. A. Granger and sundry other citizens of Nashua; of W. H. Bradley and sundry other citizens of Larchwood; of R. T. Gilbert and sundry other citizens of Viola Center; of F. H. Robbe and sundry other citizens of Charles City, and of Viola Lodge, No. 220, Legion of Honor, of Viola Center, all in the State of Iowa, praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the lottery traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN presented sundry memorials of citizens of St. Cloud and Alexandria, in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on cigars; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAFFERY presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the harbor of that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Luella A. Oteri, of New Orleans, La., owner of the steamer Joseph Oteri, jr., praying for the remission of a penalty imposed upon that vessel for a technical violation of the customs laws; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of New Orleans, La., praying for the establishment of a bureau of public health within the Treasury Department of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented the petition of Francois L. Bouillotte and others, children and heirs at law of Joseph Bouillotte, late of Rapides Parish, La., praying that their claims against the United States for stores and supplies taken for the United States Army, at Alexandria, La., during the civil war, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PEFFER. I present a memorial of the executive board of Baker University, located at Baldwin, Kans. I can state its contents perhaps more briefly by reading the resolution which embraces the memorial:

That we, as the executive board of Baker University, protest against the passage of the bill now pending before Congress requiring colleges having military departments to furnish "quarters" for the officer in charge.

The memorialists therefore "urge the Congressmen and Senators from Kansas to use their utmost influence to prevent the bill from becoming a law." I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I wish simply to state that I not only agree with the suggestion in the memorial, but that I should be very much pleased to see the Government take off its military hand from all colleges and schools throughout the country as well as Baker University.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the Powelton Building Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the clause in the Wilson tariff bill relating to building and loan associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Encampment No. 60, Union Veteran Legion, of Johnstown, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 5575, which proposes to take from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers all or nearly all control, and place the same under the government of the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Scranton, Pa., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law, and remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Bailey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petitions of Springer Morris and J. N. Conn, of Point Marion, Pa., praying for the passage of House bill No. 5246, providing for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1433) granting to the Hot Springs Water Company a site for a reservoir for cold water upon the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4328) for the relief of William B. Chapman, George W. Street, John W. Hoes, Emmet C. Tuthill, and Joseph H. Curtis, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 552) for the relief of Calvin Gunn, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAFFERY introduced a bill (S. 1924) to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in the matter of the claim of the owners of the steamboat Bee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1925) for the relief of D. R. Carroll and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1926) for the relief of John Tyler, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 1927) for the relief of Michael A. Duce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE KIDWELL FLATS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is directed to furnish the Senate information as to the present status of the suit in regard to the Kidwell flats, in the District of Columbia, and why the suit is not pressed to a conclusion.

CLERKS IN TREASURY AND INTERIOR DEPARTMENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], coming over from a previous day.

The SECRETARY. A resolution to direct the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate in separate lists the names of all clerks and employés appointed, promoted, reduced, and dismissed since the 4th of March, 1893, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to modify the resolution by striking out after the word "reduced" in line 4, the word "and," and by inserting after the word "dismissed," in the same line, "and who have resigned by request."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 13th instant, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate in separate lists the names of all clerks and employés appointed, promoted, reduced, dismissed, and who have resigned by request since the 4th day of March, 1893, and the State to which each such clerk or employé is accredited; also that such of them as served in the Army or Navy of the United States at any time during the war of the rebellion shall be designated by some distinguishing mark in each list.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

HEARINGS ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER on the 14th instant, as follows:

Whereas there exists in many places and on the part of large numbers of citizens, individually and in organized bodies, a disposition to visit the city of Washington for the purpose of personally presenting to Congress their views with respect to pending and prospective measures of legislation; and

Whereas many of such persons and bodies are reported to be now on their way hither, with others likely to follow, for the purposes aforesaid:

Therefore, to the end that these our petitioners shall have full and respectful hearing and that proceedings attending their communication with the Senate shall be orderly and not subjected to interruption by the transaction of other public business,

Be it resolved, That a select committee of nine members of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President, to be known as the Committee on Communication, whose duty it shall be to receive all written or printed communications from citizens or bodies of citizens visiting the Capitol or intending to make such visit, for the purposes mentioned in the preamble hereto, and to receive all petitions, memorials, and remonstrances of such persons and bodies and hear them orally in relation to the matters and things about which they desire to communicate with the Senate. The committee shall report fully to the Senate from time to time as other committees report.

The Sergeant-at-Arms will set aside a convenient room in the Capitol or other building belonging to the Government for the use of said committee and furnish the same with the necessary articles for the convenient dispatch of business—

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, there was a motion made yesterday to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules; and before action is taken upon it I wish to state to the Senate very briefly the object of the resolution, so that we may act not hastily, but advisedly.

There is, and has been, for perhaps two or three years, a growing disposition on the part of a great many people in the country, not confined to any particular section, but scattered all over the country, to present their views to Congress in person, changing the usual form of petition from written to oral language. That disposition is growing more general every day. The newspapers now inform us that in Boston, from other cities in Massachusetts; from New York City, and other places in the State of New York; from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis, and a number of other places, men are congregating in small bodies for the purpose of coming to Washington with the ultimate object of presenting their views in connection with their condition to Congress personally.

The object of this resolution is that the way may be made easier for proceedings of this kind to be conducted, so that whatever action this branch of Congress may think proper to take in relation to the visitors the way will have been prepared for future action. I am of opinion that if it goes out to the country that the Senate, which is regarded by many of the classes of people to whom I refer as the American House of Lords, and as an exclusive body, out of touch with the people——

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear a word on this side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. PEFFER. If it goes out among the people through the newspaper press that the Senate of the United States is not that exclusive body it is charged with being, that it is not so far out of touch with the people as a great many persons believe it to be, that fact itself being shown by the appointment of a committee of the kind proposed in this resolution, will go far toward modifying and mollifying public sentiment in relation to existing conditions.

I therefore hope that if the Senate is disposed, after thinking over the matter seriously, to turn the resolution over to a committee, be it so, but with the understanding that it is being done respectfully to the people interested, and that the object is to make some kind of arrangement by which our visitors who want to speak personally and orally to this body may have a way of access through a committee specially appointed.

Mr. President, I think we are on the verge of trouble, and unless we are wise and manage our own course prudently we may have occasion in the near future to regret it. Last evening in the Star of this city I observed some language which I regretted very much to see in a newspaper, as if the police authorities of the city were preparing to arrest men as vagrants who come upon a peaceable mission to the capital of their country for the purpose of conferring in person with the chosen representatives of the people. This is an ugly feeling, Mr. President, and it ought not to exist here or elsewhere. We are always prepared with our police force, and with our military force, and with our civil force——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. He says these persons are coming on a peaceful mission. From what circumstance comes the almost universal popular description of this movement as an army?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts can not be heard on this side. If he would address the Chair and talk a little louder, possibly we might know what he is saying.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from Tennessee to be entirely out of order in speaking to the Senate from his chair, and also to be entirely out of order in fancying that he presides over the Senate when the Vice-President is present. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Tennessee admits he was out of order. No man can watch the Senator from Massachusetts as vigilantly as I do and by any possibility keep in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator devoted himself to his own proper function instead of watching any other Senator's faults, as he seems to do, he might be in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas from what circumstance comes the universal description of this moving body as an army?

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Massachusetts is older than I am in this world and I have no doubt quite as much devoted to theology and religious matters. He has doubtless ten thousand times heard the expression the Christian army, the army of salvation, the army of the Lord, the army of peace, and in some of the Sunday schools——

Mr. HOAR. When those armies make their fight with Satan they do not make it by personal conference with him.

Mr. PEFFER. Our Sunday schools are beginning to teach their pupils to be soldiers. They are employing military men to teach the Sunday-school scholars military discipline. In the city of Boston, with which the Senator has some acquaintance, he will find a school of that kind in operation now.

One of the most harmless, one of the most peaceful bodies in the world is a body known as the Salvation Army, that move up and down the streets with flags and banners flying, to the beating of drums and cymbals and the singing of songs; and yet their errand is one of peace.

The Senator will remember from reading the newspaper descriptions of this army of which he speaks that it is known as the army of peace. They have religious inscriptions upon their banners, and they carry portraits of the Prince of Peace, the Carpenter's Son, the Lowly Nazarene, the man who of all men best taught "Peace on earth and good will toward men."

Mr President, these men who are coming to Washington are coming on a peaceful errand. They want to say to the Congress of the United States that they are out of employment, and they want something to do to earn an honest living; and they want to say it to us so that they will know we hear it with our ears, that we see them with our eyes, and that we take cognizance of what they say with our understanding. There could be nothing more peaceful, while it may be true that the object seems visionary and while every member of this body has discouraged it, and none perhaps more than I have done, yet we can not avoid this thing.

Mr. President, it is like the coming of a child into the world. Everything is ready, and the child must be born. Nature has provided all of these things in her own way. Here is a movement of the people that is coming naturally, logically. It reminds one of the moving bodies of men in France prior to the French Revolution. It reminds us of insurrections among the workingmen in ancient times when they gathered about their leaders without any apparent object in view, and yet the world at that time was moved by what they were doing.

We may talk about these movements as visionary, as childish, and all that; nevertheless they are actually taking place, and I do not believe that it is beneath the dignity of this great body of American Senators to be ready when those people come to Washington and say to them, "Here is a committee of our body that we have already prepared to confer with you, to hear what you have to say, and report your message to us." There is something about this movement, Mr. President, that is pitiful; something that is earnest; something that deserves our attention; something that we can not if we would, and I do not believe that we would if we could, undertake to laugh down. It is upon us and we must take care of it. Let us treat it as statesmen—wisely; and as Christians—kindly.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I certainly hope the resolution of the Senator from Kansas will be adopted by the Senate, not because I think it advisable for Mr. Coxey's army or any other army to come to Washington for the purpose of presenting a petition to Congress in person, not because I think it is advisable for them to do this, but because I believe that as American citizens they have a right to do so if they see fit, and it would be unwise on the part of the Senate to deny them this right. Any American citizen has a right to come to Washington, I suppose—at least I have never heard it denied until within the last two or three days—any American citizen, it makes no difference where he may live, or what his occupation may be, or what his station in life may be, has a right to come here, and he has a right to walk under the Dome of this Capitol if he sees fit and be as secure as any other citizen in the land. So if Mr. Coxey and his followers see fit to come here for a peaceful purpose, as they are coming—whether that purpose be visionary or not is not for us to judge—they have a right to do so and look in upon the highest legislative body of the country of which they are citizens; and they have a right to occupy these galleries, which are sometimes occupied by persons who are almost chronic in occupying them to the exclusion of citizens of other sections of the land. They have a right to come and be heard by a committee of this body; they have a right to present their grievances in person; and no man has the moral or the legal right to deny them that privilege whether he be Senator or citizen.

Disclaiming, then, any purpose whatever of approving or advising Mr. Coxey's movement, I must say that, so far as I am concerned, I believe that he has a right to come here with his followers, and that he and they have a right to be treated with as much courtesy and kindness in doing so as the President of the United States, and any different reception of Mr. Coxey or his followers, or of any other American citizen, would be altogether un-American, and would not be sustained by the common judgment of the American people.

Let us look for a moment at the way public business is transacted here. I have been reading for two or three days in the newspapers of this city that some general, called Ordway—I do not know who he is, whether he is a regular army officer or a militia officer—is mobilizing the military force of the city for the purpose of receiving Coxey at the confines of the District, with the bayonets of soldiers and the clubs of policemen.

These men are coming here for a rightful purpose as American citizens, whose persons, whose homes and whose rights are as sacred under the flag and the Constitution of this country as are those of any other man, woman, or child, and yet we witness the singular spectacle of the city being thrown into excitement about the movements of a harmless army of this character, entirely without arms. The Army is to be mobilized to receive them upon the point of the bayonet, if need be, and hired soldiers are to meet them at the confines of the District and check their entry or to shoot them into submission if they refuse, when they have violated no law.

Is that American? Is it right to deny to such men the privilege not only of entering the District of Columbia and the city of Washington, but to enter these galleries, if they see fit to enter them?

Go down to the depot of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad or the Pennsylvania Railroad at almost any time of the day and you will see great bodies of lobbyists coming to the city. I have seen them myself, fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five at a time, and sometimes more. They do not stop to take their baggage to the hotels, but they walk right into the corridors of this Capitol and seek these galleries, seek the lobbies of the Capitol, seek Senators and the committee rooms to lay their various schemes before members of Congress. Sir, many of them are met almost with hats off; they are met almost with outstretched arms and words of welcome, and yet they are doing the country more damage and more injury than all the Coxey armies, than all the forces that can be mobilized in this country by men like Mr. Coxey; and yet here is a threat upon the part of this Government—for I assume that this militia officer would not take the step he threatens to take without orders from some authority, from some one higher than himself—here is the threat we see in the newspapers, that honest workingmen who are out of employment, every one of whom perhaps is as good as any Senator in this Chamber, every one of whom owes allegiance to this country and to its flag, are to be met with a military force because they come here to place their grievances before Congress in person: because they come here in a body, as lobbyists come here from day to day and week to week and month to month, they are to be met by a military force to deprive them of an undoubted and sacred right. A suprising spectacle in a country like this!

The conditions of the country are ripe to produce movements of this kind. These people have appealed to Congress from time to time by petitions and memorials without any attempt being made to redress their wrongs. They send their petitions to Congress, and they are received here simply because the Constitution makes it obligatory upon us to receive them: they are never read or published here so that the world can know what they contain; they are hurriedly read by title or a more brief statement is made of their reception, and they are speeded off into the dark closets and caverns around this Capitol, never to be resurrected or seen again. No attention whatever is paid to them.

The right of petition as it exists in this country, and as it is practiced in this body, is a farce, and the great common American people know it full well. So, seeing that they can not be heard otherwise, they come here to lay their grievances before Congress in a peaceful manner. Will we deny them that sacred right of American citizens? Will we deny them the privilege—no, not the privilege—but the right under the Constitution they have to do so? Will we not only deny them that right, but meet them at the confines of the city as felons are to be met and driven back? Are American citizens coming here for a lawful purpose to be met at the confines of the capital of their nation by a hired soldiery, by a police force, and kept out of the city and beaten into submission if they persist in coming?

What provokes any suspicion against this class of our people? Is it the clothes they wear? Is it because they are not clothed in purple and fine linen and arrayed like Solomon in all his glory? Is it in consequence of any threats they have made against Congress or any branch of the Government? Is it in consequence of their being armed and threatening the peace of the city or the integrity of the nation? Sir, it can not be any of these, for they are peaceable, law abiding, honest, humble American citizens, and they come upon a mission of peace, and not of war.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me one second?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Representing in some measure, as I do, the people of the District of Columbia, I beg to know of the Senator from Nebraska what evidence he has that the officer in command of the District militia has ever made a threat or an intimation such as the Senator has indicated? I undertake to say he will find no authority for any such statement coming from any such officer.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I will say in answer to the Senator from Tennessee that I said the newspapers of this city were full of it. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if that is not correct?

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator to deal with what he was pleased to characterize as a threat of the officer commanding the militia of the District of Columbia. I deny that any such threat has been made. The Senator need not ask me what has appeared or what may appear in a newspaper in its disposition to speculate upon every possbile condition—in its disposition to hunt things sensational. I know not what the newspapers have said or what they will say upon this or any other subject, but the Senator is not justified in charging that a public official has uttered threats such as he has described upon mere newspaper declarations as to what possibly or probably may happen.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am not responsible for what the Senator from Tennessee understands, nor did I make the statement which he now makes. I said that in the newspapers of this city it was claimed and it is not denied—and that is how I knew that there was an officer of this name—that Gen. Ordway is mobilizing the military force of this District for the purpose I have named.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator mean to say that it is stated that that officer has threatened to do the things which the Senator describes?

Mr. ALLEN. It has been stated in the newspapers that this officer has mobilized or is mobilizing a force for the purpose of meeting these men with the bayonets of soldiers. What does that mean? Does not that mean war upon them and upon their rights? It is nonsense for us to say that nothing of that kind is contemplated when there is a unanimous concensus of opinion upon the subject, and it is not denied by the very officer himself, who must see the statements made in the newspapers from day to day. I know nothing of his purpose except as I get it through the newspapers of this city; and I say if he intends to meet these men with a military force, he violates every principle of this Government, and violates its statutes as well.

I heard it stated in this Chamber within a few days that the time has come when these Capitol grounds must be made sacred and nobody must be permitted to occupy them; that parades must not occupy the Capitol grounds. What is there, Mr. President, about the Capitol grounds which makes them so sacred that no American citizen dare walk across them without permission?

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that no processions of any character or description can parade the streets of the city of Washington, or of any other municipality of which I know, without permission from the city authorities, designating the route over which they are to pass and the object and purpose of the procession?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, if that be true, it is a shame and a disgrace to this nation that it should be so.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is so everywhere in every city of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not so everywhere in every city of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is true in every well-regulated city.

Mr. ALLEN. It is an absolute shame and disgrace to this nation that peaceable citizens dare not get together and march in the streets unless they get permission from some person in charge of the municipality; and when the Senator from Missouri says it is so in every city of the United States, I say I know that it is not so in every city; that there are large cities in the United States where it is not required to get permission to have a parade of any kind. If that be the law of the city of Washington, and honest and loyal citizens dare not get together upon the streets and march with drums and fifes if they desire to do so, then it is high time for this Government to repeal such a law. There is no right in anyone to enforce a law of that kind unless there be an occasion for its enforcement by a violation of the peace or threatened injury to the people and to property.

Mr. President, it is almost of weekly occurrence—I have seen it myself, and seen it repeatedly—for military companies and parades of different kinds to march across the Capitol grounds, and yet I am told that it is in violation of the law for them to do so, and that even the District Commissioners have no power to permit processions to invade the Capitol grounds. I saw last week, as I have seen almost every week since I have been in this city, military companies and societies of different kinds with banners, with fifes and drums, and with brass bands marching across the Capitol grounds without the slightest molestation or injury. There is not a man in this Capitol building to-day who has not seen the same thing; and yet we are told when Coxey, this mysterious and harmless Mr. Coxey, who is coming down the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal with two or three hundred harmless men, reaches Washington, because he is not domiciled in Washington and of known high character, because he is not honored with a position in this end of the Capitol, or the other perhaps; because his fellow-citizens have never called upon him to represent them in any respect in Washington, that he and his followers are to be met by police officers and a military force and kept off the Capitol grounds. Why? Does he menace this Chamber or the Capitol? Not at all. He is harmless; his mission is harmless; the mission of those who follow him is harmless, and it is lawful, and in one sense laudable and respectable.

The Capitol grounds—the great campus upon which this building is situated—are very sacred, indeed, now, but when railroad lobbyists, tax lobbyists, bank lobbyists, and all the other lobbyists who infest this city and these Capitol grounds, come here everything is thrown open to them from cellar to dome; there is no restriction upon them; but when Mr. Coxey comes marching along with his army of the commonweal to petition Congress for the redress and relief of the masses of his race, he is to be met and not permitted to enter the Capitol grounds, to say nothing of this sacred Senate Chamber.

Another thing, Mr. President, I desire to mention while on my feet. It may be unpleasant for me, surrounded as I am at this time with the galleries full of people, to speak publicly about it, but a sense of duty requires me to do so. American citizens come from a great distance to this capital, many of them for the first and last time in their lives, to visit the White House, the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the other places where the public business of their country is transacted. I have seen these galleries so full of chronic attendants who seem to think they have a proprietary interest in them that it was impossible for this class of tourists and American citizens to get a seat in one of them. The galleries are inhabited from day to day, from week to week, and from month to month by the same class of persons, so that American citizens from Maine to California and from Texas to Massachusetts are crowded out of them when they come here but once in a lifetime to look upon the Senate of the United States, and nothing is done, no effort is made to change this condition of affairs; but when this harmless man Mr. Coxey and his harmless and unarmed followers are coming here to lay their grievances before us we refuse to give them even a few moments' time of a few of the Senators in this Chamber, and are to forbid them entrance even on the Capitol grounds.

Mr. President, have we not time to give ear to them? Look in upon this Chamber if you will two hours from this time when the tariff discussion is going on and probably there will not be six members of the body present to hear the speech which is being delivered; for hours it will go on in that way until 5 o'clock, and probably there are fifty or sixty Senators who could give these men from two to three hours to present their cause without any detriment whatever to their private affairs or to the public business of the nation. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is 1 o'clock, and I desire to be heard before the vote is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to offer a resolution, at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]? The resolution is simply to be read and referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, there is objection. I understood the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to say that he would not consent to the reception of any morning business during the time to be devoted to the consideration of the tariff bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope my friend from Missouri will not get into a frenzy about the little proposition I made. I did it very innocently, I can assure him. I do not want to violate any rule. It is simply a resolution which I was requested by the Senator from Alabama to submit for reference.

Mr. HARRIS. I bear testimony to the perfect innocence of the Senator from South Carolina; and take occasion once again to give notice that from the time the tariff bill is laid before the Senate until 5 o'clock I shall object to every interference with its consideration, I care not how small.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Tennessee for the emphasis with which he has made that assertion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who is entitled to the floor upon the pending bill, is detained from the Chamber this morning by illness. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is ready to go on, and I ask that he may be permitted to do so, the Senator from Pennsylvania retaining his right to the floor whenever he shall return.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, one of the most difficult problems of national legislation is to enact laws that shall be in harmony with the intelligent thought of the people from all portions of this vast Republic; from the northern line to the Gulf of Mexico; from the extreme west to the eastern boundary. A diversity of interests must ever characterize a country so vast in extent as ours, and this fact should imbue us with charity for the opinions of those who differ with us. We are each of us, to a greater or less extent, influenced by our environments and local interests. But aside from all these differences growing out of divergent localities, there is one point upon which all intelligent and patriotic Americans at least should be able to agree, and that is upon the necessity for an American policy upon all questions of citizenship, of taxation, and, as far as possible, of finance.

We should have no other political creed but love for our common country and her institutions. The stability of nations, of empires, of dynasties, is grounded in the selfishness of their adherents and supporters. So true is this, and so generally acknowledged, that it has become almost axiomatic that nations are strong in proportion as they are selfish. Under the present order of things the question that conserves the highest degree of welfare for us should be paramount in our affections, even though other nations would gladly have it otherwise. Protection of our homes, of our industries, and the elevation and dignity of labor should be the principal cardinal doctrine of every patriotic American citizen. The question of expense and revenue is a very simple one that comes home to each member of every community, and the same rule that applies to us as individuals must govern us collectively, whether organized into a municipality, a State, or a nation.

Is it not then a plain business proposition, divested of all specious pleading, that we have before us for consideration? It requires in round numbers, say, $500,000,000 per annum to properly carry on this Government. That is, we must provide that much money for the expenses of the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government. The support of the Army and Navy, diplomatic service, coast fortifications, river and harbor improvements, public buildings, light-house and life-saving service, pensions and hospitals, interest on public debt, scientific research, and other purposes, all intended for the benefit, advancement, and honor of this great Republic. This large sum of money must be obtained either by direct or indirect taxation. It must all come from our own people, and from those that do business with us from other countries, selling us the products that come from their soil or that which is manufactured by the skill or labor of foreign workmen.

Our people pay their taxes for the support of municipal, county, State, and National Government; and, in addition thereto, they must pay a special license for conducting the business in which they are engaged. Why, then, should we permit foreign nations to bring here, without paying for the privilege, their products and wares to compete with our industries, giving them equal if not better advantages than our own people. We have a land extending through many degrees of latitude and longitude that is capable of producing everything known to the vegetable kingdom, while our mines of mineral wealth are diversified and practically inexhaustible. We honor labor as the source of all wealth, and it is the labor of American manhood that has developed the resources of the country and is to-day its power and safety.

It has been the policy and plan, for the past thirty years, of wise American statesmanship to raise about one-half of the expense of the Government by placing an import duty upon the products of other lands that come into this country for consumption or use of our people, and to so adjust these duties that they will best protect and foster American industries, and thereby dignify and protect American labor against the cheap, servile, and contract labor of foreign lands. That this is the correct principle is evidenced from the fact that during this time our industrial interests have been stimulated and our people prosperous, contented, and happy.

The bill before us for consideration, designated a tariff for revenue, proposes to take from the import duties $75,000,000, which is simply a license the producer pays for the privilege of entering into our home market with his merchandise on equal terms with one to the manor born, and imposes this additional burden upon our own people in the form of increased excise duty and an income tax upon the gain or profit made by their diligence, industry, and enterprise. When we consider this contemplated change, and remember the deep interest taken by England and other European powers in our late Presidential election, with what force does the prophetic words of Thomas Jefferson come home to us when he said:

> The election of a President of America some years hence will be much more interesting to certain nations of Europe than ever the election of a King of Poland was.

When in periods of great financial crisis, due to or affected by the action of government, it becomes the duty of all officers of the government to inquire into any and all causes for the disturbance of the business affairs, to promote the prosperity of our people, to add to their comfort and strengthen their power, and to do all these things unbiased by personal or local interests and untrammeled by party affiliations.

After these investigations it becomes our duty to set forth the causes leading to our conclusions and state the remedies, if found. Actuated by an earnest desire for the general welfare of our entire country, and regarding the question of national finance as a purely business question, I hope to discuss it as a business man from a broad business basis.

The fact is conceded that a general depression in business prevails over our entire country, enterprise stagnant, labor unemployed, the revenues of Government lagging behind the expenditures, the debt increasing and national bankruptcy impending. This in a time of peace with the world, in a time of general health and a period of unusual agricultural and mineral productiveness, presents a condition that may well be denominated a crisis. This condition in the United States is attributed to changes and threatened changes of our revenue laws and the violent partisan agitation thereof.

There are many theories of methods for the acquisition of means for the support of government: as a single tax upon land; the issuing of mortgage bonds on land; a direct tax, consequent upon free foreign trade; internal revenue, or tax upon home products, manufactures, business transactions, inheritances, incomes, and prosperity; governmental ownership of railroads, canals, and inland water ways; in the transmission of telegraphic and telephonic messages; in the business of banking and exchanges connected with its postal system; and by levying a uniform duty on imports without any variation or discrimination whatever; our plan, the Republican plan, of levying duties with discriminations designed to protect American industries and products, to foster American manufacture, to develop American resources, to lighten the burdens of taxation of the busy and industrious classes; to exact as far as possible a toll from the foreign producer or manufacturer upon the goods and wares imported in competition with like goods and wares of home production or manufacture.

Such are some of the different methods proposed by theorists and parties in our country. Other countries have other methods of land rentals, mining royalties, business monopolies, and many devices for the acquisition of revenue. As business men we should discuss and enlighten ourselves on all the methods devised by theorists or statesmen, and, after thorough and impartial examination, adopt that which is most equitable and practicable, accomplishing the purpose in view of giving revenue and fostering our general welfare. While the many theories have their advocates, with books written, conventions held, and parties formed in their interests, there has but one been presented for our discussion at the present time, and this presents but a system of schedules for dispute.

We have been accustomed to hear much about a tariff for revenue without discrimination as the only constitutional tariff, and a tariff for revenue with discrimination, and upon these distinctions the American people divided into parties in the early part of this century. These were the tariffs for revenue and the tariff for protection. The first was the theories upon which was based the Democratic party and the latter the basis of the Whig party, and maintained by the Republican party. Upon these many battles of the hustings and the forum have been fought, and over the failure of one and the triumph of the other has the country been agitated, its business depressed or promoted. These propositions were well defined in the platform of the two, yes, three or four, political parties in the last general campaign, and these were expected to be discussed in this Congress. But we have wandered far away from our course.

The Democratic party has fallen from its high estate, abandoned its principles utterly, and instead of making open and bold war upon its ancient doctrines and adopted platform, enters beneath the Republican platform, attacks the Republican tariff measure which it declared unconstitutional and a robbery, and tearing it down attempts to build on the same principles a weaker structure from the same materials. We are thus brought to this strange contest, with no great fundamental principle to investigate, but to contrast as a measure of polity the legitimate with the illegitimate, the complete with the incomplete, the strong and carefully completed structure with that made of the madly gathered and weakened fragments.

The questions we have before us are denominated the Wilson bill and the McKinley bill, or rather the amendments to and reconstruction of the latter. The McKinley tariff was a growth of thirty years' experience, modified after many years of careful study, and with some amendments, would be perfected in its general scope so that it would provide sufficient revenue with the least possible burdens, thereby giving the best encouragement to commerce and the greatest possible protection to home people and to home industries. With this evolution by years of the protection tariff system under the guidance of men of great business discernment, pure patriotism, extending its beneficence over every section, State, country, hamlet, and farm of the Union, holding firm that which is our own, by ourselves, and for ourselves, enhancing our prosperity and strengthening our strength, we ask that it be maintained as a whole and that which is experimental, protective in principle, yet confessedly ineffective in its protection, claiming to seek revenue, yet admitted to fall far short of obtaining requisite revenue be quickly and utterly rejected.

In discussing the question of tariff or protection, of mutual assistance, national development, and national revenue, it may appear selfish to advocate the special interest or interests of a single State, but of California interests I will speak, as they affect the whole. One knowing California can not speak of her without enthusiasm; vast in area, grand in scenery, genial in climate; almost every mineral known to man, often beneath a soil of great fertility or in mountain rocks or desert plains; a State of such varied and unlimited natural resources that she could be inclosed in a Chinese wall of impenetrability and possess within herself all the necessities and luxuries of life, all the raw materials used in manufactures, the facilities of manufacture, the means of defense, the money of commerce, and all that goes to make a rich and powerful people. But California is an integral part of this fraternal Union, the western buttress of this mighty Government, sharing in all the hopes, glories, burdens, and responsibilities of her sister States. So illimitable are her resources that she can claim preëminence in agriculture, horticulture, viticulture, and minerals. Of the latter, only the most experienced of scientists can rehearse the catalogue.

California is vast in area and illimitable in resources, and over all is the most genial and salubrious climate known in civilized lands. With an area of 158,360 square miles, equal to 101,350,400 acres, she has but 1,208,130 inhabitants, as shown by the last census. Excluding deserts and lofty mountain ridges, there is remaining an area larger than all Great Britain and Ireland, which, acre for acre, possesses resources equal if not superior, and can maintain as dense a population in much greater comfort and attain a greater wealth. This vast area we want developed. You want it developed. You want its products and we want your products. We want many millions of people where we now have so few. We want, however, American citizens in the true and patriotic interpretation of the name!

Besides the minerals, California in 1892 produced 39,157,000 bushels of wheat, 13,000,000 bushels of barley, 6,000,000 bushels of corn, 33,000,000 pounds of wool, 2,000,000 gallons of brandy, 20,000,000 gallons of wine, 22,000,000 pounds of beet sugar, and 35,142,969 pounds in 1893, the entire beet-sugar product of the United States being 44,953,264 pounds.

California exported, chiefly to the East, in 1892, 112,719,200 pounds of fresh deciduous fruit, 69,715,000 pounds of citrus fruit, 59,432,661 pounds of dried fruit, 53,336,960 pounds of raisins, 110,574,420 pounds of canned fruit, and 4,126,605 pounds of almonds and walnuts. The development of these industries which have afforded these exports has been aided by protection, which should be enlarged rather than diminished. As the production of the semitropic fruits in our country has increased the price has declined and the consumption kept pace with the production. The fact is also established that our oranges, lemons, figs, raisins, currants, olives and olive oil, almonds, and walnuts are equal in quality to the best and superior in general to the like products imported.

But California contends at a disadvantage with the old and populous country of the Mediterranean, of cheap labor, low rates of interest, and cheap transportation. Over mountains and deserts the California products must be carried, but notwithstanding these hardships the East is supplied with fruit of better quality and lower rates than formerly, when the foreign market had the monopoly. Yet with this great product not one-fifth of the people of the United States enjoy the luxury of semitropic fruits and nuts. We ask that the prevailing duties on these be not disturbed, and that the bill under consideration be so amended that these industries may continue to develop and increase.

The home production of semitropic fruits appears to have largely increased their consumption. Formerly rare and costly luxuries, they are coming into more common use, and we may look forward to the time when they will become common but cheap luxuries to all classes of people. That this is a desideratum devoutly to be wished no one will deny, and it may be accomplished under just protection. The value of olive oil imported in 1881 was $480,683 for 384,412 gallons, and in 1891, under an increased duty, was $876,613 for 733,489 gallons.

In the meantime the production in California has largely increased, and is now marching on to a business of great magnitude, olive orchards being planted in every section of the State. Pickled olives were imported in 1891 to the value of $320,163. This commodity is proposed to be placed on the free list. California given protection will supply the demand with a better article, and in time at less rates. The importation of dried prunes has averaged 60,000,000 pounds annually during the past seven years. California produced in 1880, 2,000,000 pounds, and in 1892, 25,000,000 pounds, the consumption steadily increasing as the good quality of the California product becomes known, at the same time lessening the price of the consumer.

There was imported into the United States in 1892, 23,250,809 pounds of raisins, and California in the same year sent to the Eastern markets 53,336,960 pounds. This fruit is still classed among the luxuries, used only by the more wealthy, but under the stimulus of home production is advancing to common use and becoming a necessity in the household. But not one-tenth of the amount is consumed that will be under the full development of American production. Let the encouragement of American production continue, and all the various sections of our country, the Atlantic coast, the great Valley of the Mississippi, the mining region of the Rocky Mountains, and the high plateaus will all be supplied abundantly with a better article and at cheaper rates than have ever before been known. American production of raisins, as of other delicate fruits, means prosperity to large American communities and adding an increased ratio to the aggregate American wealth, in this, that it saves to the people for circulation and mutual assistance what would otherwise go abroad not to return in any form, and that it gives to capital investments for its money, to bankers activity in their exchanges, employment to labor, freight for transportation, markets for manufactures and farm products, building up cities, communities, and States.

Bold and enterprising men have engaged in these productions, investing large sums of money and the toil of years until now tens of thousands of people and millions of dollars are represented. A vast amount of wealth has been added to the country, and comfort and luxuries given the people. To establish this and to advance it protection was necessary, and no free trader nor pessimist can show that it has worked any hardship in America. In fact, in this case, protection has proven an unexceptional blessing. The duty upon the importation of raisins and other semitropical fruits should be retained as established in the tariff of 1890. This also affords the opportunity to increase the revenue where the foreigner will pay for the privilege of competing in the market. The high prices we have paid for these delicacies have enriched the landowners of the Mediterranean countries at the cost of ours stores of the precious metals.

These may be called some of the specialties of California and the list be greatly enlarged. Of these specialties, citrus fruits, figs, raisins, and nuts, we imported in 1891 to the value of $15,062,208, and in 1892 to the value of $11,237,285. This was so much money sent abroad that could have aided in passing over the period of hard times if it had been retained at home in exchange for home products of the same class. The encouragement of the cultivation of these fruits opens another source of business for our people. This is in the preservation of fruits for exportation. This also implies the encouragement of sugar production.

Statistics show that Great Britain consumes annually per capita 70½ pounds of sugar, while but 55 pounds are used in the United States. It is also known that the table consumption in the United States greatly exceeds per capita that in Great Britain. The excess in the latter country is used in the preservation of fruit and the making of the various commodities, as jams, jellies, and other articles of which fruit is the basis.

This indicates the enormous business now existing in England in this line, and what a great industry may be developed in our own country by the encouragement of the culture of fruit and sugar.

Of gold California has given $1,300,000,000 to the world, revolutionizing commerce and constituting the chief factor in creating the golden era in which we live. California now produces $12,250,000 of the precious metals annually, of which over $11,000,000 is gold, the entire gold product of the Union being $33,000,000. But large as is California's output of gold there are many other minerals of great importance to the country that are affected by the tariff. I will name a few of the industries affected.

Of these one is borax. The history of this mineral, its ancient rarity and value, the discovery of it in California and Nevada in peculiar forms, the heroic development of its production, the cheapening of its price, and the beneficence it has proven to the world constitute one of the most interesting chapters in mineralogy. The mineralogists of California, incited by the discoveries of gold in great abundance, turned their attention to other useful minerals, the search for borax being one, and from traces observed in the analysis of water followed the clue until the object sought was found.

At the date of this discovery the common price of borax was 50 cents a pound, and its uses were limited. Tuscany, in Italy, was then the chief source of supply. Following this discovery borax was found in different forms in the deserts of Nevada and Eastern California. Following these, borax, in similar formations, was found in Asiatic Turkey and in other countries. But the Americans had led the way. In the search and exploitation of the borax fields our miners of the West have penetrated the most inhospitable deserts of the world, and through years of toil, hardships, and danger have shown an enterprise and courage worthy of the highest reward.

They have not made the desert to blossom as the rose, but they have redeemed its character to such an extent that they have paid the Government many thousands of dollars for the land, extracted from it many millions of dollars of value, cheapened a product to domestic, artisan, and scientific uses, made possible and developed new and important industries. In this they have made the barren deserts great and valuable factors in the progress, comfort, and commercial affairs of the world. Of these desert fields where borax is found the most famous is the historic Death Valley in Eastern California, a valley deep below the level of the sea although surrounded by the high plateau of the Great Basin and within view of the highest land in the United States.

The region belongs to and is characteristic of the eastern base of the Sierra Nevada mountains, a region of unique formation, abounding in useful minerals usually denominated salts, as well as silver, lead, and other metals. It is a region of excessive heat in summer, and in winter is reached only through the deep snows of surrounding mountains. Of the horrors of this inhospitable region it is unnecessary to tell, but brave men have penetrated it hundreds of miles from railroads, have developed stores of wealth, have established outposts of civilization, opening markets for agricultural and manufactured products, and, if these mining industries are not destroyed by un-American and hostile legislation there will be opened lines of railroad through the country, and another desert region will be eliminated from the map.

Destroy this industry, as the Wilson bill proposes, and these bright hopes of the future are obliterated, the business of invested capital bankrupted, thousands of men deprived of labor, country revenues cut off, and the people of the United States made to pay the foreign manufacturer and importer an exorbitant increase over the present price for an article now in common use. That this prediction of increased price has a basis we have but to look to the past. The English obtained control of the Turkish borax mines. While England never rejects ripened fruit ready to fall into her lap, she does not always wait for it to fall, but shakes the tree, and then if it will not fall reaches for it and pulls it down. So England got the concession of the Turkish and other borax mines, and having free entrance to the American market, proceeded to undersell and close out the American borax miner. When this was so nearly accomplished that English manufacturers had control of the market the price was put up to 15 cents per pound. Then came the tariff of 1882, and the year following the price fell to 10 cents per pound, the fall in price being the full amount of the duty, and the American business revived. This is an example of the benefit of a protective tariff to our people and the producer.

Gen. Rosecrans, a distinguished and learned gentleman and a Democrat, in presenting this question to Congress in 1883, recommended duties on pure boracic acid, 10 cents per pound; on commercial boracic acid, 8 cents per pound, and on other forms of borax, 5 cents per pound. The bill now under consideration places borax on the free list, and to this treatment of a great industry I earnestly and decidedly object and protest. The world's production of borax is about 24,000 tons annually, the United States producing 7,000 tons; Italy, 3,000 tons; Turkey, 9,000 tons; Thibet, 2,000 tons; Chile, Bolivia, and Peru, 3,000 tons.

This product has increased from a few thousand tons since the discovery in California and Nevada until the present time, when about 9,000 tons of borax is used annually in the United States. The uses to which it is put are various. One of the oldest was by the blacksmith in welding iron, and as a medicine and emollient sold by the druggists. but since it is so largely produced its uses have multiplied a hundredfold.

Now it is important in calico printing and dyeing, in painting, blacking, washing, enameling of porcelain, glazing in potteries, flux in smelting, an antiseptic and preserver of flesh, a substitute for soap, a disinfectant, and many other purposes, entering the ordinary household as a necessity. The working of the desert borax fields involves the labor of several hundred hardy men, with great teams of twelve to twenty animals each, maintaining stations, supplying refining works, giving transportation to railroads and consuming a large amount of the products of the farm, manufactories, and mechanical shops of the country. The enemies of protected industries lay much stress upon opening markets in foreign countries for American products. I would ask if by purchasing the Turkish, Thibetan, and Bolivian borax the miners of those countries would consume as much of American products, patronize American blacksmiths, American wagonmakers, or American railroads as do the American borax miners.

Among other minerals found abundant in California are chromium, antimony, quicksilver, manganese, sulphur, salt, niter, soda, potash, gypsum, onyx, alabaster, lime, marble, and others, and all varieties of these which enter largely in the arts, manufactures and domestic uses, and are commodities of great commercial importance. All these are proper subjects for tariff for revenue, and such tariff would afford incidental protection and therefore assist in the development of American resources and American industries. Chromium, chromic iron, or, as commonly called, chrome, is used in making coloring matter for silks, cotton, woolens, wall paper, carpets, tanning leather, and other purposes, and its uses are increasing. This mineral exists in all the mountain ranges of the Pacific coast from Puget Sound to the Mexican line, and was formerly mined with fair profit, some 4,000 or 5,000 tons being shipped annually to the Atlantic coast, but since the removal of import duties the business has nearly ceased. A duty of 25 per cent would both aid the revenue and revive the industry on the Pacific coast. Now chrome is imported from Australia, Scotland, and Turkey in exchange for gold. Develop this resource and stop another leak for our gold.

Antimony is used largely in a great variety of manufactures, and of this mineral we have sufficient for all our needs. All that can be said regarding chromium is applicable to antimony. With a duty upon its importation, attention would be given to the abundant stores of it in our own country, and soon the metal would be cheapened.

Of quicksilver California has already produced $30,000,000, and large capital is invested in its mining and reduction. While there is still an abundance in the many mines of California the exceedingly rich deposits have been exhausted, and the industry may be entirely destroyed if the product of the foreign mines is permitted to enter into competition free of duty. All the foreign mines of quicksilver are or have been owned or controlled by the Rothschilds, and it would not be wise American policy to transfer so important a mining industry to that wealthy and monopolizing house. The foreign producers will sell their quicksilver for gold or for bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold, and for nothing else.

Of the extent of the quicksilver deposits in California, or of the capital invested in mines and reduction works, there is no question nor speculation; nevertheless all this property and this vast resource and plant for home labor, home production, and home consumption of farm products and domestic manufactures may be destroyed by the unfettered competition of foreign capital based on foreign low rates of interest and cheap labor. Heretofore quicksilver has had a protection of 10 cents per pound duty, but now it is proposed to admit it free. Such a policy can not be defended. No one can show a manufacture hampered or an industry of any class burdened by the high price of quicksilver under the present conditions, nor can any one promise that quicksilver will be cheaper when the American mines are closed by foreign competition. There would be no industries or manufactures retarded were the price of this mineral double what it now is. The gold and silver mines of the West have been the chief consumers of this valuable useful liquid metal, but an unfortunate policy has so borne upon these that quicksilver mining has received an almost fatal blow.

I hope that Congress will not give it the finishing stroke. This is an industry of but a single and distant State, for quicksilver is found in no other part of our country, excepting California, in sufficient quantities to pay for working. The Senators from New York or Alabama may not now realize that its life or death affects them. A manufacturer of New York may, temporarily, obtain quicksilver at a slightly reduced rate, but no consumer will ever see the reduction. The gain to the importer is infinitesimal at best, but the loss to California is serious. California is but a unit of the Republic, but of units the whole is made. The prosperity of the whole is in consequence of the prosperity of singles, and the infliction of injury upon one has a widespread and baleful influence upon all. Quicksilver is peculiar in many things, and particularly for the fact that it is produced in only four parts of the world. Its sources of production are Spain, Austria, Italy, and California.

The Almedan mine in Spain was discovered over two thousand years ago; the Idria in Austria, four hundred years ago, while the mines in Italy were discovered over a hundred years ago. The latter, however, play no very important part in the industry, as they produce but a small quantity comparatively. The cinnabar or sulphide of mercury, from which quicksilver is produced, was discovered in California in 1850. The discovery of gold there only a short time previous hastened the development of the industry. The price of quicksilver then was $1.50 per pound. To-day it is less than one-third of that amount. Had it not been for the quicksilver industry in California there would have been no competition in prices and hardly any conjecture can be made as to what the ruling price would be, for, as I have stated, the quicksilver of the world outside of that of California is controlled by one corporation or firm. In 1878 there were thirty quicksilver mines in the State of California, while to-day there are not ten—prices have steadily declined; the mines could not be worked to any degree of profit. The United States is one of the largest consumers of the metal.

The production of quicksilver is already hampered with many difficulties, but this proposed action to place it on the free list consummates them all. The cost of production is nearly three times as large as that of the mines of Spain and Austria, for the reason that there is a better grade and a higher paid class of labor necessary. The price obtained to-day is barely sufficient to keep the mines running, and striking off the protection of 10 cents per pound simply gives the foreign producer the absolute market and the control of the price. It benefits the great financial house of the Rothschilds, but it throws out of employment and leaves idle our American workmen. It is a strange policy for us to adopt, to close down our own mines to oblige those who control the only other three sources of production, and they in Europe. It seems to me that it can not be defended and that it is as uncalled for as it is unjust.

The American consumer of quicksilver has not been injured and will not be by the existing law. The protective tariff has helped to keep the quicksilver mines of California running, and they, and they alone, have reduced and kept down the price to the consumer. A gentleman who is connected with the quicksilver production in California says of the case as follows:

> The amount produced in this country is equal to its need at present. But little has been imported for a long series of years since the imposition of the duty, and during this past year none at all.
> I beg to call your attention to the fact that were the mines of California to be closed down, as they must inevitably be unless some protection is afforded, that the whole power of making the price would lie with the Spanish and Austrian Governments, as represented by their agents, the Rothschilds, and we should be at their mercy. When this duty has been so slow as to cause a shut-down of the American mines, this has been the case heretofore. We are now protected by a duty of 10 cents per pound. This is little enough, and we ask in consideration of the capital involved, and the labor of 5,000 men employed at good wages, that it be kept at the present rate.

Let us for a moment consider the question of sugar; its importation; costs to our people; as a means of revenue, and the effects of its production at home. Let us look upon it from the Democratic standpoint of free trade and from the Republican standpoint of an assisted industry either by protection or bounty. The McKinley bill removed the tariff duty from raw sugar, but to foster its production as a domestic industry enacted that a bounty equivalent to the former protection be paid for a limited period to the home manufacturer. The bill as it came to the Senate takes no notice of sugar as a means of revenue, nor offered protection or assistance. Originally it proposed a sliding scale of bounty, but that was stricken out. Common justice demands that a contract made by the Government with her citizens should be observed in perfect good faith, therefore the policy of the bounty should prevail until such time as that named in the act or the American sugar industry fully commands the market.

The American people now pay annually to foreign countries an excess of $100,000,000 for sugar produced by servile and coolie labor or in countries where the production is assisted by government. The consumption in the United States is about 2,000,000 tons per annum, nearly all imported, on which was formerly paid between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 revenue to the Government in addition to the amount paid the foreign producer, the shipper, the importer, and the trusts, who held the consumer at their mercy, a total cost of unrefined sugar to the people of over $230,000,000, taking the average rate of sales at commercial centers.

For the product of sugar in the last year in this country there was paid on the bounty fund over $9,000,000, the exact figures being $9,375,130.88. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] yesterday in discussing this question stated that $15,000,000 had been paid. I find, however, that his figures are not in accord with those of the Secretary of the Treasury, as he reports but $9,000,000. The question before us is, which is of more benefit to the people, the fostering of this industry or its destruction?

There can be no question that sugar by importation affords a most simple and feasible means of raising a large revenue. So do tea and coffee. So a great revenue could have been obtained from the sale of the public lands, the ownership of the salt and other mines, as do some countries, and as was formerly advocated in this. But with the progress of enlightenment, better democracy and greater liberality has obtained. Our mines are owned and worked by the people and their prosperity has resulted; our public lands have become the homes of independent farmers and populous and prosperous States have grown up. The tax upon tea and coffee was removed to lighten the burdens of the poor classes, and all rejoiced in the beneficent act.

Then came another step forward in the same direction and the tax was taken from sugar and all those classes of people who feel the burdens of the purchases of the comforts and necessaries of life felt the relief and were made glad. In all these times and with all the apparent sacrifices of the Government, all wrung from it with terrible opposition, the revenues were maintained, the country prospered in accelerated ratio, and the people were benefited. Here we might contrast the simple or barbarous methods of levying duties with the discriminating or enlightened. Tea and coffee, the luxuries of the industrial classes, competed with nothing produced at home and were beneficently exempted from taxation.

Sugar, entering into a vast number of comestibles and commodities, and as much of a necessity to the poorer classes as tea and coffee, is an importation in competition with a domestic product in a small way, but may be entirely produced at home. To cheapen it to all classes, to aid in the preservation of our fruits, and to assist manufactures, the tax was removed. But one of our great States was largely devoted to its production and to leave it to the unbridled competition of the foreign product of cheap labor would have been a cruelty, a neglect most abhorrent to a fair and generous people, a shame to the Union of States. To leave it thus meant a destruction of its great industry, its relegation to bankruptcy. The Republican party has no such heart; the business welfare of our common country does not require it. A bounty was substituted for the duty which had been the protection.

But I need not defend Louisiana. She has able statesmen to take care of her interests. The interest is growing up in California to which I will soon refer. The payment of the bounty has become a question of controversy and opposition throughout the United States and by people of all parties and classes. The bounty on sugar is not the only one that has been granted by the Government nor denounced by the people. Have these resulted beneficially? Before the Republican party came into existence bounties were paid for public improvements. The great national pike of the time of Jackson was a national work for the benefit of a limited section of the States through which it passed, and no one ever begrudged the bounty by which it was constructed. The granting of public lands to aid in the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Michigan and Illinois Canal were bounties given by Democratic statesmen. All improvements to rivers and harbors are but bounties to localities, perhaps large or small, aggregating for the general good and national glory.

But they are made where localities were unable to protect themselves or make the improvements necessary for progress. The Western pioneers demanded that bounties in land and money be given for the construction of railroads threading the wilderness and reaching the Pacific. They were granted, and if in some respects without wise restrictions, certainly for the general good, and resulting in the creation of great States and developing untold wealth where otherwise were desert wastes traversable only by severest toil, dire suffering, and constant warfare, occupied by wild animals and savage tribes. Will anyone at this day controvert the beneficence of the bounties which have resulted so grandly in the cause of civilization and our country's development? I am reminded by seeing my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that when he and I were boys the Government paid a bounty to those who engaged in cod fishing and went out and remained so many weeks or months fishing. That was done, too, under a Democratic administration.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from California might go one word further and say that the fishermen who received the bounty afterwards paid it all back by helping us to beat Great Britain in 1812.

Mr. PERKINS. It therefore proved a most excellent investment. It was seed cast upon the water that returned ten, aye a hundred fold, to benefit the people as a whole who had given this small bounty.

But more particularly will I refer to the development of the sugar industry in my own State. Under tariff protection and with the McKinley bounty, mills for the manufacture of sugar from beets have been established with the prospect of eminent success. There are now three beet-sugar mills of large capacity in California. There is soil and room for a hundred more. It would require a thousand such as the largest in existence to supply the present consumption in the United States, and with the increased consumption the increased population, wealth, and varied uses will give, not many years will pass before double the number will be required.

The consumption in 1860 was at the rate of 56 pounds per capita. In England the consumption was at the rate of 67 pounds per capita; in other countries less. As it becomes cheaper, as our people advance in prosperity and as our fruit interests develop the consumption will increase in a greater ratio. The product of the world exceeds 5,000,000 tons per annum. About 60 per cent of the whole is made from beets. This sugar is, chemically, the same as cane sugar, and no one from its appearance or use can distinguish a difference. The product of sugar from beets per acre in America is estimated at from 1½ to 2 tons, demanding 2,000,000 acres of favored land to supply the present home demand.

The farmer and the community surrounding the sugar mill, the men who perform the labor, those who furnish the supplies to the mill, and those who supply the operatives, the transportation people, and all far-reaching are benefited. A mill disburses from $150,000 to $500,000 annually in the community where it is located. This builds up many happy and comfortable homes. Every mill means a prosperous village with its families, churches, schools, shops, manufactures, and well-paid labor with money that would otherwise go to some foreign country, leaving the land unoccupied or engaged in the production of something of which we have already an oversupply. The mill, representing a half million investment, is but a small part of the value it has created in its surroundings. Multiply this by a thousand, the number of mills and communities necessary to supply the United States, and we have an inconceivable valuation as the result of the judicious encouragement of this industry.

In the discussion of this bill some opponents of protection have asserted that our country profits most when its imports exceed the value of its exports. I would ask if anyone can contend that if we send abroad $100,000,000 for sugar we profit more than if the same were disbursed in Louisiana, California, Texas, Utah, Nebraska, and other States where sugar is or may be manufactured? To say that it would be more profitable is a palpable absurdity. One throws away, the other retains. To buy when we can produce is waste and ultimate exhaustion. A little bounty insures this production, a bounty which at present and for some years is but a few cents per capita of the people of the United States, wherein a duty as before the McKinley bill was enacted would be 88 cents per capita. But the 88 cents paid by each man, woman, and child is not all the exactions upon the people from a commodity like sugar imported. Trusts and combinations of monopoly are now formed which would be impossible if the people throughout the United States were engaged in the manufacture.

By free importation and the bounty repealed the sugar industry is destroyed. To destroy an industry that now bids so fair would be a national calamity, a crime against our people, a degradation of statesmanship.

I appeal to the Senate not to let this be done. This important industry has been built up in other countries by the wise statesmen in granting aid. The great Napoleon saw the necessity of the home production of sugar when the harbors of France were blockaded by English fleets and his merchantmen harassed by English cruisers, and he it was who inaugurated the production of beet sugar. Perhaps our strength will forbid a blockade, but with a war against a strong foreign power we would feel much more at ease if we made our own sugar. European travelers observe our neglect of the beet-sugar opportunity with astonishment. Prof. Anton Veith, director of the Agricultural College of Bohemia, publishing his observations of a tour in the United States some years ago, says:

> The establishing of such an industry as the fabrication of sugar from beets exerts such a great influence upon a country that it deserves all the support of a great government.

During the past summer the German Government sent a number of experts to this country with the special object of examining American agriculture, and particularly the beet-sugar industry. Prof. Alexander Herzfeldt, one of these commissioners, said:

> If the United States shall continue to protect the sugar industry so that the development that now seems assured by protection may not be disturbed, the American market will be lost to Germany and France.—New York Tribune.

This bill proposes with no former notification whatever, to absolutely repeal the bounty clause of existing law. The law of 1890, the McKinley act, promised and agreed that "On and after July 1, 1891, and until July 1, 1905" there should be paid to our domestic producers of sugar from 1½ to 2 cents per pound, depending on its quality.

I do not like the idea of repudiation in any form, and I can never consent by my vote, and without my protest, that this Government shall ever be a party to it. It is a repudiation of the contract pure and simple to pass this bill as it stands. Sugar sells to-day so cheap that no one can afford to adulterate it, for the adulteration will cost more than pure sugar. Consumers pay for it from 5 to 5½ cents, which is 2½ cents per pound cheaper than the price which prevailed before the bounty law was passed. It is clear to me that the repeal of this bounty, unless something is given in return, will not only kill our home industry, but will hand over the market to foreign sugar rivals.

The beet sugar manufacturers are held to-day for contracts made with farmers of beets, extending over this and next year, and this repeal will force them into bankruptcy by the heavy losses on their contracts. The McKinley act, especially that portion relating to the sugar bounty, was no ordinary tariff bill, subject to change from year to year, but an absolute, declared contract for a certain number of years, for fourteen years. Citizens of California had confidence in the promise, the contract of the Government, and invested millions in the beet industry and the establishment of mills to manufacture the sugar. It is as clear as the noonday sun that there is an inevitable loss if this bounty is repealed and nothing of an equivalent offered in its place.

Of sulphur and salt, Alameda County, my home, alone producing over 45,000 tons of salt per year, and ferro-manganese and many other minerals and their manufactures either on or to be put on the free list these arguments would be repeated. All these useful minerals abound in and make up the wealth of California and the great plateau of the West—a region of unbounded mineral resources, a region in the heart of our country supplying that which is demanded in the commerce and manufactures of all countries from the lowest barbarism to the highest civilization, which gives wealth to the producer, employment through countless industries, strength to the Government, and in turn affords a market to manufactures and products of every grade.

By a strange fatality of most unfortunate experimental financiering, of which our country was not the originator nor wholly responsible, this great and important region has been made to suffer the loss of one of its principal resources, and now it may ask that other resources may be protected, that all may not be destroyed. While frequently referring to the products of my own State as subjects worthy of protection and feasible for purposes of revenue, I do not propose to make of the tariff an entirely local question; though good Democratic authority has asserted and maintained it was and is. But the products of California are so varied and so important to the commerce, the manufactures, and the comfort of the other States of the Union that all are worthy of special mention and the care of the Government.

That the claim that by a skillful levying of duties the foreign producer or manufacturer is made to pay a part of our revenue is not a fantasy, a dream, or a delusion, it is but necessary to refer to the case presented by the Bermuda farmers, now become so well known in the Ways and Means investigation. Another brought to my attention, of a manufacturer in New York of dyestuffs, of which he exported large quantities to Germany. That country, seeing another opportunity for revenue and protection, imposed a specific duty upon the goods. Every particle of this duty was, and is to this day, paid by the New York manufacturer, as he could not add it to the price of his dyestuffs in the German market. This fact, however, is so evident in the business affairs of our own country that it is unnecessary to argue it to reasoning and observing people. Duties laid thus skillfully have that effect, affording the easiest paid revenue and at the same time protecting home industries, and such is the McKinley tariff bill, which ought, perhaps with some modifications, to remain the law of our land for a long time to come.

The production and manufacture of wool is one of the great industries of California as well as of the United States; California having produced more wool in 1893—26,808,414 pounds—than any other State in the United States, and being the third State in the matter of the number of sheep, having in 1893, 4,124,376 sheep, Ohio being the first with 4,378,725, and Texas second with 4,334,551 sheep. In fact, it is one of the great industries of the world and has through a long series of years in all the enlightened governments by the world been a subject of the most profound consideration of kings, statesmen, and the people. Spain protected its merino sheep by inhibiting their exportation under severe penalties. Australia encourages sheep-raising by grants of vast ranges at nominal rates, as do the South American States and other countries.

The policy of all has been that of protection and encouragement. Only in America has there arisen the strange and factional opposition to the industry. This fierce, unrelenting, and unreasoning opposition is one of the relics of the sectional disputes and interests of a past generation. Cotton against wool; the export of one and the free importation of the manufacture of the other, permeates with baleful influence the politics of the present day. Complaint is made that the farmer is called upon to bear the burdens of taxation with less assistance from Government than any other vocation. This complaint should be heard and the grounds for it removed as far as possible.

Agriculture has been honored through all history, and is the basis of all industries. From the farm comes the sustenance of all, and from the fields come the stalwart sons for the country's defense and for its development. America, with its broad area and fertile soil, depends more than any other country upon its farmers, and every fostering care within the power of government should be extended in their behalf. Theirs is a life of toil, where monopolies are impossible and guilds are of no avail. Their burden of taxation is unavoidable, but theories threaten them with more, to the extinction of their independence. Truly has the poet said:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade—
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

Let our theory be to lighten the burdens where possible and to assist where the opportunity offers. In almost every turn of our legislation the opportunity offers. Let us improve it.

The record of the Republican party may be proudly cited in its legislation for the farmer; in its investigations and publications for the farmer's benefit; in the homestead and liberal land laws; in the establishing of a Department of Agriculture and of experimental stations; in its grants to agricultural colleges and universities; in its aid to lines of transportation; in its systems of internal improvements, and countless other ways.

Let us for a moment consider how we may farther extend that aid. Take the single industry of woolgrowing. The aggregate is made of singles. A tariff on wool is both protective and revenue. In 1892 the value of raw wool imported was $17,697,067.50, on which a revenue was collected of $7,790,085.63, under a tariff of 11, 12, and 15 cents per pound. By the present bill this revenue, so urgently required at the present time, of eight millions of dollars is thrown away or put on the onerous burden of internal revenue, income tax or issue of interest-bearing bonds, and the incidental protection that was given is obliterated.

The Agricultural Report of 1893 shows there are 47,273,553 sheep in the United States, in 47 States and Territories. Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, and South Carolina are the only States having each less than 100,000. Ohio, Texas, and California hold the largest number, each having over 4,000,000. Texas and California are of very large area, so their proportion of sheep to acreage is far below many of the other States and Territories. The production of wool in the United States in 1892 was 294,000,000 pounds, and the amount imported in the year ending June 30, 1893, was 172,435,838 pounds. The production and the importation have increased steadily for a series of years.

The wool production of the world is estimated at 2,456,773,600 pounds annually. The largest producers are Australia, Argentina, United States, and Russia, in the order mentioned. We are thus shown the countries with which we must compete. They are countries of vast areas of cheap grazing lands, against which the farmers of the United States should not be called upon to compete on equal terms, particularly when we require the revenue the incidental protection gives.

But we are told that the tariff imposes a grievous burden on the farmer in his purchases of clothing, and that the tariff has made it possible to force upon the people cloth of a poor quality. While this is known by all intelligent people to be untrue and is easily contradicted we may take some evidence given before the Ways and Means Committee. Mr. Latzko, the Australian commissioner to the World's Fair, testified that—

> The American woolen goods had no superior in any part of the world; there is nothing manufactured from wool that can not be as well made in this country as anywhere else.
> The difference between free raw material in London and protected raw material under the McKinley law for a fine dress suit is just 90 cents.
> The difference in the cost of material for a workingman's suit in this country and Great Britain is just 75 cents. All the other difference in the cost of the suit is the difference in the wages paid to laborers.

The wool industry of this country ranks seventh largest of the agricultural interests, and amounts to $66,000,000 annually. But take the tariff from wool, let that great interest die out, and the cloth for the workingman's suit may cost 75 cents less and the country will have to send $66,000,000 in gold or its equivalent abroad to pay for the wool. You will say this industry will not entirely die out. Probably not. Sheep for mutton will be grown, and then as the wool will be of little value a high price will necessarily be charged for mutton, which will raise it to the class of luxuries, and the poor man who attempts to eat mutton will find his annual expenditures therefor a hundred times greater under free wool than under protected wool.

This I know will be the result in my State, where good mutton is the meat of those exercising economy. We know how anxious are Argentina and Australia that we should admit their wool and pelts free of duty. Then they assert they will drive the American producer from the market in all the products except the fresh meat, and this will come later under the cold-storage system. This plainly shows what we must avoid. To be forewarned is to be forearmed.

We are here to legislate for American good and not for the good of a foreign country, however friendly we may feel for that country. The questions arising in adjusting the tariff are national and for the nation are purely selfish. I can not close this branch of the subject without referring to the petitions which I have received and presented in this body. This special one claims to be signed by over 10,000 woolgrowers of California:

> To the honorable members of the Fifty-third Congress of the United States:
> Whereas, as a result of a general belief that the tariff on woolen goods will be reduced and wool put on the free list, the price of wool is now below the production; and
> Whereas we believe that if wool is put on the free list, and the tariff on woolen goods materially reduced, the price of wool will be still lower; and
> Whereas we can not afford to raise wool in competition with free wool raised in countries like Australia, where the woolgrower rents land from the Government at a less rental than we pay in taxes on our land, and receives Government aid and encouragement; and
> Whereas the lands of these United States are well suited to the raising of sheep, provided we can get a fair price for our wool and mutton; and
> Whereas we believe that it is to the best interests of this country to prevent the slaughter of a large proportion of the sheep of this country, which will be the certain result of a further reduction in the price of wool:
> We, the undersigned, farmers and woolgrowers, irrespective of party, do hereby petition and beg that your honorable body will make no change in the present tariff affecting the wool and woolen schedule now in force.

We are indeed confronted with the strange problem of an overcrowded people—a problem which the fathers of the Republic never dreamed would come so soon. To this may be added the marvelous devices of invention in the direction of labor-saving machinery. Men were never so cheap nor muscle so superfluous in the work of the world as now. The star of empire has moved westward until the tide of population has met the confines of the Pacific. We find unemployed men everywhere. Everywhere enforced idleness and suffering. It was not so in the early history of the Republic. It was not so before the attempt to depreciate the intrinsic value of one-half of our circulating medium. And, indeed, it was not so before the threatened blight of free trade fell upon the country.

Government by the people is only enduring where the best interests of the people are promoted. There can be no class distinctions or favoritisms in the collection or disbursing of revenue, and no system for raising revenue has ever equaled in unobjectionable simplicity that of our present tariff. Its greatest virtue consists in the fact that it is American. When we seek to foster other nations at the expense of our own, or so manage our own affairs as best to favor the industrial interests of other countries looking to a market among us, we are feeding a dry rot that means the ultimate decay of our institutions. It is not pleasant to take this view of the case, but it is the true view nevertheless. We have not yet reached that halcyon time when the consideration of a common humanity is the basis principle of the upbuilding of nations. The millenium is a long way off yet. Our idle mines and factories, our multitudes of hungry and unemployed operatives, our depreciated currency, all voice this fact as never before in the history of this country.

The present Administration assumed the control of the country the 4th of March, 1893. During the seven months following, as shown by Bradstreet, the falling off in the business of the clearing house amounted to the vast sum of nearly $5,000,000,000, and it has kept up at that fearful rate ever since. This stupendous deficit represents the country's value of trade. Twelve billions of dollars less money circulated in the ordinary channels of trade and commerce, in wages, in the manufacture of goods, in the employment of labor. And all this under the proposed free-trade policy, or, as they like to be called, tariff reformers, of the present Administration, in the brief period of twelve months. Indeed, the nation stands appalled before the peril that threatens. Cities swarming with the unemployed, mines and factories closed, an army of unemployed marching from the west and north toward Washington—no such general depression of the ordinary industries of the country finds a parallel in our history.

Carry out the policy of England concerning this country; make it contributory to her greatness regardless of the effect upon our people and industries, and what becomes of the magic attraction of our flag, what will there be left to inspire patriotism, or make this land the hope of the oppressed? Divest this country of its policy of protection and there will be nothing in its citizenship to call forth the admiration of mankind. Its labor must degenerate to a level with that of the Old World's, with which it will be brought in immediate competition. We shall have squandered our birthright to placate other nations by placing our standards of labor on a level with their own. We should blush for the American party (and all parties in this great country ought to be American) that has no higher conception of the nation's needs. This ought to be the richest country in the world; taxes should be the lowest. Labor on a higher standard and better paid, its products bring the greatest satisfaction. All of which it would be and do but for the Anglomania that has turned the heads of a large portion of our people, especially of one of our great political parties.

Every avenue to wealth and fame is open to the humblest boy in this land. Yonder little schoolhouse on the hill is the stepping stone to the highest niche in the temple of fame in this land. It is true American manhood that makes the man in this glorious land. I have traveled all over the world; I have been in every land, on every continent of this great globe; I have been in the frozen north, in the tropics, in the frozen south where the Southern Cross is seen like the Great Bear of the north pole; I have been in the islands of the Pacific, in the islands of the Indian Ocean; but nowhere on God's universe have I ever seen a land like this. I have, as the patriarch of old, approached the temple to pay homage to the Unknown, as I saw the Star Spangled Banner floating over the consul's house in the north of Europe or in Southern Africa felt as Moses did when he stood near the burning bush, that I stood upon sacred ground, and I involuntarily removed my hat from my head and thanked God that I was an American. Let our votes and our actions be in harmony and accord with this true American spirit of patriotism that should animate our hearts.

There is nothing genuine with some so-called Americans in their estimation that does not wear a foreign stamp. They furnish their homes with the products and works of foreign manufacture, they wear foreign-made clothing, eat foreign viands, drink foreign wine, and smoke foreign cigars. This is the class of people that I like to give the full benefit of a tariff intended to protect American industries. Any abridgment of our protective policy is a step in the direction of national decay, and so the intelligent thought of the people declare at the ballot box in the elections in Ohio, Massachusetts, Iowa, New Jersey, and Rhode Island. Year after year, much of the time of Congress is devoted to the assailing on the one hand and defending on the other this last vestige of American policy. But for the last quarter of a century the people have had no fears of the result, as they knew that the party that would be safely trusted in the matter held sway in one or the other branch of the National Legislature.

Take the history of our Government from the first and the policy of England towards us has been strangely varied. When we were weak she was strong and at the same time aggressively protective. This was prior to the adoption of the "free-trade policy of 1846, forced upon the country in response to the demands of the South, because of the predominating influence of the North, the result of free labor" over that portion of the country where chattel slavery prevailed. England did not then feel assured that she could bear the competition of continental nations, and, as is well known to anyone familiar with our history, she manufactured for herself and for her network of colonies reaching around the globe. Into those colonies no other nation could carry anything. There was no scale of duty upon which other nations could enter the colonial ports. What the colonies needed outside of British product could be furnished to them only in British ships. This was, then, her idea of protection—the protection her great Premier Gladstone has declared to be immoral. But it was not protection; it was prohibition, absolute and remorseless. And it was continued even to the day when Mr. Gladstone entered upon his long and splendid career in Parliament.

The dignity of labor should ever be uppermost in the American mind, and the only way for us to dignify it is to bar out from competition the servile and cheap labor of those countries where a man's worth and social standing depend not upon his own merits, but upon some advantageous circumstance ceded to or stolen by some favorite ancestor. A protective tariff should be the last surrender of this Republic to kingcraft. It is the guerdon of our greatness, the bulwark of our manhood. Every attempt to fasten free trade upon this country has been followed by financial depression and disaster. This last attempt brings such hardship to our industrial interests as has never before blighted this fair land. If we are wise we ought to learn something in this school of experience. We should guard with jealous care this last feature that distinguishes us from the effete institutions of the Old World.

The American artisan and laborer have long held a distinguished place in this country. There is none above them; but how long will it be thus, without protection? Compare their surroundings with those of this class in other countries. Squalor and poverty on the one hand—plenty and often luxury on the other. So long as labor is not crowned king, as it is metaphorically with us, in countries depending on us for a market, we can never allow our laboring men the humiliation of competition.

We have by legislation wisely, in my opinion, excluded immigration of the pauper and contract laborer from Europe, and the servile Chinese laborer from Asia, but by the proposed legislation we are to permit the product of the Chinese factories in China, where labor is but 10 cents a day, to come into our country and sell in competition with the products of American workshops that are operated by American workmen. To do this is to shock the sensibilities of every patriotic citizen. Cheap wares are not the only things we need. The farmer needs a market for his product at good prices and he can have such a market only when the mechanic, the miner, the factory hands find ready employment at good wages. Rightly says the Inter-Ocean—

> The Republican tariff made the home of American workmen a home of plenty. He lived and enjoyed the luxuries of the rich in the older lands. The Democratic policy in its very promise, and before its reality could be experienced, has brought distrust and want and suffering. It is that and nothing else. The talk about silver producing the hard times was simply a Democratic blind.

Free trade is only desirable of those things we can not produce or manufacture, and even then the necessities of our revenue may require a moderate tariff which our people will never begrudge. We are contending for one of the basic principles of the Republic without which our bond of union becomes a rope of sand. To the hundreds of thousands unemployed men in the different States of the Union it is that already, with the mere shadow of "free trade" hanging over us.

I am not arguing against the possible necessity for a revision of the tariff, but such a revision can never be intrusted to the Democratic party as now organized. The revision should be made, if at all, by those in sympathy with the protection of American labor and American industries, and then with a view to increasing and not diminishing the revenue. The measure of the necessity for a protective tariff may be wisely gauged by the number of unemployed men in the nation. By the status of manufacturing industries—by the demand for our agricultural products. These are the reasons of our needs for raising of the revenues necessary for the expenses of the Government. The amount required is about $500,000,000 annually. To raise the largest part of this vast sum by any other method than that of a tax on imports would be the sublimest piece of folly ever imposed upon a nation.

Several bills have been introduced looking to the creation of a non-partisan commission for the purpose of thoroughly revising the tariff duties based upon the difference in the cost of American and foreign labor, thereby promoting and encouraging our own domestic industries, and at the same time elevating and advancing the dignity of American labor. In the establishment of two of our greatest industries, namely, the manufacture of Bessemer steel and plate glass, it was accomplished only after repeated failures and the expenditure of vast sums of money, and then only by a most liberal encouragement on the part of the Government, without which success would have been impossible. In all American manufactures the higher wages of American mechanics is the chief factor in, as well as the pride and glory of our institutions. It is our glory that our artisans may live in competence, educate their families and surround themselves with comforts that belong only to the rich in the older countries.

It may not be amiss in this connection to present some of the opinions of the fathers on this momentous subject. When the Colonies obtained their political independence they naturally wished to establish their industrial independence also. That great Scotchman, Alexander Hamilton, first struck the keynote of the second struggle when, as Secretary of the Treasury, December 5, 1791, he said:

This idea of an extensive domestic market for the surplus product of the soil is of the first consequence. It is of all things that which most effectually conduces to a flourishing state of agriculture. To secure such a market there is no other expedient than to promote manufacturing establishments. It is the interest of a community, with a view to eventual and foreign economy, to encourage the growth of manufactures. In a national view, a temporary enhancement of price must always be well compensated by a prominent reduction of it.

American statesmen have followed in similar strains. Thus Washington's last annual address, December 7, 1796, says:

Congress have repeatedly and not without success, directed their attention to the encouragement of manufacturers. The object is of too much consequence not to secure a continuance of their efforts in every way which shall appear eligible.

President Madison, in his special message of May 23, 1809, says:

It will be worthy at the same time, of their just and provident care, to make such further alterations in the laws as will more especially protect and foster the several branches of manufacture which have been recently instituted as extended by the laudable exertion of our citizens.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Benjamin Austin, of Boston, 1816, says:

To be independent for the comforts of life, we must fabricate them ourselves; we must place our manufacturers by the side of the agriculturists. Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.

President Monroe, in his first inaugural address, March 5, 1817, says:

Our manufactures will likewise require the systematic and fostering care of the Government. Possessing as we do all the raw materials, the fruit of our own soil and industry, we ought not to depend, in the degree we have done, on supplies on other countries. While we are thus dependent, these sudden events of war, unsought and unexpected, can not fail to plunge us into the most serious difficulties.

President Jackson, August, 26, 1824, says:

Heaven has smiled upon and gave us liberty and independence. The same Providence has blessed us with the means of national dependence and national defense. If we omit or refuse to use the gifts which He has extended to us, we deserve not the continuance of His blessing. He has filled our mountains and plains with minerals and given us a climate and soil for the growing of hemp and wool. These being the great materials of our national defense, they ought to have extended to them adequate and fair protection, that our manufacturers and laborers may be placed in a fair competition with those of Europe, and that we may have within our country a supply of these leading articles so essential to war.

The cause of that disparity of conditions having been removed, there is no longer any good reason why the people of the South should not favor protection, a condition of things most essential to her prosperity. Most serious disturbances of our business affairs come of any interference with the tariff. The man who has erected his mills and his factories under protection of his products, with the withdrawal of that protection, is most seriously disturbed, if not ruined.

It seems to be more a determination on the part of the Administration to carry out an idea, erroneous as we may believe it to be, than any demand of the people or any especial need or emergency of the times. If we think the voice of the people can be stifled on these great questions affecting the policy of the nation, we mistake the nature of this Government. It needs no prophet to predict that the people have had quite enough of this partisan tampering with the tariff. You will see what they will say in the next elections, when the question comes home to them as it will. And the political party that would retain or obtain a lease of power in the future would do well to heed this voice, the source of all power in this nation.

The condition of affairs in this country is vastly different from what it was a quarter of a century or more ago. The discontented and unsettled classes, of which the number is steadily increasing, have no longer new and virgin territory to occupy when they become dissatisfied with the older communities. The time has come when in the order of things we must have a fixed national policy upon all questions affecting the stability of the Government.

We can endure less foolishness than formerly. The people can stand less nonsense in the shape of unwise laws than when there was less suffering and idleness among them. These freaks of legislation, if we may so call them, should be forced upon the country only in time of great prosperity. Our free trade "or tariff for a deficiency" friends seem to be oblivious to this fact.

We oppose this bill because it works a serious diminution of our revenue on foreign imports, because the people do not want it, because it would cripple our industries, and because the present condition of the country is most unfavorable for any such innovation. We should beware at such times of any disturbing acts of legislation which tend to unsettle the quiet of the country. We should bear in mind that under the existing tariff which this bill proposes to disturb, there is an estimated deficiency made by the Secretary of the Treasury of $78,000,000 for the current year. And in the revenue bill proposed by this new schedule, it is proposed to discard $76,000,000 from the present tariff and impose a new form of internal and direct taxation upon our people to make up for this deficiency.

A proposition more unwise in these unsettled times could not well be devised; and strange it seems to me, that a party that one would naturally expect to see laying the foundation of future power—a party seeking to hold itself in sympathy and touch with the people—should in this reckless way throw away all chances to future promotion or ascendency. With the motto of Dante, written above the entrance to his inferno, "Abandon hope all ye who enter here," it may well be said of all those misguided statesmen who have entered into this conspiracy against protection, abandon all hope for preferment of the people ye unwise ones who seek to overthrow the main pillar of our institutions. If I did not prefer the prosperity of my country to that of party, I would withhold this warning cry and let them rush to certain disaster.

"A tariff for revenue only!" exclaim the champions of free trade. Exactly, say the people, but give us enough tariff for enough revenue, which means no reduction of the present rates, but on the other hand such advance upon many articles as may at least work an increase equal to the present deficiency. I want to emphasize the matter I have already referred to concerning an American policy in customs and finance. We have a territory as great as that of all Europe and a population which a few years hence will excel that of all English-speaking countries combined. And yet we have no policy of our own—no financial policy that is not made for us in the financial centers of the Old World. Our definition of money is vague, indefinite, and intensely English. With an immense territory and population we seem to be denied a distinctive policy of finance of our own. We must first ascertain what is wanted of us and then quietly and submissively yield up our own manhood to the keeping of others. This should never be submitted to by those who prefer the American Republic and her institutions as superior to those of any other lands.

The proposed new tariff bill especially affects the great fruit, wine, and nut industries of California, and will ruin them if it becomes a law in the proposed form. These industries are wonderful in view of the fact that it is in the memory of the man of middle age in this country when they were started. There is scarcely a city or town in the country where California fruits, nuts, and wine can not be purchased. While the trade is enormous there has not been as much profit in it as is generally understood. There are many reasons for this, but the principal one is the difficulty and expense in securing the market for the goods and cost of transportation to the consumer. The fruits, nuts, and wine have had to fight every foot for the position they now occupy in the markets of the United States, for the foreign productions only yielded because they were forced to, and for the additional reason that the fruits, nuts, and wines of California have not only undersold them, but because, also, they—the home productions—have been of better quality.

If it is pardonable at any time to introduce in a speech of this character statistics and tables showing the growth and quantity of California's productions in this line, this would be a case; but I forbear, for I am thoroughly convinced that it needs no such array to show that they are appreciated and are in demand. Later on, however, when this bill is under consideration by paragraphs, I may offer the Senate some statistics on the question. These great industries grew because they were given protection by our laws, and though they may not be classed as infant industries, they are still comparatively new, and will for some years yet need a fair and legitimate protection in their competion with the Old World. A severe blow has been given them by this bill, and unless it is amended an irreparable damage will be done.

California sent out last year 2,500 carloads of 12 tons each of raisins, and this year will send out 3,700 carloads. Add to these the thousands of carloads of oranges, peaches, apricots, pears, figs, plums, prunes, etc., fresh, preserved, canned, and dried, and one can in a small degree realize the importance of the industry, and I hope realize the necessity of protection. California to-day has 12,000 acres of almonds, and is probably the only State in the Union interested as a grower. Her forests of walnut trees are also threatened by the reduction of the duty. Even worse than the reduction is the doing away with the specific duty and the change to the ad valorem, for there is hardly any calculating the injury the change will make. The duties levied by the present law are none too high, while those proposed by this bill if not changed will almost bring about an abandonment of the industry.

In regard to the wine industry, what can I add in opposition to the passage of this bill? It is a bill that is wrong in so many directions that it would take days to enumerate them. In no one, however, does it do more harm than it does to the wine-maker of California, or indeed to the wine-maker of other States, when it abolishes specific and establishes ad valorem duties. This feature was introduced at the very last moment, and without question through the efforts of importers of foreign wines, or possibly of the producers of European wines, more particularly of those of France. The bill reads that the duty on still wines in casks shall remain as it has been, viz, 50 cents per gallon, but that it shall not exceed 100 per cent ad valorem.

This, on the face, appears to be a very large protection, but when you consider that the production of wines in Europe, especially this year, has been very great—thus in France fully 1,300,000,000 gallons against an average crop of barely half of this, and Italy a crop of possibly six to eight hundred million—you will well understand that the price of such wines in Europe will be very low, and I have no doubt that the cheaper grades will not average above 10 cents per gallon there. This means, according to the wording of the bill, a duty of 10 cents per gallon upon such wines, a figure considerably lower than was ever asked on the part of importers here. Besides this, there are many parts of France and Germany where wines are artificially manufactured—thus in Cette, France, and in Hamburg, Germany—and as the basis of such wines is potato or grain spirits, which pay no tax, as they are intended for wines for export, and which spirits cost possibly 6 to 8 cents per gallon, one can well imagine how cheap they can produce so-called wines, particularly as the balance that they add is in the form of chemicals.

It must be understood that it is difficult to appraise the value of wines, for they can not be judged as other manufactured articles are, for the reason that even the best judges differ as to the value of goods, and as many of the goods are shipped by the producers, the latter can put an arbitrary value upon their wine, as they may possibly figure only cost of production and interest upon their investment. This would result in the shipment of altogether or to a great extent low-priced wines.

In this connection I have received a letter from Mr. John T. Doyle, president of the viticultural commission of California, himself a prominent leading Democrat, in which, discussing this bill, he says, and as he states the case better and stronger than I can, I quote from it:

> The 50 cents per gallon is in no sense a protective duty. It was in force long before the McKinley bill was thought of, and I am not aware of any suggestion to change it in past years. The fact that the wine raised in this State does not average the producer 15 cents per gallon is conclusive evidence of the nonproductive character of the duty. Wine is ordinarily an article of luxury, and a most proper subject for a revenue duty. It is, also, an article so difficult to fix a true value on by any external test that any but a specific duty would be quite out of place. An ad valorem duty on wine is an absurdity. * * *
> But there is a stuff called wine, which is made for exportation in France and Italy in enormous quantities, which should not be admitted to importation here on any terms. It is often filthy and nauseous in its mode of manufacture, and is really unfit for human consumption. A duty of 50 cents excludes it, for under no circumstances could it sell for so much; but I doubt if 100 or even 200 per cent ad valorem would, for it can probably be invoiced at 5 cents per gallon, or even less. The best of it is made by taking pomace after it has yielded all its wine to the press, adding glucose and water, and allowing it to ferment again.
> The pomace gives the color and something of the flavor of wine, the glucose yields the necessary alcohol, which, if need be, is supplemented by German potato whisky, the most noxious of all the alcohols known to chemistry, and which is now finding its way all over the South of Europe as an ingredient of counterfeit wines and liquors. The pomace is thus used over and over again. The invasion of the French vineyards by the phyloxera led to the introduction of this counterfeit wine industry some years ago to supply the export trade of the country and it has since attained an enormous proportion.
> We do not ask for any protection on wine, a duty that will give such revenue as is fairly collectible from such a luxury is all we need. But the public has a right to expect the Democratic party not to open the door, for the first time, to the importation of vicious and poisonous beverages under the pretense of freedom of trade. Free trade should at least be confined to honest commodities.

There are besides those I have referred to many other interests of California affected injuriously by the various provisions of this bill. The reduction of duty upon lumber, rice, freestone, sandstone, onyx, lime, hops, beans, chicory, twine and cordage, burlaps, jute and bagging, and live stock will prostrate those industries as at present conducted. The struggling factories engaged in the manufacture of cotton, wool, rope, and jute can only continue by a corresponding reduction of wages to their employés. The placing of machinery for vessels on the free list will, I am afraid, result in closing several of the shipbuilding machine shops on the Pacific coast. They have been built up by the patient industry, pluck, and enterprise of our California mechanics. That they can do work to favorably compare with any country in the world, I have but to mention the United States ships Charleston, San Francisco, Oregon, Olympia, Monterey, and other steamships built by our mechanics of California.

But they can not continue to pay the same wages and compete with workmen on the Clyde who will manufacture and send machinery there at a nominal freight in ships that come to load wheat, and must have ballast on their outward trip to California. But I find that I have already occupied more of the time and attention of the Senate than I should at this time. I shall, however, claim the privilege when the bill is under discussion by schedules and paragraphs to offer amendments and to point out, discuss, and show to the Senate how the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, will be injured if the bill becomes a law without very radical improvement.

We should maintain the integrity of the Republic in its dearest rights and usages, and should aim to uphold a higher order of manhood among our laboring classes than belongs to any monarchy on the face of the globe. God pity this land when a man's title to true nobility shall not depend solely upon his personal worth and merit; where the measure of his greatness hangs upon the empty bauble of a title conferred upon some worthless ancestor. There can be no heraldy of merit founded upon superior skill or genius in the great world of use. And herein should ever consist our superiority over the nations of the earth. When we foolishly surrender this boon this great Republic will surely fade from the nations of the earth.

I am not one of those who feel that they are called upon at all times and in all cases to denounce trusts, combinations, coöperative, or corporative investments. Many combinations produce more beneficial results than otherwise, and are in the interests of the people. There are unlawful trusts, however, which do harm and which menace legitimate interests in every direction.

These should and can be regulated by law, State and national, and I stand ready to take my share of the responsibility in passing such laws, for I am convinced that such determined remedial agents are necessary. I would crush out the trusts and combinations which oppress as I would encourage and foster those which are organized for beneficial purposes.

I am a thorough believer in "profit-sharing" enterprises—coöperation and coöperative effort—for many good things can be done by this means which are not possible by private capital or private enterprise alone. Trusts when organized for the public good should have proper encouragement, but when they have reached the point where they, by aggregated capital and combination of interests, attempt to, or influence, legislation, either State or national, they should be removed and dispersed.

In explanation of a trust that has my unqualified indorsement, I instance the case of the raisin men of five counties in California, Fresno, Tulare, Madera, Kings, and Kern Counties, which have agreed that all raisins are to go into the hands of the organization to be sold, doing away entirely with middlemen. To perfect this plan, they propose to raise a capital of say $250,000, representing the same number of shares at $1 an acre, so that there would be no need of resorting to commission houses for advances. It is further proposed that each neighborhood or district shall have a coöperative packing-house in order to reduce the cost of preparing the goods for market. When a sale is made the proceeds are divided pro rata among all who have goods in the warehouse, so that no one could have any advantage over another. No one will be injured who does not join the association. Consequently such a trust as this becomes a public benefit.

The question of free or dutiable iron and coal, as affecting the interests of California, from a narrow point of view, may be debatable, but on a broad view of the suject we find we are in touch with the coördinate welfare of our sister States of the Union. We may ask if we can build up the highest prosperity of our own, or any one State, while we neglect the interests of others, or do we not profit most when others are prosperous? California produces but little iron or coal. These commodities are imported in large amounts, chiefly from foreign countries, and in foreign ships, iron from England, Sweden, and Russia, coal from Great Britain, Australia, and Vancouver Island.

California is the largest importer of coal of any State of the Union, the amount being about 1,000,000 tons annually, and paying over $700,000 in duties to the National Treasury. Under this bill the duties are very largely reduced and the consumer expects them cheaper in our markets. But this expectation will not be realized, as we generally find that an importer, as well as anyone else, will charge all he can get for an article whether he has paid duty on it or not, particularly when he, or a syndicate, has the power of a monopoly.

The production of coal on the Pacific coast, though small, kept this monopoly down, or nearly down, and by the power of competition, though limited, kept down the price to the consumer. But without the duty the American producers of coal could not maintain themselves. It is doubted that the reduced duty provided for in this bill will be sufficient to aid the American miners of coal to keep up their competition, though they will do so if they can, and the result may be that the trusts controlling the foreign coal will raise the price to consumers.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. POWER. Where do you get your coal used for the shipping interests?

Mr. PERKINS. As I was about to state, large quantities of it are brought from England, large quantities from Australia, and large quantities from British Columbia, with our own domestic product in Washington, Oregon, and California.

Mr. POWER. How does the coal produced in Washington and Oregon answer for the shipping interests?

Mr. PERKINS. For steam purposes?

Mr. POWER. For steam purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. The coal of California and Oregon has not been as good steam coal as that of Washington and British Columbia. However, the coal of the State of Washington, and I speak advisedly, has veins that compare favorably with any other steam coal upon the coast, its principal competitor being that of British Columbia or Vancouver Island.

Mr. POWER. Is the coal from the State of Washington as good as that from Vancouver Island?

Mr. PERKINS. I think in some of the mines it is quite equal to that of British Columbia.

Mr. POWER. The Government made a contract for the Bering Sea fleet in the last few weeks for coal from the British country, taking that coal in place of our product. I was called upon to look after that so far as some friends are concerned, and that is the reason why I asked the question. Why was that done?

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Montana calls my attention to the fact. I presume it is done to carry out the foreign policy of this Administration perhaps.

Mr. POWER. So I thought at the time.

Mr. PERKINS. I am somewhat a consumer of coal, being obliged to purchase from 5,000 to 10,000 tons monthly, and from an actual test in our experiments we find that the coal of the mines in the State of Washington called the Franklin mine, for steam purposes, is equal in its efficiency to that of any coal upon the Pacific coast, notwithstanding the Government in asking for bids or proposals for furnishing coal did not mention this mine, but advertised only for foreign coal.

Mr. POWER. That is what I understand.

Mr. PERKINS. Not being in accord with the present Administration, I am unable to give my friend the information he desires.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from California permit me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from California mean to be understood as saying that the bid of the Department excluded American coal?

Mr. PERKINS. I will not say that it excluded it, but it was not considered, I understand.

Mr. DAVIS. Has attention been called to the character of the Washington coal?

Mr. PERKINS. The case can hardly be otherwise, as the mines of the Washington coal have been worked for thirty years or more, and it is used continually by the steamships operating on the Pacific coast. The company that I in part represent, engaged in operating steamships, consumes from 5,000 to 10,000 tons monthly; and I speak without reservation when I state that its effective use for steam purposes is equal to the coal of British Columbia or any other coal.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In addition to that, if the Senator will allow me, the special attention of the Secretary of the Navy was called to the fact that the Washington mines had been omitted, by a communication signed by several Senators, myself among the number.

Mr. DAVIS. What response was made to that communication?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The response was to the effect that under all the circumstances, as far as they were advised, they thought the British coal the best.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from California will further allow me, I beg to call the attention of my distinguished friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to the fact which has been stated by the Senator from Oregon, and to ask his influence with the Administration to see that domestic coals are properly treated hereafter.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from California will permit me, I am satisfied that the Administration which is now in power would certainly (if it was in accordance with an economic administration of the Department) much prefer the use of American coal to foreign coal, and I suppose it can only be by reason of misinformation in reference to the quality of the coal which could be furnished by those mines that they purchase at all the foreign coal to which the Senator from California has alluded.

Mr. PERKINS. I had not referred to this in my remarks; I tried not to be personal at all; and ordinarily I should defer to the judgment of the Senator from West Virginia; but I have some knowledge of coal, because the vessels which I am engaged in operating consume large quantities of coal and we know from actual test, not a theoretical experiment, but by burning 1,000 tons of coal from this mine and 1,000 tons of coal from the other mine, that the same speed of a vessel under similar circumstances is attained. That is the result.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask a question right here. The Senator from California, as he states, and we all know, is a very large consumer of coal on the Pacific coast. That being so, of course one would naturally suppose that he would like to get the coal so used as cheaply as possible. Does the Senator think that by putting coal on the free list he in the course of a few years, if at all, would get his coal as cheaply as he does now?

Mr. PERKINS. I shall endeavor to demonstrate the fact, but my time is passing, and I wish to make a few remarks about the income tax. I shall have to file a special brief with my friend to show him that I am satisfied the consumer would not get his coal one cent less, judging the future by the past. Before our mines in Oregon, Washington, and California were developed (and we have a few of them in California) coal was always purchased from the ships to arrive, and the consumer was never benefited one cent thereby. But, parenthetically, speaking of the question of my friends from Montana and Oregon, it is true that our Government did not give our Oregonians and Washingtonians an opportunity of competing, yet I want to say a kind word for our friends in British Columbia. They are our neighbors, and they buy a great many goods from us in California. They are a very kind-hearted, hospitable people. They are an American people, who ought to be connected and allied with us by political bands.

To show how much more generous they are than our own Government, to one of the steamship companies that I can call to mind I think they have paid during the past twenty-five years a special mail subsidy for carrying the mails by steamer from San Francisco to Victoria, British Columbia, of from $5,000 to $10,000 a year, while our Government pays for carrying the mail about $1.50 a mail, I think. That is the policy. Therefore I feel very kindly toward our friends, and if they would unite themselves with the United States I should not object to purchasing our coal there altogether.

But since the Senators from Montana and Oregon have called attention to the discrimination against American coal, I am sure my friend from West Virginia, having a judicial mind, will say at once that there is some mistake and that he himself will volunteer to remedy this wrong, and in the next bid the coal of Washington and Oregon will be invited to compete.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I have no doubt that after the Secretary of the Navy has read the very elaborate and satisfactory argument of the Senator from California on this subject and knows his ability to talk from personal knowledge of the quality of the coal there will be no difficulty whatever. I understand that this coal was excluded on the report of the officers who had tested it.

Mr. PERKINS. Since the question has been brought up I want to say in justice to the Department that while the Washington coal is just as effective and is equal for steam purposes, yet it is not quite as clean, and the officers prefer a harder coal that does not throw any cinders on the deck or upon their suits of clothing made of foreign wool. I think I can make it clear even to my friend rom West Virginia that there should be a duty upon coal; but I wish to say that I have an interest in one mine and that I am interested in the management of a company which has investments in several coal mines; and while those who know me would hardly charge that it would influence me in my vote, yet as there are some evil-minded people who sometimes misconstrue a person's action, when the question of the coal duty is up for consideration I shall, with the permission of the Senate, refuse to vote upon it.

I do not believe it right for anyone to vote on any measure in which he has a direct interest, if it is ever so small; and yet to my satisfaction, and I think to the satisfaction of my friend from West Virginia, I can show that the duty should not be reduced from 75 cents to 40 cents a ton, and that after all the talk of "free coal" the people of the Pacific States would have "dear coal" as the results of their efforts. I am confident that the price will not be reduced, though the duty is, and the difference between existing duties and the reduced duties will go into the pockets of the foreign ship and mine owner. The trusts are powerful enough to do just as they did before when the duty was reduced to raise the price to make up the difference.

For the year 1892 the total output of the coal mines of the world was 539,000,000 tons. Of this the United States produced 179,000,000 tons, or nearly 33 per cent of the total. Of this product the United States exported from her Atlantic and lake ports—

	Tons.
Anthracite	851,000
Bituminous	1,645,000
Total	2,496,000

During the same year the United States imported—

	Tons.
Anthracite	65,058
Bituminous	1,143,000
Total	1,208,058

Leaving this general statement, and coming to the coal consumption of the State of California, the statistics show that she imported from all sources of supply during the years 1892 and 1893, viz:

	1892.	Per cent.	1893.	Per cent.

It may with safety be assumed that the 65,058 tons anthracite reported as coming into the United States were delivered at California ports. Deducting this from California's total importations of foreign coal will leave a balance of 1,043,000 tons of dutible bituminous coal brought to her ports, showing that only 100,000 tons foreign bituminous coal went into all other ports of the United States, and that of all the foreign coal imported during 1892, California received over 91 per cent.

It will thus be seen that California occupies a singular and unique position relative to the Government tax on fuel. This is because:

1. She has not within her borders any known deposits of coal suitable in quality for the general needs, and within reach of her centers of consumption.

2. She is the most populous of the sparsely settled Pacific coast States, and therefore offers the largest market west of the Rocky Mountains.

3. She is essentially an agricultural State, dependent upon distant markets for the sale of her products, and compelled largely to use ocean carriage for transportation. This fact attracts vessel tonnage, almost entirely foreign in nationality, and which coming from far distant points is chiefly laden with coal as inward cargoes.

If business policy, and not theories shall determine the right of government to protect by tariff those lines of business which need protection, shall get any consideration, that policy will be best which tends to encourage the development of resources to the profitable employment of capital and to the largest amount of work and rates of wages. What that amount of tariff, distinctly for protection, shall be, is the question for those who fix the rates, but unquestionably it should be no more and no less than is necessary to equalize the cost between the same grades of foreign and domestic material laid down at the seaboard ports.

Respecting coal, California's position is different from that of every other State of the Union. Leaving out of the question any discussion that she may have interests requiring the help of sister States towards shaping the governmental policy for their protection, it is a fact that with her the farming element is the most important. The farmer pays the outward freight on his wheat because he gets for his product the difference between the foreign market rates and the freights by sailing ships. Therefore, whatever tends to increase the outward carrying tonnage, or what will lower the cost of wheat freights, is in the interest of the farmer.

Dismissing for a moment the reciprocal interests of California with her neighboring States, it is a fact that coal constitutes the largest volume of inbound freight; therefore, it is better for the farmer if the coal trade of the State shall be supplied from distant foreign ports, because—

1. The inward earnings enable the ships to carry the wheat outward at lower rates than would otherwise be possible.

2. Coal as cargo from distant foreign ports sends here an increased tonnage of wheat-carrying ships.

It therefore follows that the importation of coal from adjacent foreign ports is not in the interest of the farmer, because it is carried in British steamers and by other nonwheat-carrying vessels. The importation of coal from near foreign mines has two effects in California: It displaces the product of mines worked by American labor in adjoining States, and to the extent that it displaces the product of distant foreign mines, to just that extent does it lower the list of vessels that would otherwise be attracted to carry away California products.

It is entirely safe to say, and the statement will be borne out by unprejudiced experience, that the abolition of the present duty as proposed by the bill as it came here will shut the California market against the American coast mines, and lead to a further absorption of the coal tonnage by the mines of British Columbia. An examination of the statistics for the past six years will show that the supply of domestic coals imported has decreased over 30 per cent. During the same period that of the British Columbia mines has increased nearly 90 per cent, while that from distant foreign mines shows no material increase.

It may naturally be asked, why should this result follow, seeing that the abolition of the duty would apply equally to foreign coals from Great Britain and Australia, and why may not the American mines still maintain their foothold. The answer is:

1. British Columbia coal as compared with that from Washington is better for household use, and for steam purposes it equals the best and is superior to most of the local domestic products: hence, it is in greater demand in the California market.

2. British Columbia mines, having flat veins, are more cheaply worked than the pitching veins in Washington, and being nearer tide water their output can be shipped on board vessels at a lower cost than coals in Washington.

3. The product of British Columbia mines is largely carried in cheaply built and cheaply operated British steamers, and therefore the cost of freightage is less than from the American Puget Sound coal ports, that use American sailing ships and more costly steamers, and these causes have operated to diminish the California supply from Northern American coal fields, and the abolition of the present duty will finish the struggle.

With respect to distant foreign coals, the answer is: The miners of British Columbia coals sell their own product in the California markets. Controlling the amount and cost of their supplies, by the use largely of British steamers they are within four days of their mines, and are thus enabled to undertake contracts for large deliveries. The dealer in other foreign coals is distant sixty days from Australia, and one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty days from Great Britain. The uncertainty of the arrivals of sailing ships from such long voyages makes it inexpedient to undertake such large contracts, unless by the carriage of unwarrantably large stocks of coal. He does not know nor can he control costs, for while the free-on-board price of coal at foreign ports is practically constant, for long periods, the inward freight rates are constantly fluctuating.

These are the chief reasons why the British Columbia miner is in position to force the domestic coals out of this market, and why he has been able to prevent any marked increase in importation from abroad. At the same time, while it is not contended that there should be a discriminating tariff against British Columbia, it should be emphasized that this growing absorption of California coal trade by these mines deprives the farmer of wheat-carrying vessels, tending to increase his outward wheat freights, when he competes in European markets against the world's wheat. It has retarded the mineral development of the State of Washington, which is practically in infancy, and the destruction of the tariff will further dwarf promising coal-mining in Oregon.

Who will benefit by the reduction of the duty on coal? As the function of such laws is to do the greatest good to the masses, let us analyze the coal traffic of California, and ascertain whether the great public will reap any material advantage. The American coal-producer on the Atlantic seaboard protests against any reduction in duty, because the Nova Scotia mines will disturb his trade in the great consuming centers of New England.

The American miner on the Pacific coast contends for a chance to keep his present trade in California against mines in British Columbia, but the same kind of practical reason applicable in the East does not fit the peculiar conditions there. It can be said in prophecy that if the present duty be reduced the difference will go into the pockets of the British miner and shipowner. Theoretically it should all go to the California consumer. Practically it will not.

Iron ore of excellent quality is abundant, California alone having enough to supply the world indefinitely, but under existing conditions it is not available as a commercial factor. For our future development we are looking forward hopefully to the construction of the Nicaragua Canal to bring us in closer commercial relationship with our Southern brethren, with whom we are now working at terrible cross-purposes, hoping for the same material end. Does Alabama believe she can send her coal and iron to Italy or Turkey in exchange for figs, olives, currants, raisins, oranges, lemons, chromium, borax, or sulphur more advantageously than she could to California for the same products? All these commodities and many more are California products, in great abundance and in greater perfection than elsewhere known. Of one important thing our Eastern (including Southern) friends appear to be ignorant or indifferent and narrow: that we have all the Mediterranean countries on our Pacific coast, all Northern Europe in our Mississippi Valley, all Great Britain and her every natural resource many times repeated in our Atlantic States, all the precious mineral regions of the world in our great Western plateau, and all Scandinavia, Laplandia, and Samoldia in our Alaska. But partisanship and limited local or individual interests subordinate all to narrow dictation.

The Republicans ask for this development by mutual assistance, by a syndicate of States as business men form syndicates for successful operations. We of California pay without complaint as a contribution to the general good of the other States and in support of the Government $8,000,000 of customs, of which three-quarters of a million is for coal and $2,192,581 internal revenue direct, and several millions more indirectly being paid directly at the place of manufacture of whisky, tobacco, beer, and oleomargarine. It is estimated that California pays annually $6,000,000 of the internal-revenue tax, when her just proportion would be less than $2,000,000, the gross amount collected in the United States being $160,296,130. Thus California pays into the Treasury over $15,000,000 annually. These great and disproportionate payments, continued through a long series of years, entitle her to careful consideration and justify her request for protection and assistance in developing her natural resources for the mutual good, power, and glory of our common country.

There is received at the port of San Francisco from 18,000 to 22,000 long tons of pig iron annually, almost entirely from Great Britain. A little more than a year ago this trade was broken into by the arrival at that port of a shipment of 930 tons of pig iron from Birmingham, Ala. This proved of excellent quality, and more was immediately ordered. The agent, Mr. John Martin, at that time stated that the iron could be supplied at the furnaces as cheaply as at the furnaces in Scotland, but the freight rates were greatly in favor of the foreign product. That is, the rate per ton from Ensley or Birmingham via New York to San Francisco was $13.15 per ton, while from Glasgow to San Francisco the rate was $2.40 per ton. Adding to this the duty of $6.92 per ton, makes a total of $9.12 a ton, or a difference of $4.03 in favor of the British and against the Alabama product. The price of pig iron ranges in San Francisco from $23 to $30 per ton, or did at the time these transactions occurred. But with the tariff as it is and the canal of Nicaragua completed, shipments via Mobile or New Orleans to Pacific ports would place the iron works of Alabama and other Southern States on an equality with those of Great Britain.

Here we make these concessions for mutual assistance and development. A member of the other House is reported as saying he voted against sugar because his State was not interested in sugar. Many have opposed protection to iron because, as it was charged, only one State—Pennsylvania—was engaged in its production. Now several States are interested in it, and all should be. Iron and coal are the basis of British power and wealth, and wherever in our country, under protection, their production has been carried on, there have grown prosperous communities, wealthy and powerful States. Knowing the condition of the Southern States, so undeveloped were their great natural resources when they attempted to establish the Confederacy, that a strictly enforced blockade would have soon starved the people and rendered the government powerless and compelled submission without a Bull Run, a Gettysburg, or an Appomattox. These developments are and must be through protection and interstate commerce, and not through free trade and foreign commerce.

Of the income tax, I can but say that it appears in the bill before us one of the most insidious and deceitful ever expressed in a multitude of words.

It appears most fair that the individual who rides on Mr. Bellamy's coach, which other individuals pull through the dust and mud of good and bad roads, should be made to pay his fare, or at least to pay more than those who do the pulling; and it is on this theory the income tax is advocated. Were this theory sound it would still be found impracticable to collect that fare with any equality or any degree of satisfaction or profit. At first glance it appears that the income tax is levied only against those who ride. This appearance makes the proposition popular with those who believe they do all the pulling for this coach made so famous in the "Looking Backward" story. A closer examination of these sections of the bill show that the pullers of that coach are taxed as well as those who ride.

There are but few thrifty persons who have not invested some surplus earnings or "laid aside for a rainy day" in some incorporated company or savings bank. Such people are of the most beneficial toilers of the world. They comprise millions of our people of small incomes. In all the great companies are many of these, and possibly many call for an income tax. They do not know that their savings are aggregated in the bank or other corporation, and made to pay the same tax as if the depositor's income were over the limit of four thousand. Many a poor man and woman will find their scanty dividends lessened by the income tax if this bill becomes a law.

There are 4,781,605 depositors in the savings banks of the United States, with $1,712,769,026 on deposit, an average of $358.20 to each person. Of these California has 175,672 depositors, with an average of $886 of deposits, or in all $126,781,530. This includes $101,462,937 in the savings banks of San Francisco and $25,318,593 deposited in the interior savings banks of the State. How much of this belongs to "plain people," "wage-earners," and the like, it is impossible to ascertain. We know that for a long time there were many capitalists there who found it easier and more profitable to deposit large sums in savings banks than to invest themselves, but during the troubles of last year their funds were not available, and since then they are doubtless withdrawing their patronage from savings banks. Many of these banks now decline to accept any large deposits, the general limit being $10,000, while some are said to have a limit of $4,000.

It stands to reason, therefore, that a very large percentage, or nearly all, of the depositors are people of moderate means, who, not being able to take care of their savings, give them into the custody of those whose business is to conduct these trusts. There are 120,642 depositors in San Francisco and 55,030 depositors in the interior banks, and while we can not get accurate statistics the nearest obtainable estimate is:

Depositors of less than $1,000	157,745
Depositors of over $1,000 and less than $2,000	8,722
Depositors of between $2,000 and $5,000	6,024
Depositors of over $5,000	3,181

The average of deposits in our four largest local savings banks in San Francisco is, viz:

German	$1,046.97
Hibernia	606.04
Savings Union	1,246.12
Savings and Loan Society	1,144.32
The lowest average deposit in all the banks is	57.67
The highest average deposit in all the banks is	1,760.00

The savings banks in California are of two classes, mutual and stock corporations, while in the East savings banks are mainly mutual concerns, having no stock, and are managed by directors more or less upon a philanthropic basis wherein all depositors are members and there are no stockholders.

If the income tax were imposed, it would of course apply to mutual and incorporated savings banks as well as all other corporations and they would have to pay upon their income, which consists of the interest upon loans and investments. This income, less expenses and dividends to stockholders, is now used to pay interest to depositors which we will say is 5 per cent. Corporations are not so liberal as to allow this charge, the income tax, to apply entirely to stockholders; therefore it would be deducted from the 5 per cent paid depositors, and the man, who has accumulated $1,000 and is now receiving, say, $50 per annum as the earnings of his savings, would get $50, less the income tax of 2 per cent. There are also in California, and I think throughout the United States, building and loan associations, mutual societies organized for the purpose of assisting the mechanic and wage-worker in building a home and paying for it in monthly installments.

Thousands of homes are by this plan builded each year, that fall like a benediction upon the American family. It is almost cruel to impose an income tax upon these societies as this law proposes.

The larger depositor, if his wealth were all in the savings banks, from which he received say $4,000 annually, would have paid the tax once through the bank and then would have to pay it again personally, and this would apply to anyone whose income was derived from corporate investments. The company would have to pay its tax and then the shareholder, who received dividends, would have to pay it again, i. e., the same income or earning power would be taxed doubly in its distribution. This may be the desired object, but it is double taxation, and therefore not equitable.

The worst feature about the proposed measure appears to be the discouragement it would give to enterprise, and particularly to combined effort, in the form of corporate undertakings. These are the times when the greatest encouragement should be given to all who are willing to develop new resources, for so much has been done to discourage capital that disaster and misfortune appear everywhere. Is it not possible that under an income tax we would drive from us many whose wealth is now of great benefit, and should they invest their capital in other countries how could this Government collect income tax upon such investments?

A man's income is a personal affair and he will not willingly disclose it, but, if forced to, will be driven to dishonest methods in resenting what he regards as an injustice. One of the bank commissioners of California writes me:

> I am told that the income tax works well in England, but I am not familiar with the system there and it may be possible that it is a blessing in disguise, but viewing it as a creation of the Democratic party, I am loath to appreciate it.
> It is more or less in evidence that the rich do not pay their just share of taxes, but the proposed plan will place greater burdens upon those of moderate means, who can not escape, and the class sought to be taxed will evade the law in one way or another.

I am opposed to this income tax provided for in this bill for many reasons, but first and principally because it is un-American. I am also informed there is no income-tax law proper imposed by any republic of the world to-day. It is a recognized monarchical form of taxation and should have no place upon the statute books of this country, unless as a war measure. There is no demand for it except from a few theorists and free traders who seek to secure by it money with which to pay the expenses of the Government and create an army of taxgatherers. This money, in my opinion, is needed and needed badly, but it would be more American-like if we insisted on collecting it from the foreign materials and manufactures sent here rather than from our own people. It is inquisitorial and, judging the future by the past, it will do far more to manufacture perjury than to produce an income to aid in supporting the Government. Who can deny that it is a deception; that it does not promise things it can not perform? It is supposed to be leveled at the rich and the rich alone; at those whose incomes are four thousand and over per year, and it is on its face; but there are thousands of others who will be affected by it, for it will reach into the savings banks as I have shown and tax every depositor, rich or poor.

It will affect all injuriously. It proposes also to give certain designated persons the right to look into the private business of all business men and business enterprises; to expose every one's private books to the public gaze; to require the successful business man to expose the sources of his success to those who are not so fortunate, to force him to an unnatural competition. Henry Clews, well known as a banker and financier in New York, as well as to the business world everywhere, in a recent letter says:

> I remember during the war period, when various tax laws of that character were in force as war measures, it was quite a usual thing for the collector of one of the districts named, who was a bold, unscrupulous, and money-making man, to forcibly seize the books of well-known firms and keep them in his custody at his own office for experts to examine at their convenience and, I have no doubt, in many instances even to copy parts thereof; at any rate, such was the general impression.

Hundreds of others give similar testimony. Setting aside for the present all other objections to the income-tax feature of this bill it is clear, even from the statement of the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee of this body, that it is not necessary, for the reason that the bill raises enough to meet the expenses of the Government without it. We certainly should not provide for such a great surplus of revenues as the income tax proposes to raise. We do not need it and it will turn out to be a plague to annoy and punish us. This is also the most inopportune time to try such legislation. The recent financial depression carried down many of the supposed strongest business firms and farmers of our country, and has kept them down; others who have credit have managed to keep their heads up in spite of unfavorable circumstances, and if allowed to do so will come out all right in the end.

But if they are forced to open their books and accounts to the public gaze—to the income-tax gatherers—it will be shown that they exist in many cases on credit and the confidence of their friends and supporters; and the result can not but prove disastrous to them and others. We have had enough of pulling down, and certainly there should be no excuse, no statute placed in our laws which would increase and encourage financial disaster, and which would wreck those that would otherwise sail along pleasantly until times improved, when they can manage on their own account. It is for them and those depending on them a great struggle, and if they are not required to "show their hands," as it were, they will weather the storm and sail along in pleasant waters. What we need is confidence, and it should not be destroyed by the operations of the income-tax gatherer. We have business troubles enough already staring us in the face without the law placing in their pathway one which would be even greater than all else combined.

But if this bill is to become a law there is no reason that a member of the Congress of the United States should have $4,000 of his salary that is paid him by the people go free from taxation. There should be no exemption above that of say $600 per annum, which is about the average wages of the laboring man of the country.

It has been charged by those who profess to believe that every step toward free trade is a step in the direction of national prosperity and happiness—it has been charged, I say, by these gentlemen that protection of American industries tends to build up a moneyed aristocracy at the expense of a less fortunate democracy. That is, that it tends to make the rich man richer and the poor man poorer.

I do not flatter myself that I shall be able to refute this charge with such power of eloquence and of logic that those who differ with me will at once subscribe themselves as converts to my opinion; but I must say that to me, as a business man, the facts seem to lie so distinctly in one direction, that I can not see how any other conclusion can be reached than this: that while protection has made many men rich it has made no man poor; that it has resulted and can only result in national wealth without inducing individual poverty; and that if great fortunes have been made, such fortune-making has been the logical sequence of this national prosperity, and not at the expense of the individual.

A protective tariff, as I understand it, is simply the impost of such duties as will allow the producer of this country to compete with the producer of other countries, either by keeping out entirely the products of competitive nations or by adding such amounts to their cost by a tax on entry as will enable our producer to market his goods at a fair and legitimate profit. I am aware that gentlemen of great intelligence and far more political acumen than I possess may hold this to be, if not a mistaken at least a debatable proposition; but such is my honest opinion, largely shared in, I believe, by those who are of my political faith. I know that there are gentlemen on the other side who claim that this protective tariff, while it may foster American industries, fosters them only to the benefit of the manufacturers' pocket and to the depletion of the purchasers' pocket. Now, if this were so, it would inevitably follow that the manufacturers of this country would constitute the great millionaire class. But such is not the fact.

The total assessed value of all properties of the United States in the census year, 1890, I am informed, was $64,340,092,988, of which amount no less than $39,544 544,333 represent real estate and the improvements thereon: a division of our wealth in which every property owner of the United States has his share, and whose magnificent figures are due to the vast extent of our territory, to the masterly activity of our people, to their incessant desire for better surroundings, and to the general increment of values. The next largest item is that of transportation agencies; the value of railroads, street cars, shipping, canals, telegraphs, and telephones being $8,399,491,612. The magnitude of these figures, which are decidedly conservative, can hardly be said to be due to the discriminations of a protective tariff, because while the wonderful business of transportation must be undoubtedly ascribed to the movement and development of our products, we are told that the reduction of the tariff would result in an increased energy along all the lines of national and commercial affairs.

The estimated value of live stock on farms and ranges, of farm implements and machinery, is $2,703,015,040, and whether the live stock and the mechanical accessories of agriculture would be of a higher valuation if the cattle ranges and machine shops of the world could send us their yield unchecked, and whether the farmers of the country would be better therefor, is a moot and precarious question.

Our mines and quarries, including the products on hand, are valued at $1,581,964,793, and if these have been developed under a protective tariff, so much the better, and I fail to find clear or valid proof that anyone has been injured by this development.

The value of general merchandise, that is, tradesmen's stock, household and personal effects, grain in elevators, goods in bond, and all exempt State and national properties is $7,893,708,821.

There remain to be noticed only the estimated value of the machinery and the product on hand of mills and factories, $3,058,593,441, and the gold and silver coin and bullion, $1,158,774,948; and it seems to me absurd to seriously advance or combat the proposition that the effect of a protective tariff has been to place either of these two amounts in the centralized control of a few rich men to the detriment of the many poor.

Let us look a little more particularly into this fascinating subject of accumulated riches. That we have a moneyed aristocracy can not be denied, but I find nothing in its composition to show that it has been built up by a protective tariff; nothing that would even indirectly point to that inference. New York to-day, I suppose, contains more rich men than any other city in the world, but its lists of plutocrats is singularly deficient in those millionaire manufacturers who, we are told, have sprung up in the hotbed culture of protection.

The rich men of the West have rolled up millions in railroads and mines, and those of the Central and Southern States chiefly through the manipulation or ownership of agricultural products and live stock. I might add the names of the many millionaire women, rich through shrewd investments, but refrain from introducing them in this discussion. It is a far more difficult task, I find, to start on a list of manufacturers who enjoy a parity of wealth with those I have referred to, and a still more difficult one to trace any connection between their wealth and the protective tariff. Some, it is true, have built up fortunes more or less vast in manufacturing, but it is equally true that they have made these fortunes under the protection of patents and not under the protection of tariff. And these patents upon new inventions have resulted in most every instance in reducing the price of the manufactured articles to the public.

I am aware that the great manufacturing States of the East contain hundreds and thousands of men who have reached opulence through the prosecution of protected industries, but their opulence is a comparative one and not that of the great rich ones of the nation who through real estate, railroads, trusts, and speculation in man's avidity for sudden gain really control the financial balance of the country. This general statement is borne out in an especially forcible way by the detailed facts collected some little time ago by a New York newspaper. A census was at that time taken of all the millionaires in the United States, and a schedule furnished of the source of their wealth.

An actual list of 4,047 persons reputed to be worth a million dollars or more was compiled—of whom, by the bye, no fewer than 1,103 lived in New York City—and the recapitulation of the sources of wealth displayed a very curious and instructive condition of things.

The condensed history of these 4,000 showed that 986 have made their fortunes in merchandising; 188 in mines and mining; 436 in railroads, shipping, and other transportation agencies; 803 in real estate, banking, and kindred occupations; 75 in agricultural pursuits; 93 in patented and proprietary articles; 58 in brokerage; 76 in local investments; 178 in such miscellaneous industries as contracts, hotel-keeping, etc.; 55 through indefinite sources; 65 in law practice, and 1 in that of medicine; 57 in printing and publishing; 357 in such indirectly protected industries as sugar-refining, tobacco-growing, malting, milling, etc.; and 619 in protected manufactures. Thus, from still another set of figures, the same unerring deductions are to be drawn, that a protective tariff is not the cause of the uneven distribution of wealth; that the accretion of great riches is due to the varied causes of temperament, inheritance, fortune, invention, shrewdness, and the rewards of commercial integrity; and that unless the accumulation of riches can be shown to be an evil, the list of millionaires can scarcely be classed as an exemplification of malign laws. There are yet other statistics at command which lift the proposition at issue far above the uncertain limits of hypothesis.

The $3,058,593,441 which I quoted from the stock account of the wealth of the nation represent, it will be remembered, the estimated value of the manufacturers' plant and stock on hand June 30, 1890, while late census figures show that the value of the manufactured products of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1890, was $9,370,107,624—truly a magnificent figure. Yes, but let us look for a moment at its components and distribution. In the first place, the cost of the material was no less than $5,158,868,353, which leaves the net addition to the wealth of the country at $4,211,239,271. Now, what does this sum represent? It represents the wages of the operative, the salary of the clerks, the premium to the artist, the payments on borrowed money, the interest on invested capital, contributions to government, local, State, and national; outlay for wear and tear, insurance, extension of plant, and, sometimes, profit.

The wage account is an interesting one. To 106,620 clerks there was paid $117,574,355, while to all other employés, numbering 4,250,783, there was paid $1,890,908,747, or a total of $2,008,483,102. A simple sum in division will show us that the clerks received an average of a little over $1,100 per annum, while the army of workmen and workwomen and workchildren received an average of nearly $445 per annum. It seems to me that this one group of facts alone settles it that the people—the working people—are they who live and flourish under the benefits of protection. The people, indeed, for it should not be forgotten that the workers to whom the $2,008,483,102 was paid in wages numbered 4,357,403, or one-fifteenth of the entire population of the United States. Nor do these figures take into note the foundries, the machine shops, the architects, contractors, carpenters, and builders, whose services and labors are required as the industry grows; nor the factors and middlemen, nor the hundred and one more or less indirect beneficiaries of the industry. And it is God's blessing that it is so; and it has been our country's blessing and pride that it is so; and we should be careful indeed how we approach the momentous matter of change, and how we warp or modify a condition that has been so productive of general benefit.

No man has a greater appreciation of the intricacies of the tariff than I, nor has any man a better appreciation than I of the exceeding presumption that would mark any attempt on my part to simplify these intricacies. But it sometimes happens that the tyro may single out one proposition which seem likely to escape attention in a general discussion and which may be plainly and pertinently answered by the rules of common sense and business experience. It is to such a proposition that I have ventured to address myself, and it is in such a manner that I have ventured to specially refer to this phase of the subject under discussion.

We rejoice in the general prosperity of the world—all the nations of the earth. We feel a fraternal interest in the people of our own continent who have struggled with us in establishing free governments. We seek by legislation to advance the interests of our own country. In this can we not follow in the path and emulate the deeds of that grand statesman my native State proudly claimed as her own, and who did more than any other to inculcate these doctrines of protection and reciprocity for the good of our land and for sealing the friendships of all our American republics? To him we owe so much and returned so little—he who, standing on the sea-beaten cliffs of Maine, where the morning sun first sheds its beams on our most eastern shore, gazed over the land he loved with every thought of fostering care; over the hills and factories of New England, the great metropolis with its radiating arms of commerce, the rugged masses of the Appalachian chain with their stores of mineral wealth, the long Atlantic coast indented with its many harbors, bays, and rivers; over the fair fields, forests, and orange groves of the Southland, the broad valley of the Mississippi from the great unsalted seas and the countless sparkling lakes of the north to the distant Gulf of Mexico, with all the teeming industries of farms, and mines, and manufactures, and trade of State with State; on over the empire of plains, the lofty Rocky Mountains, seamed with veins of glittering gold and silver; over the high plateaus and the snow-crowned ridge of the golden Sierra, with the genial and fruitful land at its base: on to the Pacific and the islands of the sea; on to the wild shores of Alaska—all his own great country, whose every locality he knew, whose every resource he fostered, whose every interest he guarded with a heart too large for sectionalism, a mind too pure for prejudice, let us, as he, take the broad views, be true and just to all, include all in our embrace, from Maine to California. Dirigo and Eureka!

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE W. H. ENOCHS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the resolutions adopted by the House of Representatives on the occasion of the death of my late colleague in that House, Gen. William H. Enochs, may now be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. William H. Enochs, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the business of the House be suspended in order that the public services and private character of the deceased be thoroughly commemorated.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate, and send a duly attested copy to the widow of the deceased.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of these services the House, as a further mark of respect, do adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility, the announcement of the death of Hon. William H. Enochs, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote on the adoption of the resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the oft-recurring announcement in this Senate Chamber of the death of one of our associates must impress us with our uncertain tenure of human life, as well as of official honors. Death regards no party, age, section, or service. It comes to all, but gives no warning of time or place or circumstance. Vigorous manhood may be the first victim, while feebleness and old age are spared.

The death of my late colleage, Gen. W. H. Enochs, a member of the House of Representatives from Ohio, is a striking example of this law of life and death. After an active life of fifty-one years he had attained a position of honor and usefulness where he could hope to take a leading part in the House of Representatives and prove in that, the highest popular arena of American talent, his marked energy and ability. He was elected a member of the House in 1890 by an overwhelming majority and was re-elected almost without opposition in 1892. He had the affection and confidence of his constituents, and in natural course and by the conservative usage of his people would have been long retained as their Representative, but, unhappily, before entering upon his second term he died, sincerely mourned by his constituents, without distinction of party, and by the people of Ohio who had become familiar with his history.

Though thus untimely cut off, he had lived long enough to furnish a remarkable example of that feature of American life possible only under free institutions. He was a self-made man. He was the architect of his own fortunes. He was born on a farm in Ohio in 1842. His parents were poor. He was their chief dependence for the labor on the farm. He had the advantage of the common country schools of Ohio, and there acquired the habit of study, the love of books, and the ambition to acquire an advanced education. At the age of 18 he entered the college at Athens, Ohio, but before the first year was over, a few days after the firing upon Fort Sumter, he enlisted as a common soldier in a three months' Ohio regiment, the first feeble, and, in view of subsequent events, the ridiculous preparation for a great war. Then only 19 years of age, he proved his aptitude for military drill and discipline and duty. He demonstrated his courage in early conflicts in West Virginia. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, without returning to his home, he enlisted in a West Virginia regiment largely composed of Ohio soldiers, for a term of three years.

A narrative of his life and real adventures would be as interesting as a romance. I have heard his comrades speak of him as an ideal soldier, brave yet cautious, cheerful under the greatest fatigue, resolute and hopeful, and generally successful. It is needless to say that his qualities as a soldier soon gained him promotion. He became lieutenant in December, 1861, and by successive promotions he attained the command of his regiment, and often the actual command of a brigade. He was brevoted brigadier-general at the close of the war for gallant and honorable service in the field. The only obstacle in his way was his youth, which on two occasions delayed his promotion. It was this test of soldierly qualities, this training of body and mind, this struggle for political convictions deeply imbedded in the hearts of both Union and Confederate soldiers that gave to our civil war its fierce energy and destructive results.

Still the war could not be avoided. It was an irrepressible conflict. And next to the preservation of the Union and the abolition of slavery, the chief beneficial result of the war was the respect which the soldiers, both Union and Confederate, had for each other. Typical soldiers like Gen. Enochs, enterprising, brave, and determined, could perceive and acknowledge like qualities in Confederate soldiers, and could regret that human wisdom could devise no method of settling their differences except by destructive war, involving the death or disability of 1,000,000 of men, and the loss of many billions of dollars of property.

When the honorable military career of Gen. Enochs closed he was but 23 years old and a brigadier-general by brevet. His college life was closed by the necessity of earning a livelihood. He commenced the study of the law, and graduated at the Cincinnati Law School in 1866. He soon after commenced the practice of law at Ironton, on the banks of the Ohio River, where he ever since resided. He served one term in the Legislature of Ohio, but declining further service he devoted himself to his profession.

In November, 1890, Gen. Enochs was elected a member of the Fifty-second Congress by a very large majority; and here, as on the battlefield and in his profession, he gained a high reputation for industry, good sense, and ability of a high order. The kindly words spoken of him in the House of Representatives on these resolutions, not only by his colleagues from Ohio but by many others, is the best evidence of the respect in which he was held by them after his brief service in that body. His successor said of him:

Gen. Enochs was a citizen loved by his neighbors, honored and respected by all; he was a philanthropist with a generous hand, and no unfortunate, however poor, ever left his door without having been comforted by his generosity. He was a soldier by instinct, a stranger to fear, a gallant leader whom men were always proud to follow, and whose time and talent in later years were devoted to the cause of his comrades; history shows that he was distinguished in all the lines of service in the Army—in fact, that he was one of the youngest, if not the youngest, commandants of a brigade in the volunteer service. He was a lawyer true to his profession, and exhibited an unfaltering zeal for the success of his clients. He was a statesman of the practical type, with exalted ideas of the obligations which public trust imposes. He was a patriot who loved his country with a jealous love, and was willing, if need be, to lay down his own life in defense of the old flag and the principles which it represents.

I believe that this high eulogy is a truthful, sincere, and just tribute to the character of Gen. Enochs. He left behind him his wife and one child, the chief mourners, but his whole constituency, without distinction of party, share in their grief and have expressed in many ways their respect and affection for their late Representative.

Mr. BRICE. Mr. President, the grim reaper has been a busy harvester in the Ohio delegation since my service began in this body, and it is my sad duty to address my associates on the untimely death of one of the most honored and patriotic sons whom the State of Ohio has sent to the national capital.

On July 12, 1893, Hon. William H. Enochs, representing the Tenth District of Ohio, died suddenly at his home in Ironton. By his death there was taken from the public service a Representative whose whole career, both public and private, evinced the highest qualities of manhood and patriotism; one who walked fearlessly in the path of duty in peace and in war, and who has left behind him memories which will long be cherished, though he now sleeps beneath the sod. It was, perhaps, the most fitting end that a hero of his soldierly mold should die in the service of the country for which he had through stormy years battled and bled.

Gen. Enochs was a native of Ohio, having been born in Noble County, March 29, 1842. Reared upon a farm, his field of opportunities was not widespread, but such advantages as he obtained he wrested mainly from adverse circumstances by his own courage and endurance. His parents were sturdy and honest, though not more prosperous than was usual with the Western farmer of that day. From them he inherited the qualities of sterling integrity which were maintained throughout his lifetime, a heritage more potent for honorable success than any that a wealthy ancestry could bestow.

The conditions that surrounded him during his boyhood days on the farm were natural and rational, doubtless contributing much to that evenness of character and sturdiness of purpose which in later years marked his demeanor in the tumults of battle as well as in the pursuits of peace.

His early education was had in the common schools; but with an inborn disposition to lift himself to loftier heights he became a teacher, and from his savings in this capacity secured the means to attend college. What might have been the outcome in this direction as the result of his studious habits and his faculty for application we can never know, for the call to arms of 1861 turned the current of his life into the seething channel of a bloody conflict. He was but nineteen years of age when he enlisted as a private, unconscious that the future had in store for him the epaulettes of a brigadier-general. But that was the sequel with which a deserving fate rounded out his army life. It was the pride of his friends, though he was personally modest concerning the subject, that in five years, including some of the hardest campaigning of the war, he had risen from a private through all the intermediate grades to the high rank and honorable distinction of brigadier-general. There hardly exists a prouder military record than is contained in the mere statement of that fact, and it is made more conspicuous when it is recalled that these honors came to him not by a succession of fortunate accidents or the operation of kindly favoritism, but were earned on grim and deadly fields of battle.

During the war he participated in ten important engagements, and a much larger number of minor battles and skirmishes. At the battle of Winchester, near the close of the war, he received a well-nigh fatal wound, a bullet from the enemy traversing one side of his skull, but fortunately not penetrating.

You must pardon me if I have dwelt somewhat at length upon the military achievements of this admirable soldier, but the glories of war are ever dazzling. In viewing them, however, the honorable career of Gen. Enochs as a citizen and a legislator has not been forgotten. Sheathing his sword when the turmoil of the great conflict had subsided, he prepared himself for the practice of law, which thereupon became his chosen profession. After he was admitted to the bar he became known as a practical, clear-headed lawyer, a reputation which he not only sustained but increased during the entire period of his long practice.

In 1869 the allurements of politics diverted him from the law for the time being, and he was elected to the State Legislature. The attractions of that body evidently did not fulfill all his expectations, for after one term of service he declined to again be a candidate for the position, and returned to his law office.

In 1890 Gen. Enochs was nominated and elected as a member of the House of Representatives from the district in which he resided, beginning his active duties when the Fifty-second Congress was organized. He devoted himself faithfully to the duties he had been called upon by his people to assume, looking after the material interests of his locality, and at the same time giving studious attention to the broader issues involved in national affairs. He was known to his associates as an earnest and thoughtful worker in the committees to which he was assigned, where his practical qualities were most valuable.

His services in the capacity of a member of the House of Representatives were pleasing to his constituents, and without dissent he was nominated and elected to the present Congress. It was not his fate nor the fortune of his country that he should serve out that trust. A short time before the assembling of the Fifty-third Congress the hand of death lifted him from earth; and at his desk, where on the meeting day would have been handshakings and reunions, were found the somber emblems of grief.

Mr. President, in paying tribute this afternoon to this dead soldier and statesman we are doing honor to manhood, integrity, and courage. To the student of events, I point out his proud record as it is written on the pages of the history of his country. It is more eloquent than words that I may speak; more lasting than praises launched upon the echoes of this Chamber.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a further mark of respect to the memory of my late colleague in the House of Representatives, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 20, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1134) to create the southern judicial district of the State of Texas and to fix the times and places of holding courts in said district and in the eastern and western judicial districts of said State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. MORSE, for two weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. BARTHOLDT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia, for this day, on account of sickness.

BRIDGE OVER THE MONONGAHELA RIVER AT PITTSBURG.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6055) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River in the city of Pittsburg.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this bill is in the usual form?

Mr. DALZELL. It is in the regular form of bridge bills, and has been approved by the War Department.

Mr. SAYERS. And reported from the committee?

Mr. DALZELL. Reported favorably from the committee. It contemplates a free bridge to be built by the city of Pittsburg.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand this is to authorize the erection of a bridge across the Monongahela River at Pittsburg?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. There are cities on both sides?

Mr. DALZELL. Cities situated on both sides of the river.

Mr. KILGORE. Is the river already crossed by bridges?

Mr. DALZELL. The river is already crossed by three or four bridges, but they are all toll-bridges, and the purpose of this act is to authorize the construction by the city of a free bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL. I move to amend by inserting in the ninth line of the first page, after the word "the," the word "twenty-fifth;" so that it will read:

In the Twenty-fifth ward.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARY LEVANS.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5925) granting a pension to Mary Levans.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire if this bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole at a Friday night session?

Mr. MOSES. It has not been so considered, Mr. Speaker; but I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this bill is unanimously reported by the committee. This old lady is now about 100 years old, and is in the poorhouse. Her husband fought under Jackson, and yet that war of 1817 was not covered by any general pension law. In consideration of the fact that we can only consider one or two bills here on any Friday night, it will take a month or two to reach this bill.

Mr. KILGORE. There is a regular course for the transaction of this business, and I can not afford to stand here and consent that the regular order with reference to this kind of a bill be suspended. I must object. Business ought to go on in the regular order anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, which I have been authorized by the Committee on Pacific Railroads to report favorably to the House. It is a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Interior to furnish information concerning first-mortgage bonds issued by and under the acts of 1862 and 1864 to aid in the construction of railroad lines to the Pacific Ocean.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the House of Representatives any information he may have, or can ascertain, as to what provision (other than the sinking fund now maintained in the United States Treasury under the act of May 7, 1878) the railroad corporations to whom bonds were issued by the United States under the acts of 1862 and 1864, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, have made or propose to make for the payment at maturity of the bonds issued by said corporations, respectively, which are a prior lien to the bonds issued by the United States under the acts aforesaid, and whether any of such bonds are held and owned by either of said companies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution of inquiry. Is there objection?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Why should not that resolution go to the appropriate committee?

Mr. REILLY. It has; and we have reported it back for consideration.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Very well.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, but no reports were made.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The CHAIRMAN. Under order of the House, adopted yesterday, there remain forty minutes to be allotted to the minority and fifteen minutes to be allotted to the majority, of general debate.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, during my absence from the House yesterday afternoon attending to public business in the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations, I notice that there were some statements made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] and by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] relative to ex-Minister Stevens, a distinguished citizen of my own State, which I desire to notice. The gentleman from Kentucky was pleased to say in the course of his remarks:

When the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania was perhaps making his canvass in that State, the Hawaiian question was considered and discussed in the House of Representatives for five days, and during the heat of his canvass it may have escaped the attention of my distinguished friend. I shall simply dismiss that subject now by reading for his benefit the action of the House of Representatives when that question was under consideration.

Then the gentleman read the first resolution adopted by this House.

Resolved, first. That it is the sense of this House that the action of the United States minister in employing United States naval forces and illegally aiding in overthrowing the constitutional Government of the Hawaiian Islands * * * was contrary to the traditions of our Republic. * * *

Subsequently, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] was pleased to say:

The truth is that Mr. Stevens had landed the troops to effect a revolution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be true that in the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] this resolution, adopted by the House by 99 majority, as he said, is res adjudicata as he said, so far as this House is concerned, but it is not so far as public opinion of this country is concerned. Neither will it go down in history when that history shall be correctly written.

I desire simply, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs upon this subject, and to what they have to say with reference to Minister Stevens. It should be noted, too, that no testimony was taken by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House on the resolution which they reported, and the vote taken by this House was without any information so far as any evidence was concerned, except so far as was contained in Mr. Blount's report.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Is it not true that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives had about a hundred affidavits and statements of citizens of the Hawaiian Islands, furnished by Mr. Blount in his report?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know what affidavits the gentleman may have had in this matter beyond those contained in Mr. Blount's report.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. We had the report of Mr. Blount.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was of an ex parte character, and presenting substantially but one side.

Mr. HITT. There was nothing before the Committee on Foreign Affairs except the Blount report.

Mr. DINGLEY. There was nothing before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Illinois states, except the Blount report.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. We had before our committee over a hundred affidavits, made by prominent persons of Honolulu.

Mr. DINGLEY. But they were ex parte affidavits taken by Mr. Blount, and presented only on one side.

What I desire to call the attention of the committee to on this subject and what I desire to go into the RECORD is the fact that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate made a thorough investigation and had before them gentlemen who were familiar with and had a personal knowledge of all that occurred at Honolulu in this case, and that the chairman of that committee, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, in his report, made the following statement with reference to this point:

Justice to these gentlemen [Mr. Stevens and Capt. Wiltse] requires that we should say that the troops from the Boston were not sent into Honolulu for any other purpose than that set forth fully and fairly in the following order from Capt. Wiltse to the officer in command of the detachment:

"UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP BOSTON (SECOND RATE),
"Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, January 16, 1893.

"SIR: You will take command of the battalion and land in Honolulu for the purpose of protecting our legation, consulate, and the lives and property of American citizens, and to assist in preserving public order.

"Great prudence must be exercised by both officers and men, and no action taken that is not fully warranted by the condition of affairs and by the conduct of those who may be inimical to the treaty rights of American citizens.

"You will inform me at the earliest practicable moment of any change in the situation.

"Very respectfully,

"G. C. WILTSE,
Captain, United States Navy,
Commanding United States Steamship Boston.

"Lieut. Commander W. T. SWINBURNE, United States Navy,
"Executive Officer, United States Steamship Boston."

And Senator MORGAN goes on to say:

The committee, upon the evidence as it appears in their report (which they believe is a full, fair, and impartial statement of the facts attending the precedent to the landing of the troops), agree that the purposes of Capt. Wiltse and of Minister Stevens were only those which were legitimate, viz, the preservation of law and order to the extent of preventing a disturbance of the public peace which might, in the absence of the troops, injuriously affect the rights of the American citizens resident in Honolulu.

Could there be any more complete refutation of the contention of the other side than that which I have quoted coming from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate after having thoroughly investigated this whole subject and presented in the report written by the distinguished chairman of that committee, Senator MORGAN of Alabama, a distinguished Democrat?

Further, Senator MORGAN in his report, goes on to say:

It is not a just criticism upon the correspondence of Minister Stevens with his Government that he earnestly advocated annexation. In this he was in line with Mr. Marcy and nearly every one of his successors as Secretary of State, and with many of Mr. Stevens's predecessors as minister to Hawaii.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my purpose in calling attention to the investigation made by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and to the report submitted by the chairman of that committee, Senator MORGAN of Alabama, is simply to show that the action of the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, and the adoption of the resolution which they reported, by the House, under the partisan spur that was put upon it, without hearing a single witness, without any knowledge as to the real facts in the case, is contrary to the recorded facts as ascertained and determined by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and is not res adjudicata in the sense claimed by the gentleman from Kentucky, as the gentleman from Kentucky yesterday said it was. I desire further to say to the gentleman that the decision which the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate reached will be that which history will approve.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Is it not true that the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate was compelled to confine its examination to such witnesses as were in the United States, having only between fifteen and eighteen persons to examine; whereas Mr. Blount, being at Honolulu, had an opportunity of taking the testimony, and did take the testimony, of those in office, of those out of office, of merchants, of sugar planters, of laboring men, of every class of people?

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky know that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate informed the Senate and the country that that committee had availed themselves of every source of information relative to this matter, and that he in his report, reaching the conclusions which I have read, states that the facts therein presented are unquestionably the truth in this case?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And that committee had Mr. Blount's report before them when they reached this conclusion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly, they had Mr. Blount's report before them, as the gentleman from New York suggests.

Now, without any attempt to impugn Mr. Blount's veracity, I desire to say that it is evident from the witnesses he examined that he went there with a certain view of the case impressed upon his mind, and that the testimony he took was all on one side, and selected because it was on one side.

Mr. SICKLES. And there was no opportunity to cross-examine witnesses there while the witnesses examined by the Senate committee were cross-examined.

Mr. DINGLEY. And, as the gentleman from New York [Mr.

SICKLES] well observes, the witnesses examined by Mr. Blount at Honolulu were not cross-examined.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. They were not sworn either—many of them.

Mr. DINGLEY. The witnesses examined at Honolulu were, many of them, not sworn, and none of them were cross-examined; while the witnesses produced before the Senate committee were cross-examined at length by the able Senator from Delaware, Mr. GRAY, as well as Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that all the witnesses examined by Mr. Blount were not sworn.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. He does not say that. He says that some of them were not.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know ex-Minister Stevens very well. I have known him for more than thirty years, and a more honorable, high-minded, truthful man than he does not live. He is a gentleman who has had more experience in diplomatic matters than almost any other man in this country, three or four excepted. He is a prudent man; he is a wise man; he is a man of the greatest integrity of character, a man whose statements will be believed to the fullest extent by every citizen in our State who knows him. He testifies as to that which he saw personally, not that which he heard; whereas Mr. Blount had no personal knowledge respecting what occurred at Honolulu, but obtained all his information at second hand.

It is not a question of veracity as between ex-Minister Stevens and Mr. Blount; because, I repeat, Mr. Stevens testifies to that which he saw, to that which he observed from day to day, while Mr. Blount had no personal knowledge of the matters in controversy. And I have felt it my duty, Mr. Chairman, at this time, not having been present when the discussion was had in the House, having been confined to my room by illness, to present these convincing facts entirely sustaining Mr. Stevens. I repeat the statement that ex-Minister Stevens, who has testified as to that which he saw, has a character for veracity in the State of Maine which would cause his statement to be taken as absolute verity, and it is certainly a great pleasure to me that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, instead of endeavoring to conceal the facts in this matter, instead of endeavoring to prevent the facts from coming out, instead of undertaking to defend the unjustifiable and wicked policy of the Administration toward Hawaii, as was done here in the House, sought to investigate the entire case; and notwithstanding the members of that committee were of both political parties, a majority, led by the Senator from Alabama, concurred in a conclusion as to the facts in accord with the report of Mr. Stevens.

It is certainly a source of pride to me, knowing ex-Minister Stevens as well as I do—having the utmost confidence as I have in him—to find that the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, after having investigated this matter and heard witnesses as to what were the actual facts—witnesses who saw what transpired—have been enabled (Senator Morgan, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, having written the report) to report that the statement of Minister Stevens of what took place in Honolulu is substantially correct. And that is already the verdict of the people and will be the verdict of history. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains on our side?

The CHAIRMAN. The minority have twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. HITT. Unless some gentleman on the other side is ready to proceed now, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] may be recognized.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to speak at this time, I have a word to say in response to a query raised yesterday by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], which I did not hear when he raised it. The query was, "What motive could this Administration have for undertaking to restore an overthrown monarchy?" I do not know what their motive was; but if I were to assign one, it would be an overmastering spirit of envious jealousy of successful political rivals—an eagerness to undo everything that it was in their power to undo which had been done by a previous Administration. Thus this Administration comes in to reverse the glorious traditions of our whole history, and with an attempted denial of undisputed facts turns the influence of this Government against a liberty-loving people which had struggled with and overthrown a half-civilized despotism.

I do not care how the Hawaiian Republic came into being. It is enough that it came on the ruins of a depotism; and it has maintained its position from the hour its independence was asserted to this. A majority in this House, in order to justify the course which it has taken, has construed every doubtful or disputed fact in favor of despotism and a defunct monarchy.

I care not what the motive may have been, it is enough, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has just shown and the committee of the Senate has shown—and on this part of the report of Mr. MORGAN the committee was unanimous—that Mr. Blount in making his report to the President acted on insufficient evidence. Yet, members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs read to us resolutions adopted by a majority of the House condemnatory of their own country in its dealings with other nations struggling for institutions like ours, and would have us hence infer that the question of the propriety of that action is conclusive.

Mr. Chairman, I do not forget that the blackest chapter in American history was written in the blood of the pioneer settlers of Kansas, with the aid and cooperation of the Administration of James Buchanan, who found in the party zeal of the majority of this House and of the other at that time vindication and support. The chapter of next darkest hue in our history is being written by this Administration in the injustice and wrong heaped upon the liberty-loving people of the Hawaiian Islands in their struggle against a half-civilized despotism from which they have escaped. In the days of the struggle for freedom in Kansas, the greatest outrage perpetrated in our history, partisan zeal led a majority then on this floor and on the floor of the Senate to defend and uphold it. The last outrage by an Administration of our Government upon the liberty and the rights of freemen, finds in the partisan zeal of the majority now a defense and apology. It is but history repeating itself. [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5276) to authorize Commander F. W. Dickins, of the United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the cross of naval merit of the third class from the King of Spain.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5978) to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556) "to provide for further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1860) to authorize Prof. Asaph Hall, of the United States Navy, to accept a gold medal from the Academy of Science of France; and Joint resolution (S. R. 74) for the proper enrollment of Thomas R. Proctor in the Navy of the United States.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], formerly minister to Brazil.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit for the consideration of this House a brief statement which I think will illustrate the difference between the policy of the Republican party in foreign affairs and that of the present Administration.

On the 15th day of November the monarchy in Brazil existed in full force, and as far as human foresight could see there was no disposition to disturb the then existing form of government. But within twenty-four hours the spirit of liberty which our forefathers brought with them when they landed on Plymouth Rock, and which had made its progress southward with the steadiness and firmness of the rock on which they landed, asserted itself in Brazil, where existed the last vestige of monarchical government on the continents of North and South America.

The spirit had grown to such an extent that it was bound to assert itself when occasion arose, even against such a good monarch as the late Dom Pedro II of Brazil. In twenty-four hours a de facto government had been established, with every department of the Government in full swing; and the foreign representatives at the late court of Brazil were cut off from their home governments by cable, and had presented to them the great American question, "Now, what are you going to do about it?"

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who had the honor at that time to represent his country at the court of Brazil was a Republican, and of the same political faith as the distinguished gentleman who represented his country in Hawaii. There was no doubt in his mind of the sympathy of the great statesman, who was a real Republican, who then occupied the chair of state, and that he would be heart and soul in favor of the foundation of a new republic. And going to the Provisional Government which had been established, the American representative demanded that communication be opened at once with his home Government. It was granted, and his dispatch went off and was received by the Secretary of State.

What did the great Secretary of State at that time, James G. Blaine, do? In three days he replied, "You will maintain diplomatic relations with the Provisional Government." And the mother of Republics in the north had the great privilege of being the first Government on the face of the earth to recognize the new republic in the south. [Applause on the Republican side.] What is the history of the Democratic party in a similar case? When on the adjacent islands, the continent already being free, imitating the example of Brazil and wishing to wipe out even from the adjacent land the effete government of monarchy, the people appealed to the Republican Administration, the same principle of liberty prevailed and the same cordial reception was given by the Republican Administration; and to-day Honolulu would be republican in form and owe its existence to the United States were it not that, unfortunately, in the interim the political power of this country was changed, and we had that party come into power that seems to love and be imbued with the doctrines of Great Britain in free trade, monarchy, and every other doctrine that can be found in the text books of England; and the sympathy when it was asked was refused, and the treaty withdrawn from the Senate, to the everlasting shame of the mother of Republics on the American continent, and the new republic in the islands on the sea received no sympathy; and to-day she stands knocking at our door, still asking to be recognized. That appeal is still unheeded, as it was in the beginning of the struggling republic; it has been refused.

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the difference between the foreign policy of the liberty-loving Republicans and the Democrats, who seem to have sympathy with monarchies, both in their forms of government and in their treatment of its own laws. I have stated these facts, and had no desire to again participate in this discussion; but when I knew that this contract existed it seemed to me that it should go forth to the people and the country, that they may know which party to support in the foreign policy of this Government in the days that are to come. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COOMBS. They know that already.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky desires to proceed now——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman has exhausted all the time they desire to exhaust on that side we will go on.

Mr. HITT. We will not consume more time, as I understand the gentleman from Kentucky does not intend to occupy further time on that side.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. How much time is remaining on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Illinois decline to occupy further time?

Mr. HITT. Unless the gentleman from Kentucky says something to which we desire to reply, we have no desire to occupy further time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. But I have the right to conclude that debate, and have fifteen minutes. If the gentleman wishes to go on on that side he must go on now, or under the rule I will seek the floor to close the debate.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman has that right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair is ready to recognize any gentleman of the minority to consume the time remaining to that side. If no gentleman on that side desires recognition the gentleman from Kentucky will be recognized to close the debate.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will pardon me, I do not know by what rule the Chair may deprive the minority of its time, if it wishes to occupy it. As I understand it, the Chair says the minority must take its time now, and if it does not take the time the gentleman from Kentucky will be recognized to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will reflect a moment, he will recall the fact that on yesterday afternoon, by unanimous agreement in the House, it was determined that general debate would close in one hour and fifteen minutes, one hour of which time should be allotted to the minority and fifteen minutes to the majority.

The minority, in pursuance of that agreement, have consumed something like forty-four minutes. The majority have consumed no time at all. The Chair announces his readiness to recognize any gentleman of the minority to consume the remainder of the minority's time. If no gentleman on that side desires to be recognized, the gentleman from Kentucky having reported this bill is entitled to close the debate.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have no objection to the Chair recognizing the gentleman from Kentucky, but I understood the Chair to recognize him upon terms, namely, that the fifteen minutes of the minority be forfeited.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit the Chair, the Chair will suggest that there are sixteen minutes remaining to the minority; and that the Chair is ready to recognize gentlemen of the minority for that time. But if there is no gentleman who desires to occupy it, then the Chair will recognize the right of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], who has charge of the bill, to close the debate.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does the Chair hold that the minority, having time twice as extended as the majority, shall be forced to consume all their time before the majority say a word?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that the gentleman having the bill in charge, under the rule, undoubtedly has the right to conclude the debate. The Chair thinks the rule is explicit on that subject.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair permit me to state what has been the custom of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. REED. The custom of the House has always been that if the minority do not choose to take their time, the majority may then conclude without further debate, but if they go on with their debate, the time that is allotted to the other side may be taken. The only method of forcing the minority to take the whole time is the coercion which results from a vote. I think the Chair, upon examination, will find that that has been the invariable custom.

For example, under the fifteen-minute rule, after the motion for the previous question, fifteen minutes being allowed on either side, there is no regulation as to how that time shall be taken. If the minority say they prefer to reserve their time, and the other side do not desire to speak, why, then, they go to a vote. On the other hand, if the minority take part of their time and the other side insist upon their going on and finishing it up, why I suppose they must do it, unless they go to a vote; but the minority can not be deprived of its time under the custom of the House. I think that has been the custom of the House always in similar cases. It is, however, usual for the affirmative to close.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word. I have endeavored during this debate to be as courteous and fair as I knew how to be. Yesterday gentlemen on the other side consumed more than half the time, and in the afternoon, when I asked that the debate might be limited, in order to be perfectly fair I agreed to take fifteen minutes on this side and to give them an hour. Now they are contending for the violation of a rule that has always existed. I am entitled to close this debate, as the Chair has intimated, and they have this morning occupied about forty minutes. I shall only occupy fifteen minutes, and I am surprised that gentlemen on the other side should contend for any change in the rules and precedents, or any change in the time.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have been here a good while, and I do not think I have ever seen such a rule observed as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has referred to. Invariably, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in charge of the bill has the right, under the custom of the House, to open the debate, and he has the right to conclude it. Now, when it was agreed last evening that an hour should be granted to the minority, and only fifteen minutes reserved to this side of the House, the Chair has intimated very properly that the gentlemen on the other side should consume their time. If there had been an equal division of time it would have been very proper, and I think has constantly been the custom of the House, to alternate between the members on one side and the other; but a large proportion of the time granted for general debate has been accorded to the other side of the House, and only a few minutes reserved to the chairman of the committee on this side, and I think the uniform rule of the House in all cases is to allow the gentleman having a measure in charge to close the debate.

Mr. REED. What the gentleman says, and the rule, which see the Chair has before him, refers to the closing of debate in the normal way, without agreement. But always when there has been an agreement, I think the custom is as I have stated. Whether anybody ought to insist is purely a question of courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the force of what the gentleman from Maine states, as to when the previous question is ordered; but the Chair thinks that this matter is controlled by a different rule. The Chair thinks in this instance that the unanimous agreement of the House to close debate with an hour on one side and fifteen minutes on another still preserves the rule of the House under which the gentleman reporting the measure is entitled to close debate, the only difference being that instead of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs having an hour in which to close debate, he would only have fifteen minutes, in accordance with the unanimous agreement. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rule the effect of that agreement is to limit the gentleman from Kentucky to fifteen minutes instead of one hour, but does not impair his right to close debate.

Mr. HITT. If the Chair will permit me, I will state that my object in making the point was, it might operate as a hardship for one side to be compelled to make their whole debate before the other side began and before there had been any statement of the side of the gentleman, but I did not claim, and do not claim, that we should have the right to close debate.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I had expected to speak upon this measure under the five-minute rule, but as there seems to be a little time undisposed of, I give notice to the House that at the proper time I will offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 16, strike out the words "Hawaiian Islands," and on line 18 strike out the words "seven thousand five hundred dollars;" the object of this amendment being to strike out of the appropriation entirely the allowance of the minister to the Sandwich Islands. The reason for this proposition, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: This House was compelled, under a rule brought in by the Committee on Rules, at the dictation and request of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to discuss the whole Sandwich Island question at a time when President Dole had made a statement of his case and had presented it to Minister Willis, and Mr. Willis had withheld it until the sailing of the next ship; and we discussed the matter while this evidence was supposed to be upon the high seas between Hawaii and California.

It was an unheard-of and a remarkable proceeding for the House to take up a question involving great interests to the people of this Union, affecting the rights of the Government of the Sandwich Islands, and discuss it while the evidence upon the side of the defendant Government was en route, to be laid before Congress. Not only that, sir, but a committee in the Senate was, at the very time we had the hearing here, engaged in discussing the question and taking testimony; and after this House had acted thus, with its eyes closed against the evidence refusing to hear the evidence, whilst we were thus acting prematurely, the Senate were going on quietly and in a methodical way taking testimony. That testimony was subsequently laid before the nation, and to-day we may meet this question in the light of that evidence, and in the light of President Dole's statement.

In view of this additional testimony we ought to say that when we sent a minister to the Provisional Government of the Sandwich Islands, and that minister so far forgot his duty to the Government to which he was accredited as to advise it to resign and turn over its affairs to a government that the people had already condemned and turned out, that the least that this House can do is to say that the power which commands the purse strings of the nation shall cut off all allowance for a minister who seems to forget that he is an American citizen. I think we ought to indorse the earnest words of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] when he said, in his report:

When a crown falls in any kingdom of the western hemisphere it is pulverized, and when a scepter departs it departs forever.

This is the only way in which we can review the action then taken by the House. There is only one way that Minister Willis can be reached, and that is by striking out this appropriation. It is best for the House and the best interests of the country to strike out the appropriation, cut off the supplies of that minister, and call him home.

The CHAIRMAN. The minority still have twelve minutes remaining. The Chair is ready to recognize any gentleman on that side who desires to address the committee.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire particularly to discuss the items in the pending bill, and am perfectly content to leave the general matter of the reference made here to a distinguished citizen of the district which I have the honor to represent, the Hon. John Wanamaker, as it was presented by my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] on yesterday. But there is one thing in the statement made by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs which I do desire to correct. He stated that previous to his appointment as Postmaster-General Mr. Wanamaker was politically unknown. Mr. Wanamaker may not have had a national reputation as a leading Republican, but he did have a State reputation, and was as widely known as an active participant in political affairs as either the honorable gentleman who has recently been appointed Senator from the State of Georgia, or the junior Senator from the State of New Jersey, or many other gentlemen who have been chosen to Cabinet and other high positions in this nation, at the time of their selection.

As far back as 1882 the Republicans of Pennsylvania turned with practical unanimity to Mr. Wanamaker, and desired that he should become the candidate of the Republican party of Pennsylvania for the honorable position of Representative-at-Large in the Congress of the United States, and it was only the disinclination of Mr. Wanamaker to accede to their request which prevented him from being the unanimous choice of the Republican State convention of Pennsylvania at that time. He has been widely known as an active participant in every national contest for the last twenty years, has been upon prominent committees of advisers in reference to the conduct of political campaigns, and in the State of Pennsylvania he has been as widely known and as highly respected as a leading and active Republican as he was nationally known as a business man of exceptional ability and of undoubted and unquestioned integrity.

The CHAIRMAN. The minority have still nine minutes remaining. The Chair will recognize the gentleman on that side who desires to be heard. [A pause.] If no gentleman of the minority desires to address the committee, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether the debate upon the other side has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the minority still had some time remaining, and that the Chair was ready to recognize any gentleman on that side who desired to address the committee, but no one responding, the Chair then said that if no member of the minority desired to be heard he would recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. How much time have we left on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Nine minutes.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I take the floor and yield the time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I beg pardon; I am not asking for any of the gentleman's time. I simply desire to know whether debate on that side is concluded.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the Chair, I will occupy a minute in putting on record here a single sentence from the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in relation to the Hawaiian Islands. It will be found on page 17 of the majority report, written by Senator MORGAN of Alabama, the chairman of the committee, and is as follows:

When a crown falls in any kingdom in the western hemisphere it is pulverized, and when a scepter departs it departs forever; and American opinion can not sustain any American ruler in the attempt to restore them, no matter how virtuous and sincere the reasons may be that seem to justify him.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, am I recognized to close the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the gentlemen on the other side have been so nervous both yesterday and this morning. The last Administration brought about such a complication of our foreign affairs that the friends of that Administration find it necessary to do all they can to extricate it from its embarrassing position. My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], who I believe was the last minister to Brazil under a Republican Administration, referred this morning to the case of Brazil.

Evidently the gentleman had not examined carefully the history of the proceedings in this House when he endeavored to use that case to illustrate the splendid foreign policy of the last Republican Administration. That Administration halted and hesitated about recognizing the Republic of Brazil, and did not recognize it until I had the honor to introduce a resolution here calling upon the President to inform the House why the Republic of Brazil had not been recognized. Then, when the Democratic party held up to the world the failure of this Republic to recognize Brazil as a republic, the Republican Administration tardily made the recognition.

But, since the gentleman has chosen to go into the foreign policy of the last Administration, I will endeavor to give him information which he does not seem to possess. It was said here yesterday that an effort had been made to put back a dusky Queen on the throne of the Hawaiian Islands. Let me refresh the recollection of the distinguished gentleman who made that statement. Mr. Harrison's Administration was rendered conspicuous by the fact that within the first four months of his Presidency he appointed commissioners to meet at Berlin commissioners from Germany and Great Britain, by whom a tripartite alliance was agreed upon for the purpose of putting back upon the throne of Samoa a savage king called Malietoa.

Mr. McMILLIN. While my friend is on that question, he will bear in mind also (if he will permit the interruption) that this Government was forced to pay a part of the expenses of that kingly government.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am coming to that. Not only did the last Republican Administration indorse the action of Mr. Phelps and his associates who met the commissioners of Germany and Great Britain at Berlin and united with them in putting a savage King on the throne of Samoa, but Mr. Phelps was rewarded for his services by being made minister to Germany. Under that agreement we are paying to-day a part of the salary of the chief justice of Samoa, who has more power than the King of Samoa. And we did help for a while to pay the expenses of maintaining the King on the throne. And that same treaty contains tariff regulations for Samoa.

Therefore, when gentlemen are rolling under their tongues as a sweet morsel the statement, which I deny, that there has been an effort on the part of this Government to put the Queen back by force on the throne of Hawaii, they should remember what was done in Samoa.

But while I am on the foreign policy of the last Administration, let me give you another chapter. There was a little trouble down in Chile, and this great Government, representing 65,000,000 of people, acting through the President of the United States, Mr. Harrison, sent to this House what was almost equivalent to a declaration of war against Chile after the chief executive of Chile had sent an apology.

Mr. HITT. But not after it was received.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It was a humiliating spectacle that the President of the United States should send to this House and to the Senate a war message when a dispatch had already been received—and the date will show it—I had a copy of it at the time—which showed that that Government in Chile had agreed to make any reparation and any apology which might be deemed necessary for the incident which had occurred in Chile.

But I have only a little time and must hurry on. My friend, the new member from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], could certainly have not referred to the foreign policy of the last Administration if he had been in the United States at the time and had an opportunity to study it. But he was absent as minister to Brazil. Let me give him another chapter.

I now refer to the Bering Sea policy of the last Administration. When Russia controlled Alaska and the waters of Behring Sea, and Canadian sealing vessels went into those waters, the Czar of Russia sent his warships there and said, "The seals at Pribilof Islands belong to Russia, and if you interfere with them I will sink your vessels."

After our Government acquired Alaska by paying $6,000,000 to Russia we received $300,000 per annum for our sealing interests at Pribilof Islands, and later we received $150,000 per annum. But when Canadian sealing vessels interfered with our industry, what was the vigorous policy determined upon by the Republican Administration? They said, "We would like to arbitrate this question." And the award was against us. Our distinguished commissioners, Justice Harlan and Senator MORGAN, did the best they could; but when they went before that court of arbitration, composed of two gentlemen from Great Britain, one from France, one from Norway and Sweden, and one from Italy, they found they could not get what they desired.

The result was, a decision was rendered by the court of arbitration which greatly injured, if it does not destroy, our sealing interests, because on the fifth point submitted to the court of arbitration it was held that we had only the right of protection and the right of property in seals within the 3-mile limit. That is another illustration of the foreign policy of the last Administration.

Now let me call attention to the last point to which I desire to refer—the Hawaiian policy of the last Administration, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] has been compelled to make three speeches on this floor to elucidate, and which is still very much befogged.

Mr. Harrison, as President of the United States, sent to the Senate for confirmation a treaty which he had negotiated, within thirty days after that "peaceable revolution" at Honolulu; and in that treaty he recommended that this country pay three million and a quarter of dollars out of our Treasury into the treasury of Hawaii; that we pay to the Queen an annuity of $20,000, and that we give to the Princess the sum of $150,000. If that Queen had no rights—if she was lawfully deposed—if, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania claimed yesterday, she was not a lawful Queen and the people who loved a republic had rightfully taken charge o the Government, then why did the President of the United States, Mr. Harrison, recommend that we pay three million and a quarter of dollars for the Hawaiian Islands, together with an annuity of $20,000 to the Queen and a donation of $150,000 to the Princess? I have already on this floor discussed this question at length. I have not time to go into it now, further than to say that I believe—and I think I showed this in an argument which I made on this floor a few weeks ago—that Minister Stevens in his conduct at Honolulu violated international law, violated his instructions, violated all the precedents of the past, and violated the Constitution, and that this House properly condemned him.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman is mistaken, I think, in his statement. The country does not believe it, and he can not make the country believe it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I did not yield to the gentleman from Maine, but will answer his statement.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Of course, I knew the gentleman would be always courteous.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The gentleman has the honor of representing the district in which Mr. Stevens resides, and it is very natural and proper that the gentleman should stand up and defend one of his constituents. But the Representatives of the people of the United States, by 99 majority on this floor, have put the seal of condemnation on the action of Mr. Stevens at Honolulu.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman will let me suggest that that does not represent the people of the United States——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky declines to be interrupted.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I listened on yesterday with surprise, and I may say with amusement, to the political speeches that were made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as well as by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. It is strange how easily men who have suffered political defeat can become elated. There have been a few elections held in cities in the United States [derisive laughter on the Republican side], and the elation and enthusiasm, as well as the glorification of the Republicans on the other side of the House over the result, is without a parallel in political history.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There was an election in the State of Pennsylvania, for instance.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. But all I ask you is to wait until the regular elections are held in November [renewed laughter on the Republican side]—wait until the Democratic party is heard from in the various States of this Union, and after the elections in November next you will find that the Democracy is again triumphant and Democrats will again have a majority in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In this day of Republican exultation—I wish I had time to picture the enthusiasm and arrogance of Republicans when they took possession of every branch of the Government in 1889 and their defeat and overthrow in 1892——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allotted for debate by order of the House has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky be permitted to continue his prophecy of the future of the Democratic party.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky (continuing). I say, Mr. Chairman, in this day of exultation on the other side, I would like to be permitted to remind Republican Representatives of their Waterloo in 1892, and of their condemnation by the people——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Kentucky that the time for general debate has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Let his time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order for the Committee of the Whole to extend the time.

Mr. McCREARY. I should have been glad, Mr. Chairman, to have been permitted to gratify the gentleman in his desire, but as the time has expired I ask now that the bill be read by sections. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the time of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs may be extended a little longer to enable him to tell us what the foreign policy of the present Administration is in regard to Hawaii.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that it is not in order to extend the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Can not it be done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to ask unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole to extend the time after it has been limited by the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is there not some method known to parliamentary law——

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I ask that the bill be read by paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is proceeding with the regular order. The gentleman from Indiana rises to a parliamentary inquiry, which he has a right to do under the rules of the House. The gentleman from Indiana will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I wish to ask if there is not some device known to parliamentary law to enable the gentleman from Kentucky to have an opportunity to predict more fully the future success of the Democratic party?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky can manage his own affairs, and does not desire the assistance of either the gentleman from Maine or the gentleman from Indiana.

I ask that the bill be read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Belgium, Denmark, Hawaiian Islands, Netherlands, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each, $37,500.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 16, strike out the words "Hawaiian Islands," and in line 17 of said page strike out "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I make the point of order on the amendment that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. If it does change existing law it retrenches expenditures, and is therefore in order. But it does not change existing law. It simply reduces the appropriation. It leaves the minister there, and pays him what he is worth. There is no question about the right of the House to reduce salaries or withdraw appropriations for salaries altogether as amendments to appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is simply a failure to appropriate for this purpose. That, I believe, is the only effect of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, the House may do that. We are not obliged to appropriate for the office if Congress does not see fit to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to have that amendment reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman's amendment in its present form is defective. I suggest that he perfect the text of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman only wishes to reduce the amount $7,500, and not to strike out "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. HITT. The Clerk can make the change by subtracting seven thousand five hundred from the footing.

Mr. LACEY. The word "thousand" will have to be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will correct the amendment as suggested, and will then read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 16, strike out "Hawaiian Islands," and in line 18 strike out "seven," and "five hundred," so that it will read:

"Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Belgium, Denmark, Netherlands, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each, $30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the words "seven thousand five hundred dollars each" should be allowed to stand.

Mr. LACEY. That was not in my motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is recognized to speak upon the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Only a word, Mr. Chairman, by way of explanation. The Hawaiian question has been very thoroughly discussed in the general debate, and that debate would be meaningless unless this House or committee took some action upon it; and this is the only action by which the voice of the House itself can be heard. I believe, sir, that nine out of ten—yes, ninety-nine out of a hundred of all the people of the United States are thoroughly ashamed of the policy that has been inaugurated in the Sandwich Islands, and that to withdraw the salary of the minister, who has voiced that policy and who has attempted to carry it out by the destruction of the Republic in those islands, is the most effective manner in which the House can express itself. That being the case, I submit the amendment without further discussion.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The act authorizing the appointment of a minister to the Hawaiian Islands was passed in 1874. We have therefore had a minister in the Hawaiian Islands for twenty years. I believe that the importance of that country, and the fact that all the leading nations of the world have ministers there, make it necessary and proper that we should keep a minister there.

The dispatches that we have received from the Hawaiian Islands indicate that peace now reigns supreme there, that the present minister is kindly received, that there is no animosity whatever between the Government of Hawaii and the present minister.

It is known to many members of this House that the present minister, Mr. Willis, is an able man, a fair man, a just man, and I have no doubt that he has discharged his duty, under most trying and difficult circumstances, as well as any minister could have discharged the duties required of him. I do not believe that at this time it would be good policy for our Government to either withdraw the minister to the Hawaiian Islands or repeal the law which authorizes the appointment and payment of a minister to the Hawaiian Islands, and when we are seeking to have the most amicable relations with the people of these islands and when we have announced that we desire that they shall pursue their own line of policy and manage their own domestic affairs, I do not believe that a majority of this House would be in favor of repealing the law which authorizes a minister to represent the United States in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if the people of the country could be convinced and feel satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the attitude of the American Government toward the Provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands is what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr McCREARY] seems to fondly hope, I have no doubt that they would oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]; but the trouble about the whole question is, we are taught by experience that a man or a political party or a country that does a dishonorable and dishonest thing once, deliberately and of premeditated malice, is very likely to do it again, and the trouble in this case is that there is presented in the record one of the most conspicuous acts of diplomatic atrocity, hypocrisy, and treachery ever recorded upon the pages of the diplomatic history of this country or any other country.

A revolution had been complete, a government de facto had been established. No matter how, no matter by what means. It is idle, it is puerile, it is childish to discuss that question. It had been established, and we had no more right to attempt to overturn it than we have to go back and overturn the revolution of the French people by which the third Napoleon was driven from power and the Republic established.

That is probably because this Government sympathized in the revolution. This Government, through its minister, was not opposed to the change of government there. When this condition of things was known to all the world, and when it was eminently proper for Mr. Cleveland's Administration to withdraw the treaty, if he saw fit to do so, it was a question clearly within the province of the President to seek to send a paramount minister, who, while under terms of respect, of recognition, of endearment to the head of that Provisional Government, wishing it well, the record shows that the assault of Abner upon his fated victim was not more deliberately premeditated and prepared than was the assault by the American Administration upon the Provisional Government of those islands. It was dastardly; it was illegal; it put a blot upon the pages of American statesmanship such as no time can obliterate; and there is a doubt in the mind of Americans, and a doubt in the minds of the people of Hawaii as to what is the real attitude of the American Government to those islands to-day. That is the difficulty; and that is the reason why, possibly, the withdrawal of this minister, amiable as he is, honest as I know him to be, upright as no doubt he is, acting under these instructions, he is liable again to be driven to some overt act of treachery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the attitude of the Republican party upon this bill so far is most remarkable, and presents a very extraordinary spectacle. Not satisfied with their efforts upon every opportunity to assail the present Administration upon the record it has made it seizes the opportunity afforded by consideration of appropriations to maintain an important branch of the service to indulge in further denunciation with reference to the Hawaiian Islands. We have seen dignified statesmen upon the other side of the Chamber, upon the consideration of this bill, depart widely from the propositions contained in it, and avail themselves of this opportunity to continue their assaults. In the confusion of their frenzy they turn and rend themselves like a blind snake in the dog days, merely to show still further their vemon against the Administration.

Here is a government recognized by the civilized governments of the world, with legations established there, and maintaining a legation here; a government at peace with us, and upon friendly and amicable terms, one whose trade is of the highest importance to us; and these gentlemen propose, actuated, as it appears to me, by small and unworthy spite against the President of the United States, to withhold the compensation of the minister who is accredited to that country, and who they testify themselves is a man worthy in all respects to represent this great Government.

I have been surprised, sir, having sat upon the committee and subcommittee which prepared this bill, with the course of my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who first addressed the committee upon the pending bill. In the committee everything went beautifully and smoothly, and there seemed to have been the best understanding.

Now he has taken the floor of the House and made a long and eloquent speech (for he is always eloquent and I esteem him most highly), and gives us once again the wails of his party on the late trouble in Hawaii. They continue to assert, and it was announced this morning, that the people vindicate ex-Minister Stevens and disapprove wholly of the Administration. If the people believe that they are right, why this constant and repeated reiteration upon the part of the Republicans of the House in denunciation of us and in justification of themselves?

If they feel so confident that they are right and justice supports them, why is it that they can not withhold their criticism, but must continue to parade before the country not only criticism, but vituperation, and resort to all the epithets that language affords to denounce the Administration and the gentleman selected by the Administration to represent us in that country? Mr. Chairman, the just are not wont to protest their justness, the innocent their innocence; too much protestation is evidence of conscious weakness.

> So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
> It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

Now, it is well known to the gentleman who proposes this amendment, and those who stand with him, that the amendment will not be adopted by the House; and he has no expectation that it will. He has no hope, I am constrained to believe, no desire, that it will, because I believe the gentleman from Iowa wants to maintain relations with the Government of the Hawaiian Islands, I believe he would not have us strike out this appropriation and suffer this amendment to pass. His only object is to bring up in the House constantly the denunciations of his party, which are wholly unjustifiable; and I believe the country sustains me in believing that the action of ex-Minister Stevens in landing the United States forces was for the purpose not of protecting American interests, but to carry out a scheme and conspiracy which he had entered into to overthrow an existing government in behalf of adventurers.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat has stated what the Democratic party on this floor believe, or profess to believe. It is, that Minister Stevens, with one hundred and sixty-two marines, including a brass band, overthrew the Hawaiian monarchy and established the Provisional Government. I regret that any attack should be made upon Minister Willis. Everybody concedes that Mr. Willis is a gentleman, and an able man. I object to any attack being made upon him by Republicans, because he is a standing witness to the high character, the executive ability, the strength of character, and the patriotism of John L. Stevens. Minister Stevens, according to our friends on the other side, established a Provisional Government in Hawaii with one hundred and sixty-two United States naval soldiers, including a brass band. He established this Provisional Government so firmly and so successfully that Minister Willis, with the United States Navy under his control, with Grover Cleveland at his back, has been utterly unable to overthrow it. [Laughter.] Stevens has been gone for almost a year, and yet that Government, the work of his hands, as our friends on the other side claim, continues to exist and prosper. [Laughter.] Therefore, I say, Mr. Chairman, that Minister Willis is not only a standing witness to the high character and ability of Minister Stevens, but a standing witness to the strength, the stability, and the permanency of the Provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands. [Laughter.] Let him stay there and draw his salary.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Kentucky inquires why these repeated defenses of the Republican party are heard upon this floor. It is simply because the policy of the Republican party as carried out by the last Administration and by the very worthy and eminent minister who then represented this country at the Hawaiian Islands has been repeatedly attacked here. Our Democratic friends can not seem to forget their own unfortunate mistakes, and when other people would willingly let them be buried with the dead, they try to dig up the old rotten carcasses, and if possible breathe into them some semblance of respectability. I have been amused at their persistency. They remind me of the old lady who called her husband "Scissors." He concluded he would stop that thing, and finally he chucked her down into a well. She still kept saying "Scissors," and when at last he held her under the water so that she could not say "Scissors" any more, she held up her two fingers and worked them like the two blades of a pair of scissors. [Laughter.]

Now, after the Hawaiian policy of the present Administration has been condemned by the most distinguished Democrats in the Senate, after it has been condemned by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations of a Democratic Senate, after it has been almost universally condemned by the press and the people of this country, our friends still seem to feel as if they can rake it up and galvanize it into a little respectability. As I said yesterday, it shows a sublimer faith in the power to do something impossible than I have ever seen manifested before. So far as Minister Stevens is concerned, he was sustained by the Administration that sent him to Hawaii when President Harrison sent to the Senate for ratification the treaty framed between this country and the Hawaiian Islands.

He was sustained by our Administration, and he has since been sustained overwhelmingly by the verdict of the people and the press of this country; and I pity the stupidity of the man, whether he be Democrat or Republican, who has not felt in the air the patriotic rebuke given by the people of the United States to the present Administration for its attempt to restore a rotten monarchy in Hawaii. The gentleman says that the Administration did not try to do that. Why, sir, the President in the message which he sent to this House and which was read from that desk, stated that he had done it. But, says my friend from Kentucky, the President did not use force. Why did he not use force? It was because he discovered before he got very far into the business that the people of this country would not allow him to use force, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, to restore a rotten monarchy in place of the enlightened and civilized government that had been set up in those islands where the American people have been so large factors in bringing about the degree of civilization that exists there to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the preceding word. Ordinarily, Mr. Chairman, a motion to withdraw a minister from a country would express a diminution of regard, and if this were an ordinary case, I could not assent to it. But our minister to the Hawaiian Islands has occupied a position which the world has well understood as intrinsically and essentially hostile to the existence of the Government of those islands. The President of that Government has so solemnly declared, and we have had that declaration communicated to this House.

The minister who represents us there has long since lost all usefulness in maintaining or increasing friendly relations. He was at one time an object of dread, and he has been an object of distrust all the time. It is true that is a small country. It is one of the slender powers of the world, and under ordinary circumstances it would require the special reason of its position, so adjacent to our Republic and so important to our future, as containing the position which is the Gibraltar of the Pacific, to justify our keeping a minister there at all. We have a consul-general who can attend to the current business that arises. The withdrawal of this minister would not, I am sure, be permanent, for the strength of public opinion in this country, whatever may be the force of party organizations or the head of a party to resist for a time, is always irresistible in the end.

The strong sentiment of the American people will constrain the Administration in time to change its policy of hostility or duplicity toward Hawaii; and such an expression as this from the House of Representatives would be received as an expression of disapprobation of its course by the people of our country, as it has excited aversion in the people of the Hawaiian Islands and that Government, though it is friendly to our country, with so much more than an ordinary friendship, that all they crave is to be merged in our existence and be a part of us.

Mr. PICKLER. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois, he contends that the attitude of the present Administration has been hostile and is still hostile to the Provisional Government of Hawaii.

Mr. HITT. It is so regarded by that Government; and there is no need of continuing a minister there unless he can be useful to us.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I was not surprised that some gentlemen on the other side should take an extremely partisan view of this question; but I was surprised that my distinguished colleague [Mr. HITT], who was formerly chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and who has had long experience in the foreign service of this Government as a member of our diplomatic corps—I was surprised that he should have stated to this committee and to the country that we should "rebuke" our present minister by refusing him his salary, the result of such withdrawal of compensation being necessarily the withdrawal of the minister.

Mr. HITT. I did not say that we should rebuke the minister, but that we should rebuke the Administration for its policy, which that minister has carried out, I must say, in a manner which is very honorable to him personally, in his faithful but painful and reluctant labors in carrying out instructions which no one approves.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the gentleman has made this more a partisan matter than I supposed he intended. He wants to "rebuke this Administration" by withholding the compensation of the minister to the Hawaiian Islands! I had supposed that in preference to all other places in this service the gentlemen on the other side of the House would desire a diplomatic representative in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What for? Why should we have a minister there?

Mr. SPRINGER. For the same reason that we have a minister at other places.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is he there to tear down a government or to set one up?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not yield to the gentleman for an interruption, unless he asks for information; and I can not give him any information on this subject——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think you could.

Mr. SPRINGER. He is so thoroughly advised already.

The object of this amendment, then, is to "rebuke this Administration"—for doing what? For refusing to sanction what the previous Administration had done in regard to Hawaii, for withdrawing a treaty which provided a pension for this deposed Queen at $20,000 a year, and a gratuity of $150,000 to the heir apparent? The late Administration agreed upon a treaty of that kind, which in effect concedes that the Queen was unjustly deposed, that her Government had been taken away, her prerogatives despoiled. After accomplishing her overthrow, that Administration wanted to make reparation to her by paying money out of our Treasury, as I have indicated. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] suggests to me, which is true, that the indebtedness of the Hawaiian Islands, amounting to $3,250,000, was, by the terms of the proposed treaty, assumed by the United States.

All this was proposed and advocated by the last Administration. And because Mr. Cleveland has withdrawn that treaty, refused to recognize that contract which Mr. Harrison made and the Republican party approved, the gentleman from Illinois proposes now to "rebuke the Administration." I think the present Administration deserves the thanks of the country for refusing to ratify that agreement, and for withdrawing it from the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This Administration will never get the thanks of the country.

Mr. SPRINGER. This Administration is not asking the thanks of gentlemen on the other side of the House, and especially not of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE undertook to make a remark, but was rapped to order by

The CHAIRMAN, who said: The gentleman from Maine must not interrupt the gentleman from Illinois without his consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. So far as the foreign policy of this Administration is concerned, it needs no defense at my hands. The gentleman now at the head of our foreign affairs as Secretary of State is one of the most eminent statesmen of the country. And what seems to disturb the gentlemen on the other side is the fact that he was so recently a member of their own party. But everybody will concede that Secretary Gresham is both able and honest, and that he has been faithful and fearless in the vindication of the dignity and honor of this country.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I can not yield. The gentleman does not want information.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, I would not get any information probably——

The CHAIRMAN (rapping for order). The gentleman from Illinois can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I asked the gentleman from Illinois to yield for a question——

The CHAIRMAN. And he declined to yield.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. And then he added that I did not want any information; and I replied that I would probably receive no information from the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN (who had been endeavoring to silence Mr. WILSON by the use of the gavel). The gentleman from Washington must be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I dislike very much to have a scene of this kind occur in the Committee of the Whole of this House. I am afraid the gentleman from Washington has lost his temper.

Mr. WILSON of Washington again attempted to make himself heard.

The CHAIRMAN (after rapping loudly for order). The gentleman from Washington knows the rules, and must on reflection realize that he is not observing them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Washington——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment, without objection, will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair think that so much of the time as was occupied by the gentleman from Washington should be taken out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time was kept by the Speaker's clerk, by whom the Chair was advised that the time of the gentleman from Illinois had expired.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I regret, of course, that I could not have yielded instantly to the command or request of the very able gentleman who now occupies the chair in this committee, but when I asked the gentleman from Illinois, then occupying the floor, a man who has represented his district for a long time, an old member on this floor, if he would yield to me for a question, he declined and very properly declined to be interrupted. But when he went further than that and declared that I did not want to interrupt him for information, then I had a right, sir, as a member on this floor to reply to a retort that he made which was in itself out of order.

The gentleman from Illinois said that I did not wish any information upon the subject he was discussing. Perhaps that is true as far as he is concerned, for I would not probably have obtained any information from the gentleman from Illinois. But he was speaking in regard to the foreign policy of this Administration, and I desired to ask the gentleman only, inasmuch as he had spoken upon that foreign policy, why it was that this Administration had gone into British Columbia and had there inaugurated a foreign policy of letting contracts to coal American war vessels to residents of British Columbia instead of awarding them to the people of the United States? Just across the line, on the Straits of Fuca, is to be found as fine coal as any produced in British Columbia; and yet this Administration, sailing the American war steamer Yorktown—think of it, with all the old-time honor of that name—the American man-of-war Yorktown is coaling across the line in British Columbia, and this Administration has given to those people a contract for $100,000 worth of coal.

Now, my people are in distress, as are the people all over the country. Our people, the people of my country, want work and they want to develop their own coal mines. They want the Government of the United States to give the contract to the laboring people of the United States. And I rose, therefore, to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he had any information in regard to that subject or why a contract of this character had been entered into with a foreign country?

Mr. Chairman, I should have known that the gentleman did not have any information on the subject, because he has but little information upon any subject in which this country is interested. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to take any part whatever in the wrangling which may have been produced during the discussion of this question; but I think a word of justice may appropriately be said for a very distinguished and faithful public servant in connection with this discussion, and I will say it.

I believe I will not make too much of a claim for myself when I say that the members of this House who know me know full well that I am not slow to engage in the advocacy of any wise economy that looks to the prevention of improper and improvident expenditures, and to the saving of all that can be saved of that which comes from the sweat and the toil of the people who pay the taxes.

But this is a proposition to abolish the salary of an important officer of the Government. It is true I have never had that confidence in the necessity for an excessive or a very large number of foreign ministers that other gentlemen seem to have had. I have believed that some provision made for the improvement of the consular service abroad would probably meet most of the demands of the public service in that direction. But we have the system as it is.

The Government of the United States is represented at the Hawaiian Islands to-day by Hon. Albert S. Willis, a gentleman who is not unknown to the members of this House nor to the country. He was for ten years the representative of the district now so ably represented by the gentleman who sits in front of me [Mr. CARUTH], and I think that those who knew him will say that for disinterested patriotism, for distinguished ability, for untiring assiduity in the discharge of every public duty, no district could have a more faithful representative than he. He was educated, painstaking, and able. His ability as a legislator here commended him to the attention of the President for the appointment to one of the most delicate and troublesome of our complicated missions; and I suppose that it will be conceded by all that no man could have more carefully, studiously, and faithfully discharged the important and delicate duties imposed upon him than did Mr. Willis. He went to the island at its most trying period. Few men could have discharged the trying duty with the coolness and ability he has displayed.

I do not know of any place where there has been more call for painstaking care and judicious action than in connection with that mission, and I know of no man in the whole range of my public service who has met the requirements of the place with greater ability and with purer patriotism than has this representative. I felt that this much was due to one who has served his country long and well, and I do not believe that at a time when our relations with those islands are so complicated, peculiar, and strained, it is proper to abolish our diplomatic relations with the islands. Nor do I believe that any American ought to want a man of his ability to serve his country without compensation. I therefore opppose the amendment. And I have not felt at liberty to sit and hear one attacked whose patriotism I know to be of the purest, who loves his country above self, and whose every effort in life has been to serve it faithfully, without saying thus much that is due him when so much more could be said and would be said if time permitted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. Without objection it will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I renew the formal amendment.

It seems to me that if this appropriation is withheld, we should place the withholding of it upon the true ground, namely, that so far as the Government of Hawaii is concerned, that government does not have the necessary confidence in the present American minister, and that he would not be useful and the Administration will not recall him. I did not arise to repeat what has been better said than I myself can say it, but I did arise for the purpose, upon the whole, of expressing my dissent to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. It seems to me I would not be willing to abolish this place, and I doubt the wisdom of withholding the appropriation.

Then again the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and other gentlemen, seem to place it largely upon personal grounds.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to correct the gentleman. I did not place it upon personal grounds. I look to my country first, I hope, and then to other considerations. That is Democratic.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, yes! my friend is always Democratic, according to his statement. He seeks to defend Mr. Willis, and to commend him, and so on. Well, now, I know Mr. Willis. I recollect him very well, and I always found him a most excellent gentleman. Yet I must say that I was surprised that he, coming from the chivalrous State of Kentucky, should remain in the service of the United States and carry out his instructions. I know that most people from that State, where the average citizen would defend his honor with his life if necessary, if anybody should accuse him of double dealing—I say I know that most citizens of that State from which the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. McCREARY] hails, would not have accepted that service.

That chivalrous Representative [Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky] himself would have resigned his place, or he would take personal vengeance upon anybody who would dare intimate that he would double-deal for himself or at the command of anybody else. Now, Minister Willis, whom I esteem highly, did go as our representative to Hawaii. He did receive his instructions. He did make fair weather with the government that was in existence and in the night time he conspired with a subject of that government to overthrow it.

Mr. LACEY. Why keep him there?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from Iowa says why keep him? He carried out his instructions. Perhaps he thought that loyalty to the Adminstration and the desire to hold the place required him to do it. Now, I am inclined to think that I would make this appropriation, and I want to say that I would go further than that. I would vote a deficiency of three or four thousand dollars to Minister Willis, whom we all know so well, for the wear and tear on his conscience and the sacrifice of his Kentucky chivalry. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. In the first place, I deny that the proposition to pay the deposed Queen $20,000 a year was any admission or confession upon the part of this Government that she had been wrongfully deposed or that she had any existing rights at the time of the making of the treaty. I say that neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] nor the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky] nor any other gentleman on this floor, can show by law or by precedent, or by any international adjudication of the question, that he is right in the declaration which he has made on that point. It was simply a proposition in the nature of a gratuity, for the purpose of peace and harmony, to get rid of the idea in the minds of her former subjects, if there was any such, that she had been harshly and unjustly treated by the United States. It has been done so often in the history of other countries that it is idle for any man on the floor of this House, at this late day, to urge that as an argument.

Now, there is a single other proposition to which I wish especially to invite the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. It is very easy to say that an American official is a great statesman. The word statesman is a sort of generic term that is used when there is no other word available. It is like the lawyers wrestling with the word "quasi-corporation." You generally find a lawyer who can not give any other definition of some sort of an organization that is not quite a corporation, calling it "quasi-corporation." And when you can not call a man a great man because of any specific thing he has done, why, you just call him a great statesman, and then you are out of the woods.

Now, I have not introduced this subject into this debate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] introduced the subject and referred to the Secretary of State as a great statesman. That is an allegation on his part that upon demand and notice, requires a bill of particulars and specifications. The mere declaration is not sufficient. The common counts will not answer in that case. Now, will the gentleman append to his very eloquent remarks a bill of particulars, based upon the literal and proper use of the words? What has the Secretary of State done, and when did he do it? He has held office ever since the war, without a break, always before this at the hands of the Republican party, after his great and valuable services in the Army. He began after that, I believe, as a State agent of the State of Indiana in regard to the pay of soldiers. From that day to this, in one capacity or another, all the way down to the present time, he has held office, always at the hands of the Republican party, until his present office.

I am not here criticising his rulings and judgment upon the bench of the court in which he presided. The record of the Supreme Court of the United States is possibly one of the items that the gentleman may want to append, and I would commend to him a very careful consideration of those important documents before he again launches that general suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to finish the point I am making, and I ask for two minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He was Secretary of the Treasury at one time. I call the attention of the gentleman to that record. It is neither hot nor cold. It is not disparaging or undisparaging; but there is nothing in it that justifies the gentleman's declaration. He was Postmaster-General for a short time, but the routine of that office was not disturbed; and there is nothing in it to either injure or magnify the administration. Now, will the gentleman point out what he has done as Secretary of State in reference to Hawaii that commends his administration? I have already characterized whatever connection he may have had with the Hawaiian business. Now, will the gentleman point out something else that he is proud of? What is it; will he attach some specific fact in support of his declaration that we ought to accept all that he does without any investigation, because he is a "great statesman"? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Ohio has taken exception to my remark that the present Secretary of State was a "great statesman," and desired me to offer something specific to prove it. He was appointed a district judge of the United States by a Republican President. But I will go back a little further. Before that he served his country honorably and with some distinction in the late war, and received an honorable wound in battle, notwithstanding some persons have charged that he did not perform actual service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One word there. The gentleman will not construe anything I said as disparaging his military record.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not. After serving his country during the war he was appointed a district judge of the United States by a Republican President. He was transferred from that position by a Republican President and made Postmaster-General. He was afterwards transferred from that position and made Secretary of the Treasury in the Cabinet of a Republican President. He was appointed as a circuit judge of the United States by a Republican President. He was afterwards, while circuit judge, indorsed by the Republican party of the State of Illinois as their candidate for President, and received the vote of that great State in the Chicago convention for the office of President of the United States. He stood as high in the counsels of the Republican party as any other gentleman; and the very fact that the Republican party of the State of Illinois selected him as its choice for President of the United States is a certificate of statesmanship as great as any gentleman on that side of the House ought to ask me to give.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is a very handsome indorsement of republicanism. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman says that that is a very handsome indorsement of republicanism. It is an indorsement of the man by the Republican party; and I believe if he had adhered to the policies of that party he would have been now their favorite candidate for President of the United States at the next election. [Cries of "Oh," on the Republican side.] His fault simply consists in the fact that he has withdrawn from their organization.

Mr. MORGAN. What evidence have you that he does not now adhere to the policies of the Republican party? [Great laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. My distinguished friend from Missouri thinks that he has not given any evidence that he is now a Democrat. [Laughter.] Perhaps some gentlemen upon this side of the House indulge that opinion; but I for one rejoiced when I heard of his appointment as Secretary of State, and I have seen nothing in his acts that has caused me to change my opinion in regard to his appointment. I believe it was a very able and fortunate one, and that the country indorses his administration. I also believe that the great mass of the Democratic party is satisfied with the manner in which he has discharged the duties of the office. In the estimation of gentlemen upon the other side of the House he ceased to be a statesman when he ceased to be a Republican.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MERCER. I think the Chair ought to suppress the applause on the Democratic side. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this pending amendment is exhausted. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I had addressed the Chair.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair had recognized me, but I will yield to the gentleman with great pleasure.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. You are always very polite. This House understands that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. And I hope the gentleman will facilitate what I have to say afterwards by throwing a little luminosity on what he regards as the present policy of the Administration with reference to Hawaii.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman is as good a student of public affairs as he should be he understands the policy of this Administration as well as of the last. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have debated this amendment for some time and I would like to have an agreement as to the closing of the debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky is going to avail himself of my courtesy in yielding to him to try to cut me off from making a few observations? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Not at all. I would not deprive the committee of the pleasure of hearing the gentleman. [Laughter.] But this amendment has been debated for some time, and as I think the members of the committee are ready to vote upon it, I desire to come to some agreement to close the debate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HITT. There are two gentlemen on this side who desire to speak for five minutes each.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate may be closed in fifteen minutes.

Mr. LOUD. If I may be recognized for a part of that time I shall not object.

Mr. LACEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending amendment be closed in twenty minutes. That gives ten minutes to each side.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LACEY. I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 81, noes 2.

Mr. LACEY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LACEY, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. McCREARY.

The tellers took took their places; but, pending the count,

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky said: Mr. Chairman, we have come to an agreement. I withdraw my motion, and I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and the pending amendment close in thirty minutes, giving fifteen minutes to each side.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I have not had the advantage of that information from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs which would have facilitated and perhaps illuminated the few remarks that I desire to make. It is perfectly evident from what has been said here already on both sides, that there is no general desire to sever or interrupt our amicable relations with the present Government of the Hawaiian Islands. There is a very strong feeling in this House, as in the country, that we ought to have different relations from those of the recent past, and ought to be differently represented now in the Hawaiian Islands. I do not think that the best or the proper solution of this question would be a vote to abolish the Hawaiian mission. I desire that we shall be represented by a friendly minister of the United States in Hawaii until we annex that beautiful country, which will be accomplished in the near future as certainly as the tides of the Pacific ebb and flow. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I think it would be the suggestion of patriotism and of regard for the best interests of our country and of the world, for this House now, after we have had time for all partisan ebullitions to subside, for false policies to be abandoned, and for more than a second thought—I think, I say, we ought now to be able to deal with the Hawaiian question with regard to other and more weighty considerations than that of sustaining what has been acknowledged by the most lenient opinion in both political parties to be the most gigantic diplomatic blunder in our history. [Applause.] Gentlemen talk about Republican assaults upon the Democratic policy in Hawaii! Why, sir, the ink is hardly dry upon a speech made in another place by one of the most distinguished Democrats in the United States, a gentleman whose support as a candidate for President was very much more widely recognized than that of the Secretary of State to whom the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has just alluded; and that Democratic leader whose frank utterance is now reverberating from one end of the country to another, and giving old-fashioned Democrats the only thrill of spasmodic enthusiasm they have experienced for more than a year, had this to say about the famous or rather infamous Administration foreign policy in Hawaii:

Our foreign policy, especially that relating to Hawaii, it must be admitted, has not met the expectations of the people. A sense of humiliation prevailed when the project for the restoration of a deposed monarchy was unfolded by the Administration, and gratification ensued when its abandonment or failure was reluctantly announced, influenced largely by an aroused public sentiment. That unfortunate contemplated policy was a blunder, and a blunder is sometimes worse than a crime.

Does anyone dispute the party orthodoxy of that arraignment?

Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a city, or town, or hamlet, or crossroads in the United States that has not given evidence of that "aroused public sentiment." It has been manifested everywhere except on the Democratic side of this Democratic House of Representatives and in that "cave of the winds," the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I want to ask the chairman—and he may answer when I have finished—what has been done with the proposition which I introduced here nearly two months ago to solve this identical difficulty?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It was voted down.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When and where?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. In the House of Representatives.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend, for whom I have great regard, seems to have taken so long a nap over these Hawaiian matters that he has not even yet wakened up to know that I introduced a resolution here almost two months ago for the recall of the present minister at Hawaii; and it has been slumbering in his committee——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I thought the gentleman referred to the resolution which he introduced in regard to the Hawaiian Islands, and which was voted down in this House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I referred to the resolution which I introduced, as I have said, February 26, two months ago, and which was published on page of 2424 the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—a resolution which it seems to me provides fittingly for a response to the overwhelming desire of the people of this country—not simply a Republican demand, but one that has found as emphatic expression in the columns of that great and influential organ of Democracy the New York Sun, and that other great organ of another wing of the Democracy the New York World, which have day after day reiterated the demand that Minister Willis should be recalled, in the interest of decorous and dignified relations with the Hawaiian Government.

This resolution which I introduced covers the ground, I think, better than any speech I could make, and I will read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] have expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HITT. I ask that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] be permitted to occupy the time allotted to our side.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The time of the gentleman from Maine is to come out of the fifteen minutes allowed to that side under the agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair. The Chair hears no objection to the gentleman from Maine being permitted to proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, on the 26th day of February last—I want to remind the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this matter; I want to jog his memory—this resolution was introduced and referred to that committee:

Whereas the Government of the United States would not tolerate the presence at its capital of any foreign diplomatic representative who had engaged in any movement or performed any act in derogation of its authority or calculated to disturb or destroy its administration—

And I want to say right here that if there is a solitary sentence or sentiment embodied in these resolutions to which the gentleman from Kentucky, the distinguished chairman of the committee, or any gentleman on the other side of the House, takes any exception, as a proper expression of American doctrine, I want him to call my attention to it as I proceed—

and

Whereas the Government of the United States has repeatedly refused to entertain foreign diplomatic representatives who have even in the slightest degree seemed to be interfering in our domestic affairs or acting in a manner prejudicial to the dignity and interests of this Government; and

Whereas it has been the time-honored principle and policy of the United States to extend to all other governments, whether humble or great, the same honorable dealing and good faith that we demand for ourselves as a nation; and

Whereas no civilized government can be expected to regard with favor a diplomatic representative of another nation who has engaged in secret conference with its enemies and who has openly and formally demanded of said government that it surrender its authority to said enemies; and

Whereas the extraordinary and most praiseworthy forbearance of the Government of the Hawaiian Islands, in relation to the active and aggressive efforts of the present United States minister to secure its overthrow, strongly attests the desire of that Government to preserve the most amicable relations with the people of the United States in the face of continued and unparalleled provocation; and

Whereas the people of the United States have peculiar interests in the good government of the Hawaiian Islands, and have for more than half a century asserted the priority of American influence therein, based on the ties of kinship with those who have built up there a Christian civilization, and upon our important commercial and geographical relations with those islands: Therefore

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the most sacred obligations of good faith, the highest mutual interests of the United States and the friendly government of Hawaii, the plainest dictates of international comity, and the imperative duty of avoiding further risk of complicity in the incitement of disorder and possible bloodshed in Hawaii require that the present United States minister to the Provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands be immediately recalled and superseded by the appointment of another minister who will be unhampered by the lamentable incidents of the recent past, and who will be able and willing to represent—the "sincere desire" of the people of the United States "to cultivate to the fullest extent the friendship which has so long subsisted between us," and to "constantly endeavor to advance the interest and prosperity of both Governments."

Now, sir, I ask the chairman of the Committtee on Foreign Affairs what action has been taken in regard to that resolution? Has your committee [addressing Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky] authorized the reporting back of that resolution? Have you taken affirmative action upon it?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will give the gentleman answer when he gets through.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to know now whether there has been any action taken.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There has been no report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman whether those resolutions have ever been brought to the attention of his committee?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be notified when I am within five minutes of the expiration of my time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will give me sufficient time, I will answer him fully.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is not prepared to answer "yes" or "no" as to whether his committee has acted upon or considered at all a resolution of this urgent character which has been pending before the committee for nearly two months, I am perfectly willing to let him answer in his own time and be as deliberate about it as his committee has been in dealing with the subject.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The degree of feeling which the gentleman manifests is unworthy of the situation and of himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has now about four and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will reserve that time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who has just taken his seat, has manifested a good deal of excitement in regard to Hawaiian matters before to-day in this House. [Laughter.] I always listen to him with interest, and am glad to give him information when he seeks it. It is true that the gentleman from Maine introduced the resolutions which he has just read, and they were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Immediately after they were delivered to the Committee on Foreign Affairs they were referred by me to a subcommittee, but the gentleman from Maine, with all of his industry, with all of his usual excitement and zeal, has not, as I am informed, appeared before the subcommittee to give any reason why they should report favorably upon the resolutions he presented.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with his long service here, must know——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I decline to be interrupted. The gentleman can answer in his own time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have only four minutes time remaining. The gentleman has abundant time, and I am in hopes that he will give us some light——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I decline to be interrupted. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not appear before the subcommittee. So it is his own fault if his resolutions were not promptly acted upon. If he has anything to submit to the subcommittee in favor of his resolution, to show that we should recall Minister Willis from the Hawaiian Islands, he should come before the subcommittee and make it known. They have been waiting patiently to hear from the distinguished gentleman. The subcommittee had no information that justified them in reporting the resolution in favor of Mr. Willis's recall; and they suppose, I presume, from the indifference the gentleman from Maine has shown with regard to his own resolutions, that he had ceased to take an interest in them.

If the gentlemen on the other side of the House who are in favor of annexation, as many of them have stated, are sincere, why should we break off the relations that now exist between the United States and Hawaii? The minister from Hawaii has been at Washington for years. No, the authorities of Hawaii have never withdrawn their minister from the United States, but seem to desire to maintain amicable relations with us. They seem to desire to keep their minister here, and I believe with the same spirit of friendship and good feeling that the people of the United States desire to keep our minister there.

There is no reason therefore, Mr. Chairman, for recalling our minister or for repealing the law authorizing him to be paid $7,500 per annum, which would be equivalent to withdrawing him. This movement on the part of the Republicans here indicates their desire to get up more excitement on this question. They have been beaten in the House of Representatives. "See the galled jade wince." These gentlemen are very apt to exhibit temper when they have not argument on their side. If these gentlemen are so well satisfied that the public sentiment of the country indorses their position as they have proclaimed, why are they not willing to trust to that public sentiment? Why is it that on all occasions we have Hawaiian matters brought up here for debate? It is simply because gentlemen on the other side of the House know that their cause is a weak one; they know that it can not be maintained, and they are trying on every occasion to bolster it up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask how much time I have occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed five minutes.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope after the exhibition we have had here on the motion of the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], that we shall vote now and that the vote will conform with the opinions expressed with so much emphasis by the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and his colleagues on that side of the House, who say they are opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa. I also understood my honorable friend from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS], a member of the committee, to be opposed to the amendment; and to cap the climax of the opposition of the Republican side we find the honorable gentleman from Maine himself [Mr. BOUTELLE], who has just read his resolution, opposing the Lacey amendment. Why can not we vote on it at once?

But it seems to me that the motion is a most singular one coming from the minority, who say that we have now a republican form of government in Hawaii, and yet want to withdraw the accredited minister from this Government, or withhold his salary, which is equivalent. But I never understood my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who is at the head of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be opposed to the proposition or to be in favor of suspending our relations with Hawaii in the manner proposed here by withdrawing our minister at Honolulu, or to be in favor of withdrawing his salary.

It is the first time that the notion has been conveyed anywhere that such was his wish, if he favors the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. Why, sir, we have a minister from the Hawaiian Islands here in this country, accredited and received here. We have our minister there; and if the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] wanted to perfect his amendment, it seems to me he ought to have included in it the two propositions, that while we withdraw our minister by taking away his support, we should request the Hawaiian Islands to withdraw their minister. Why should we keep up a one-sided relation with this country, in the way which he proposes, by simply striking out the appropriation?

I take it for granted, Mr. Chairman, that there was no serious supposition that this amendment would receive even the support of his colleagues on the other side; and I hope we shall have a vote on it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, it seems hardly necessary to make any reply to the more or less skillful evasions of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky]. It is a somewhat remarkable proclamation to this House, however, for the chairman of one of its principal committees to inform a member who introduced a resolution of great public importance and had it referred to that committee nearly two months ago, that the introducer of the resolution is responsible for the nonaction of the committee.

The gentleman wants to know why I have not come before the subcommittee. I never learned that a subcommittee had been appointed. I was never informed that any action whatever had been taken or contemplated, and I am informed now that if a subcommittee was appointed to consider that resolution, that subcommittee has never even been called together to consider it. And yet the gentleman arises to arraign me for laches in failing to go before a committee of which nobody ever heard, except the gentleman himself and possibly the members of that subcommittee, a committee which has never held any meetings and never intimated to me at any time, in any way, that I could have a hearing anywhere. The gentleman from Kentucky certainly has no idea, he never entertained the impression for a moment, that if I had been notified in any way that I would be heard in behalf of the resolution, there would have been any failure upon my part to appear; and if I had appeared, I think there would have been no difficulty in presenting adequate arguments in favor of the resolution.

I have kept a somewhat close observance of the expressions of public sentiment upon this subject, Mr. Chairman, and with remarkably few exceptions, I know hardly a representative organ of the great parties in this country that has not repeatedly insisted that Mr. Willis should be recalled, not only in the interest of justice to Hawaii, not only in the interest of and in behalf of the dignity of the people of the United States, but in justice to himself, to relieve him from the melancholy situation in which the Administration had placed him, a situation which his own friends in his own party now recognize and confess to have been one of the deepest humiliation and embarrassment.

Of the gentlemen who have spoken to-day, not one, so far as I have noticed, has failed to make a plea for Mr. Willis, on account of the peculiarly "embarrassing" and "complicated" position in which he has been placed. If that is so, why not relieve him? Why compel him to sit down, in the face of the Provisional Government of Hawaii, to a daily dish of unpalatable crow? Why compel him to do all the swallowing of this miserable policy of hypocrisy and stultification? Why not compel the author of the policy, in the White House, why not compel the Secretary of State, to carry their proper load of the odium? Why do you not yourselves, gentlemen of the majority, who voted for that truckling and evasive resolution a few months ago—why do not some of you assume a part of this humiliation, and not make Mr. Willis a pack horse for the whole lamentable and disgusting load? I wish to ask to what Government is Mr. Willis supposed by the Administration, and by the Democratic majority, and by the Foreign Affairs Committee, to be accredited to day? I ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. To the de facto government.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ah! That is a revelation! I thank you for that. This is the first time we have got that far. Here is an acknowledgment at last, from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the Government of Hawaii recognized by John L. Stevens on the 17th of January, 1893, in accordance with international obligation and his duty to his country, is the de facto government of Hawaii that he declared it to be. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I think that ought to be far enough for me to press the distinguished chairman to-day, as to the past, and I will leave him to elucidate further what the future policy of this Administration is to be in regard to the Hawaiian Islands.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman know all ministers are accredited to the de facto governments of the countries to which they go?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say to the gentleman in reply to what he puts as an inquiry, that I supposed that Mr. Willis was secretly but officially accredited by President Cleveland and Mr. Gresham to "Her Majesty the Queen!" If I can read the English language he was told to sing a deceitful song of duplicity in the ears of the Provisional Government, but he was "confidentially" instructed to wind up by restoring and recognizing "Her Majesty the Queen!" [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] two minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] knows to what government our minister was accredited. There never has been any dispute about that. From the time Mr. Willis left this country until this time there has been no dispute as to that. The fact, however, still remains unanswered by the gentlemen on the other side of the House that the late Administration favored a treaty of annexation, which required the Government of the United States to pay this deposed Queen $20,000 a year out of the Treasury of the United States, and $150,000 of gratuity to the deposed heir apparent.

Now, if the Government of the United States was to be required to pay this money, for what purpose and on what account was it to be paid? It was to be paid by reason of the fact that the Government of the United States was responsible for the overthrow of the monarchy in that country, and that it was required to pay this amount in order to indemnify the Queen for the deposition brought about by our own minister and by our own forces. If the pension and bounty were not for that purpose their payment would have been the greatest fraud that ever was attempted to be perpetrated upon our Government. In consenting to impose that payment upon us, the late Administration confessed its responsibility for the overthrow of the Government and offered these sums as a just indemnity. The last Administration was responsible for the overthrow of the Queen, and offered to pay her on that account out of the Treasury of the United States $20,000 a year as long as she should live, and offered the heir to the throne $150,000 in one payment. If this was not for an indemnity for the wrong done by our Government, it was an attempt at fraud upon our people, and in either case, deserves unqualified condemnation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Switzerland and Portugal at $6,500 each, $13,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. I see that——

The CHAIRMAN. What line?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In line 6, page 3. I see that this provides a salary of $7,500 for our minister at Portugal. This seems to be an increase of $1,500. I believe the salary as fixed by the Revised Statutes is $6,000. I do not know what great complication may have arisen between us and the Government of Portugal, and whether there is any proposition of annexing or overthrowing that Government. What I want to know is why the increase in the salary of our representative at Lisbon has been made. I do not even know the gentleman, or whether it is on account of his great ability or necessity, or because the United States of America has a great surplus it wants to get rid of. I am satisfied, however, that for some good reason this appropriation is proposed to be made different from what has been made before, because if there was not a good reason the gentleman from Kentucky would not make the proposition. I reserve the remainder of my time, and would be glad to hear the reason therefor.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The Revised Statutes of the United States, and the act fixing the salaries of diplomatic and consular officers, allows $7,500 to the ministers to Portugal and Switzerland.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is there a provision in the Revised Statutes fixing that?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What section?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Section 1675.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is the date of its enactment?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Eighteen hundred and seventy-four.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Eighteen hundred and seventy-four. Well, have there not been reductions since that time?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There have been in appropriation bills, but the general law fixes the salary at $7,500.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand, if the gentleman will allow me, in the earlier and economical and better days of the Democratic party, in the last twenty years, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was at the helm, the law was changed by a provision upon an appropriation bill cutting this salary down to $6,000, and that it has been that way ever since 1875, and that upon this cut, being like unto some seventy or eighty other cuts throughout the whole United States service, the Democracy went to the country and won a great victory. Now, I just wanted to know what is the condition that justifies this increase? I do not seem to get any answer. I fear it is wicked extravagance.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I coincide with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, and desire to hear that explanation myself. To secure that I make the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. STOCKDALE. That it increases expenditures on an appropriation bill. But I will withdraw the point of order, and move to reduce it to $5,000.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman has asked for an explanation. I can state with reference to the salary of the minister to Portugal that he was formerly minister resident and consul-general, and as such received consular fees. The post, however, was raised to that of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and in consideration of that and of the loss of his fees as consul-general we thought it was proper to increase the salary to $6,500, because the absolute necessities of the post require more than $5,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. But did he receive double compensation, in violation of the statute which prohibits that?

Mr. DINSMORE. The statute, as I understand it, does not prohibit that. Where a man is minister resident and consul-general he is entitled to receive the consular fees.

Mr. DINGLEY. The unofficial consular fees.

Mr. DINSMORE. Yes; the unofficial consular fees; and in that way the compensation of this post was increased.

Mr. REED. I am so glad that habit of not giving an explanation is not spreading to the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order on this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn——

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the point of order still remain, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] to say that he withdrew the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to reserve the point of order until I hear some further explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I desire to make any point upon this appropriation. I do not know that it is a change of existing law, but I would like to hear some further statement of fact. If it is a change of the existing law, I desire to make the point of order.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The Revised Statutes of the United States authorize a salary of $7,500 for the minister to Switzerland and the minister to Portugal each. It is true that for some years past in the appropriation bills that amount has not been appropriated, but it is known to this House that the mission to Switzerland and the mission to Portugal have grown materially in importance of late years, and if we send a minister to Switzerland, and I think we should, and if we send a minister to Portugal, it is believed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs that those ministers ought to receive each a salary of not less than $6,500.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What was the amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I hope the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. But the statute authorizes a salary of $7,500, and it has been already stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] that the rank of the mission has been raised to that of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] reserved the point of order, but the Chair understands the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] now to make the point.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the point so far as I am concerned. Let the question come on the merits of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] makes the point of order. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point. Or does the gentleman from Ohio himself desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It has always been held, Mr. Chairman, that where a salary has been reduced in an appropriation bill and the amount has been accepted as payment of the salary in full and has been fixed as the amount of the salary in the appropriation bill, that is the existing law; and if this salary was fixed at $5,000 in the last appropriation bill, that is the existing law at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman on this point. It has been claimed that the appropriation bill is the existing law only for the fiscal year to which it applies.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, I think that would make it the existing law at this time.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has the floor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to this point. In the Revised Statutes of the United States there is provision for $7,500 as the salaries of our minister to Portugal and our minister to Switzerland.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. When was the salary reduced, and what were the terms of the law under which it was reduced?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I call the attention of the Chair to subdivision 2 of Rule XXI, which provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except, etc.

Now, the existing law is the statute to which I have referred, contained in the Revised Statutes of the United States. It is true that Congress has appropriated $5,000 from time to time as the salary of this office, but the existing law, which is found in the Revised Statutes of the United States, provides for $7,000, and this appropriation does not increase or exceed that amount, being only $6,500.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn; and the gentleman from Illinois, as the Chair understands, withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, before we pass from this question, now that it is before us on the merits, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, who has charge of this bill, whether $6,500 as compensation of the minister to Portugal, is really an increase over and above the amount given in previous years?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I stated that this is an increase over the appropriation of last year.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it an increase of the compensation? It has been stated that this minister has received some unofficial fees which have really made his compensation $6,500 or more.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] can explain that matter.

Mr. DINSMORE. That is my information. I understand that a number of consular agents have divided their fees with this minister so that his compensation has really amounted to about that sum.

Mr. DINGLEY. You have not any definite official information on the subject?

Mr. DINSMORE. I can not state the exact amount; but I have ascertained that his compensation has amounted to about that sum.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are we to understand that we are proposing to increase the compensation of the minister to Portugal to the extent of $1,500 on this appropriation bill? Is that the situation?

Mr. DINSMORE. Not the compensation—the salary. He does not now receive any fees; formerly he did.

Mr. DINGLEY. How does it happen that he obtained fees before which have now been cut off?

Mr. DINSMORE. He was minister resident and consul-general; and as consul-general there was a division of fees between him and consular agents under him. Now that he is elevated to the rank of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, he gets no consular fees whatever.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I have in my hand an appropriation bill passed in 1892, which refers to this officer as minister resident and consul-general in Portugal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out, in line 5, the words "and Portugal" and inserting after the word "dollars," in line 6, the words "and minister resident and consul-general to Portugal, $5,000."

I hold in my hand a Senate document bearing date January 23, 1893, giving official and unofficial fees of consuls, consul-general, etc. I find that the official fees at Lisbon amounted, according to this report, to $1,470.50. Of those official fees the consul or consul-general never received one dollar, because under a law passed many years ago those fees go into the Treasury. I find that the unofficial fees at the same place amounted to $82.65. So that I am satisfied—I say it with all respect—that the information which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] has obtained from the State Department must be erroneous. The amount which this man is deprived of by being denied participation in the consular fees is $82.65.

Now, I am willing to put this provision back into its former shape, so that this officer shall be minister resident and consul-general, as he was last year and as he has been ever since he was "economized" into that position twenty years ago, under the lead of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. But I am not willing to increase this salary $1,500. I have no objection to paying an increased salary if gentlemen think the office is worth it; but I want the matter put on the true ground. If the gentleman from Kentucky in charge of this bill is satisfied from his great knowledge of the public service that the dignity and well-being of the United States require an increase of the salary of our minister to Portugal by the addition of $1,500, let him rise in his place and say so. Let it be understood that such is the reason. If that reason be stated I will not oppose the proposition. But if this increase is to be proposed without any good reason—merely because the gentleman's party is in power and we are out—I wish to know it.

In other words, I do not want the salaries increased under a misapprehension, and I would like to have some explanation made of it.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. I think the gentleman from Illinois is under a misapprehension. He states the amount of unofficial fees received as a part of the salary of this official. As I understand it, and my information is, he not only received that amount from these unofficial fees, but as a consul-general was entitled to a division of the fees of the consular agents under him, which fees aggregated approximately $1,500 in Portugal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What does the gentleman from Illinois say to that?

Mr. HITT. He could not under the law get more than $1,000 anywhere in the world.

Mr. DINSMORE. My information was that it amounted to about $1,500, including the unofficial fees to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred. I may be mistaken as to the amount. I should regret to make a misstatement.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That disposes of that subject.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] says that he could not under any provision of law get more than $1,000.

Mr. HITT. By agencies, I mean.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And at Lisbon, as shown by this statement, the unofficial fees were only $82.65. Now, I am willing, if you believe this ought to be done, that you should do it; but I want you to have the courage to march right up to it and do it in a proper way.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Foreign Affairs carefully examined the question of the salaries of the various ministers to other countries, and concluded to put into the bill an increase of last year's salaries for the ministers to Switzerland and Portugal. The general law already authorizes $7,500 each for these. The committee, however, was unwilling to raise the salaries to that sum, but as certain fees had been taken away from the minister to Portugal, after the Committee on Foreign Affairs carefully investigated the importance of the missions to these countries, we unanimously agreed to fix the salary of the ministers at Switzerland and Portugal at $6,500 each.

As far back as 1874 the salaries in these countries were fixed at $7,500. If we have ministers abroad, we must at least furnish them with money sufficient to pay the necessary and ordinary expenses; and the committee, after a thorough consideration, did increase the salaries of the ministers to these countries $1,500 each. These are the only increases over last year's appropriation for ministers that we have recommended in the pending bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to be settled that this is an increase of salary of $1,500 in each of these cases to these officials.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is, the ministers to Switzerland and Portugal.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes. Now, I do not object so much to the increase, but I do object to excuses being given for the purpose of concealing the increase. Let it be stated openly that it is an increase.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I so stated.

Mr. BURROWS. In both cases, Switzerland and Portugal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to modify my amendment, and am willing then that a vote shall be taken. I withdraw the former amendment, and now move to strike out the words "six thousand five hundred," in line 5, on page 3, and insert the words "five thousand;" and, in line 6, strike out "thirteen" and insert "ten."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS WHILE RECEIVING INSTRUCTIONS AND MAKING TRANSITS.

To pay the salaries of ministers, consuls, and other officers of the United States for the periods actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions, and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1749 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky what his estimate is as to the expenditure that would be made under this indefinite appropriation. This is to pay the salaries of ministers, consuls, and other officials of the diplomatic service while making their way leisurely to their posts of duty. What amount is covered by the item?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. This provision to which the gentleman from Illinois refers is the same provision that has been adopted in appropriation bills for many years past.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That was not the question. It is, what is your estimate as to the amount which will be expended under this indefinite appropriation for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. There is no estimate furnished in the Book of Estimates, but I will obtain the information he desires in a few moments. It is in the Fifth Auditor's report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then the gentleman can not say whether it will be $3,000,000 or a million and a half dollars?

I want to ask the gentleman what was expended this year for this purpose?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. There is a statute—section 1740 of the Revised Statutes—which authorizes this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I know that thoroughly; but does the gentleman know how much has been expended of this permanent appropriation this year?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I can say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that this does not increase the amount that will go to pay our minister. It is to pay the salaries of ministers, consuls, and other officers of the United States for the periods actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions, and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1740 of the Revised Statutes. So much as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, is hereby appropriated.

It is known, I suppose, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that almost all ministers and consuls who are appointed have to wait awhile, usually, I believe, not exceeding thirty days, to receive their instructions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, I understand; and therefore, as the gentleman can not state what the amount is, I move to strike out, commencing with the word "so," in line 2, down to the end of line 4, and insert the words "one hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me, I will suggest to him that it does not cost that much. I have before me the last annual report of the Fifth Auditor. Last year the amount paid for salaries of diplomatic officers while receiving instructions under the section I have referred to was $52,572, and the salaries paid to consuls while receiving instructions and in transit was $28,000; so that it will not be more than $80,000, probably.

Mr. HITT. That amount is unusually large, Mr. Chairman, because during the last year a large part of the force, both diplomatic and consular, has been changed, and the men have been sent and kept waiting.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It will not be so large this year.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. How much does the gentleman think it will cost?

Mr. HITT. I think the service has been so thoroughly cleaned out by Mr. Quincy in the consular department, and by the President and Secretary of State in the diplomatic branch, that there will be only a fraction of the $70,000 needed for any changes in the coming year.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will $50,000 be enough?

Mr. HITT. Fifty thousand dollars will probably be more than ample.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to make it $40,000; striking out the lines indicated, and inserting $40,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 2, after the word "statute" strike out the following language: "So much as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, is hereby appropriated," and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty thousand dollars."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph of the bill provides for the payment of salaries of diplomatic and consular officers while receiving instructions and in transit. It does not apply to anything else. The expenses have necessarily been heavier during the past year because of many changes in our diplomatic and consular service. It has been the law so long that I know of no reason why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] should be agreed to. The whole amount paid out last year was only about $80,000. I do not believe it will be that much, or near that, next year, but I do not think it will be safe or proper for this House to adopt an amendment fixing the sum at $40,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Make it $60,000, then.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] is right. The sum which he has named covers the expenditure for that purpose during the year that ended last June. A very large expenditure, because of the change of Administration, came after the 1st of July; so that it is probable that if we had the returns for the year following they would be very much larger.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will modify my amendment by making it $80,000

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a question?

Mr. HITT. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] had this bill in charge during the Fifty-first Congress did he make this item a definite or indefinite appropriation?

Mr. HITT. It was in the same words in which it is set forth in this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. An indefinite appropriation?

Mr. HITT. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, why does the gentleman from Illinois insist that it should be a definite appropriation at this time?

Mr. HITT. My colleague, I suppose, voices the sentiment of the House——

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois that question. Does the gentleman favor it?

Mr. HITT. My colleague is, I think, voicing the sentiment of the House——

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he favors changing from a definite to an indefinite appropriation?

Mr. HITT. Well, if you want my opinion personally, I would say that I think it is wise to specify wherever you can, as I have seen the gentleman from Texas do in appropriation bills; but I do know also that the law is so framed now, and the authority of the Department is so strictly limited, that there can not be any fraud. Yet it would be a satisfaction to have it made definite.

Mr. SAYERS. Why did not the gentlemen do that, then, in the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. HITT. We did not care to make the innovation, because we were not then so vigilantly watchful or such professors of frugality as the gentlemen on the other side have since taught us to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the clause in the bill is drawn in accordance with the statute. I have here section 1740 of the general law, which I will have read if anyone desires to hear it. If not, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out "so much as may be necessary" and inserting "sixty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I accept that amendment.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment, and I ask to have the statute read.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say at this time that I do not apprehend any mismanagement or any misappropriation of this fund. It is not a large fund——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). The gentleman from Mississippi will please suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, and, in support of his point of order sends to the Clerk's desk the statute to be read.

Mr. STOCKDALE. My recollection is that the gentleman did not make the point of order until I was recognized and speaking, and then it was too late.

The CHAIRMAN. He was entitled to make it immediately on the presentation of the amendment. Indeed, strictly under the rule, that was the only time he could make it. The Clerk will report the statute.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman asked to have the amendment again reported. If he did not hear it the first time that was not my fault.

The CHAIRMAN. He asked to have the amendment read again, and the Clerk again reported it, but the gentleman from Kentucky made the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, and in support of the point of order sent the statute to the Clerk's desk to be read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statute, as follows:

Sec. 1740. No ambassador, envoy extraordinary, minister plenipotentiary, minister resident, commissioner, chargé d'affaires, secretary of legation, assistant secretary of legation, interpreter to any legation or consulate, or consul general, consul, or commercial agent, mentioned in Schedules B and C, shall be entitled to compensation for his services, except from the time when he reaches his post and enters upon his official duties to the time when he ceases to hold such office, and for such time as is actually and necessarily occupied in receiving his instructions, not to exceed 30 days, and in making the direct transit between the place of his residence when appointed, and his post of duty, at the commencement and termination of the period of his official service, for which he shall in all cases be allowed and paid, except as hereinafter mentioned. And no person shall be deemed to hold any such office after his successor is appointed and actually enters upon the duties of his office at his post of duty, nor after his official residence at such post has terminated, if not so relieved. But no such allowance or payment shall be made to any consul-general, consul, or commercial agent, not embraced in Schedules B and C, or to any vice-consul, vice-commercial agent, deputy consul, or consular agent, for the time so occupied in receiving instructions, or in such transit as aforesaid; nor shall any such officer as is referred to in this section be allowed compensation for the time so occupied in such transit, at the termination of the period of his official service, if he has resigned or been recalled therefrom for any malfeasance in his office.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi changes existing law; and I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi upon the point of order.

Mr. STOCKDALE. As I understand the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it simply means that, when a statute authorizes an indefinite appropriation, the House is without power to make it different. I want to know if that is the position of the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will please give his attention to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. STOCKDALE. As I understand the gist of the point of order is, that because this statute, 1740 of the Revised Statutes, authorizes an indefinite appropriation, the House is without power to make it different. Is that right?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. My point of order is that it changes existing law.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not change existing law.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Even if it did, it would be as easy to make a declaration before the House that you have no right to detract from the Scripture, and apply it to this proposition with the same force. And it seems to me there is no authority by the statute to make an appropriation for these incidental expenses of a greater amount than may be necessary. You must first ascertain how much is necessary. Will the gentleman from Kentucky or from anywhere else maintain that the statute turns the Treasury loose to any officer that may want to expend the money?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. The Chair overrules the point of order. Now, the Chair is ready to hear the gentleman from Mississippi on his amendment.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Then I have very little to say, Mr. Chairman. And I only want to emphasize the fact, as I was saying before, that while I would not authorize the expenditure beyond what is necessary in this item, I believe that this system of legislation, that system of appropriation, has worked injury to the Treasury of the United States. I say there is no reason, no matter what the course and practice may have been before, or by antecedent Congresses, and in my judgment there is no excuse for the Congress of the United States, which is charged with the appropriation of the money of the United States, in authorizing any officer, however great or small, to expend such a sum as he may please in any part of the discharge of his duty. I believe further, without having time enough to go into the facts, that these ministers and consuls abroad have been paid and supported at times when they were preparing to go away, when they ought to have been at home, or ought to have been paying their own expenses. Therefore I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois with this amendment, which would make it so that we could know what we were paying.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will accept the gentleman's amendment making it $6,000.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the gentleman from Mississippi has been arguing this amendment under a misapprehension of the facts. The statement which he made at the conclusion of his remarks, and I had not the honor and good fortune to hear all that he said upon the subject, indicates an opinion in his mind that the Government of the United States pays some specific sum, stated by him, as the cost of transit of the minister to his post; and he further said that he is also paid money when he is here at home. Now, the law does not provide that a minister or a consul going abroad receive any specific sum whatever, but he is allowed what is called a "transit allowance," which is nothing more nor less than the amount of his salary from the time he starts until he reaches his post. That is all there is in it. He is paid his salary according to the rate allowed to him.

Mr. HITT. But he is paid that salary at the same time his predecessor is paid a corresponding salary, so that it makes a double salary taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. DINSMORE. I understand that the salary is paid where one is coming in and the other is going out.

Mr. HITT. They overlap.

Mr. DINSMORE. Nevertheless, such has been the policy heretofore pursued. This Government provides no allowance whatever for outfit, as is done in other countries; but it does allow the minister going abroad his salary from the time he leaves his home until he returns to it; and the regulations specify the number of days he is allowed to travel in going out and coming back, and he can not draw pay for a greater time. The amount given depends entirely upon the post he is accredited to and the distance which must be traveled. Now, then, he is allowed no more under the law than I have stated; and nobody knows better than the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who has served so long as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the ministers in the foreign service are not paid exorbitant salaries.

In a great many instances the salaries are insufficient to pay the expenses of these officers; as was the case, for instance, with the salary which was increased by the committee and which has already been passed upon by the Committee of the Whole to-day. In that case the minister paid out for living expenses the whole amount of his salary, $5,000. He wrote to me (and I know him to be a reliable gentleman) that his living expenses for himself and family at a hotel were $400 a month, consuming practically the whole of his salary. He is a man of limited means, and could not set up an establishment for himself. Thus, in many cases the salary is insufficient to pay the expenses of these officers. In proposing this allowance for the expenses of the minister while en route to his post of duty, we are doing nothing more than has been considered fair in the past, and nothing more than has always been done hitherto by our Government, which has been more economical than foreign governments, which, besides these traveling expenses, have allowed an outfit.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I move to amend by striking out the last word. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] misapprehends the position that I took. I was not saying that these expenses should not be allowed, but that I wanted to know how much they are.

Mr. DINSMORE. You do know that, under the law.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes; after the thing is done.

Mr. DINSMORE. You know before.

Mr. STOCKDALE. No, that is just what I want to know now; and this bill does not inform me.

Mr. DINSMORE. The law provides what the salary shall be, and it can not be any more or any less.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I understand what salary the law provides. But if we appropriate money for the expenses of these ministers while they are nursing themselves to get ready to start to their posts of official duty, we want to know how much it is going to cost. We do not want anybody to dip into the Treasury without let or hindrance if we are going to be a party of economy and reform.

Gentlemen say we are to make this allowance because it has been done heretofore. In the name of Heaven, are we never to do anything that has not been done heretofore? Must we go on forever in the old beaten track and spend money in certain directions because our ancestors expended it in that way? If we are to have no "reform," what would become of the Republican party? The only thing that keeps them alive is their claim to be a party of "reform." And as reference has been made to Mr. Gresham I will say that they reformed him so thoroughly that he had to leave their party and seek a better one.

It is said that one of our ministers was obliged to spend $400 in order to keep his family at a hotel. Well, I can find gentlemen of this House who are paying $400 in order to board with their families at a hotel; and it might be argued that we must give all members such a salary as will enable them to live at hotels as expensively as the rich members of the House do. Sir, there is no argument in that. We are not a Government of show, and tinsel and display. The greatest epoch in the history of this country in respect to matters of that kind was the day when James Buchanan shuffled off the court dress of England and walked down the aisle in the dress of a plain American citizen. We do not want to send our ministers abroad to display gewgaws upon their persons and to spend large sums of money at elegant hotels. If they live repectably that is enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as modified upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 50, noes 63.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No quorum has voted. I think we had better have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois calls for tellers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No, sir; I make the point of no quorum, which will necessitate our having tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky and Mr. CANNON of Illinois were appointed.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] make the point that there is no quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made the point that no quorum had voted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 102.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment as modified was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretaries of legations to China, Japan, and Mexico, at $2,625 each, $7,875.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire the reason for this increase of the salary of the secretary of legation at Mexico.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. The mission to Mexico is now and has been for several years past a first-class mission; but the salary of the secretary of legation has not been changed. It remains at $1,800, the amount fixed when the mission was second class. It was believed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs that this salary should be placed on a par with that paid to other secretaries of legation where the amount drawn by the minister is $17,500. This was done not only that the salary might be uniform with the salaries of other secretaries of similar grades, but because the actual duties of the office entitle the secretary of legation to this small increase.

The duties of this official in Mexico have increased and are very exacting, and the volume of work is as great if not greater than anywhere else. The Department several times has asked this increase. It asked it when the present bill was being prepared by the committee, and after careful consideration the committee believed, as the mission to Mexico was made a first-class mission, that the secretary should be allowed the same salary as secretaries receive at Paris, London, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

Mr. COOMBS. And I will add as a further reason, with the permission of the Chair, that the expense of living in Mexico has been much increased within the last few years.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now let us see about the soundness of the reasons suggested for this increase. It is true that four years ago, when the Hon. Thomas Ryan, who had seen fourteen to sixteen years' service in this House, was appointed minister to Mexico, it was made a first-class mission, and the salary was increased from $12,000 to $17,500 in gold. It has been retained at that figure ever since.

The increase was made a little bit from a personal standpoint, I think, because Mr. Ryan was one of the best equipped men in the Government for that service; but it was made also from another standpoint, namely, that our relations with Mexico were growing more and more important every year, and we were just on the eve of that legislation which was, under the leadership of Mr. Blaine, to establish reciprocity on this continent. We had already commenced to arrange for the Pan-American Congress, and, reaching out from the standpoint of strengthening our influence on this continent, Congress thought it well to increase the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I should like to have a few minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The reasons having passed by for the increase of the salary, and the place being filled now by a mere politician, and the Democracy being in power, and they have already got the ax sharpened to cut reciprocity up by the roots——

Mr. TRACEY. Dig it up.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; as the gentleman from New York says, dig it up by the roots. And the reason having ceased for the increase of the salary, I would cheerfully vote to decrease it and put it back to where it was—$12,000.

But, instead of doing that, and when there is no reason for making the other change suggested, why, we find the committee increasing the salary of the secretary of legation from $1,800 to $2,600 a year. It remained at $1,800 for the last four years. Now, the reason being gone and the Democracy also in power, for the sake of paying this salary out of a bankrupt Treasury, borrowing money at 5 per cent to pay the daily expenses of the Government, instead of reducing the salary of the minister from $17,500 to what it was, we find this bill proposing an increase of that of the secretary of legation to the amount named here. I tell you that you are not going to do it unless you vote to do it, and if you want to do it you have got to let the country understand it.

I am for paying salaries, and fair salaries, where they are needed and where the man is serving the Government; but when you go back upon every principle that would enable our people, either commercially or industrially to dominate this continent, now or in the future, I am not willing, by my consent at least, to see these salaries increased, when those who draw them can not do any service of value to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I will now make the formal amendment. I have made the informal one, and talked about ten minutes. I will make a formal amendment now to strike out in line 11 the words "and Mexico."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that this paragraph has already been passed over.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I did not so understand it. I was discussing it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was discussing a motion to strike out the last word, being the word "dollars," in lines 14 and 15.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think that paragraph all goes together. And I have this marked on my bill here for the purpose of making the motion.

Mr. HITT. I would remind the Chairman that the gentleman from Illinois was endeavoring to get the attention of the Chair, but the Clerk was reading at great rapidity.

Mr. MOSES. But the gentleman from Illinois had sat down to congratulate himself about his speech, and forgot all about the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when its attention was called to the gentleman from Illinois, who was seeking recognition, the Chair asked the Clerk how far he had proceeded with the reading of the bill, and was informed that he had reached page 4, lines 14 and 15. The Chair so stated to the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois offered a pro forma amendment, and proceeded to discuss the salary of the secretary of legation at Mexico; and the Chair understood, and the committee will understand, that great latitude is indulged in Committee of the Whole in the discussion of such matters. The Chair therefore made no suggestion about it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, now, if the Chair holds that I am too late, by one word, to make this motion, namely, because line 14 has been read, and the paragraph that precedes it closes with line 13, if I am to be ruled out on that point, then I want to ask unanimous consent to make this motion to strike out the words "and Mexico," which will leave the salary at $1,800, what the law provides, and what it has always been.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I must object to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In the name of economy and reform, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the gentleman will not do that, and I will suggest to the Chairman that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said that upon this question, if the majority desired to raise this salary, it could not be done except by a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recalls that.

Mr. BURROWS. He intended to offer the amendment, and this is purely an oversight.

Mr. COOMBS. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not object to any show of economy on the part of the Republicans, because it is so rare.

Mr. BURROWS. That will be the shortest way out of it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Does the gentleman state that he moves to strike out the words "and Mexico"?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I intended to make the motion. I offered a pro forma amendment for the purpose of eliciting some information and a reply from the gentleman from Kentucky, and then I intended, when the pro forma amendment was disposed of, to move to strike out the words "and Mexico;" in other words, to test the sense of the committee as to whether that increase of salary, from $1,800 to $2,600, should be allowed.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. And now you are asking a vote on that amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I have no objection, if you will vote on it immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to recur to the paragraph relating to secretaries of legation—China, Japan, and Mexico—and move to strike out the words "and Mexico." As many as favor that motion will signify it by saying aye.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 72.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No quorum.

The Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 116.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair directs the Clerk to read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clause 2, Rule XXIII. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the Chair shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with this rule the Chair directs the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would submit to the gentleman from Kentucky that he ask unanimous consent to dispense with the calling of the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I supposed we could do anything by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Abbott,	Cousins,	Hudson,	Robinson, Pa.

The roll having been called, the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, finding itself without a quorum, as Chairman of the committee, in accordance with the rule, I caused the roll to be called, upon which roll call 194 members responded to their names. I report herewith the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that, the Committee finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called and he now reports the names of the absentees to the House. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety-four gentlemen having answered to their names, the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers will resume their places.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he ask unanimous consent that this clause be passed by until he completes the bill, and that at the completion of the bill we turn back and dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to passing by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and let it be acted upon when we get through with the bill. Then, let the Clerk read on.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary of legation and consul-general to Honolulu, $4,000.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BAILEY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6108, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GEISSENHAINER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HUDSON, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York, one week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. COMPTON, this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GROSVENOR, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CORNISH, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

FURTHER URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the further urgent deficiency bill.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for further urgent deficiences in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

"For wages of workmen and adjusters, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, $52,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For compensation and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories on account of fiscal years, as follows:

"For 1893, $3,334.

"For 1894, $15,900.

"To pay the clerk to the Speaker's table for services rendered as clerk to the Committee on Rules during the first and second sessions of the Fifty-third Congress, $500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. M. COCKRELL,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for further urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1894, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on each of the said amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendment numbered 1, appropriates $52,500 for wages of workmen and adjusters at the mints, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of $16,000, as proposed by the Senate for the Mint at Philadelphia.

On amendment numbered 2, restores the provision proposed by the House authorizing the printing, on or before August 1 next, of 100,000 copies of a Census Abstract.

On amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of United States courts for 1894, as follows:

For fees of witnesses, $200,000;
For fees of United States attorneys, $101,000;
For special compensation of United States attorneys, $10,000;
For regular assistants to United States attorneys, $21,000;
For special assistants to United States attorneys, $40,340;
For fees of clerks, $116,000;
For fees of commissioners, $187,200;
For rent of court rooms, $42,000.

On amendments numbered 10, 11, and 12, appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for certain expenses of that body, in the aggregate $21,000.

On amendment numbered 13, appropriates $1,200 for compiling the Congressional Directory for the second session of the Fifty-third Congress.

On amendment numbered 14, appropriates $19,234 for compensation and mileage of members of the House of Representatives on account of the fiscal years 1893 and 1894, and $500 to pay the clerk to the Speaker's table for services rendered to the Committee on Rules.

On amendment numbered 15, provides for a laborer in the law library of the Library of Congress at $30 per month, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment numbered 16, amends, as proposed by the Senate, the act of January 27, 1894, relating to contracts for supplies in the Departments at Washington.

The bill, as agreed upon, appropriates $1,854,304.66.

JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps proper in connection with this report for me to call the attention of the House to one appropriation to which the conferees on the part of the House have agreed, and that is to the item for the rent of court-houses and for court rooms for the United States courts—$42,000. Of the appropriation of $42,000, over $8,000 is intended to pay the rent during the remainder of the present fiscal year of three floors in a building in the city of Chicago which is now being used by the circuit and district courts. There is a question, and a very serious one, as to the necessity of this rental contract, regarding which there was some important and pointed testimony before the conference committee; but inasmuch as the contract has been made, and it is believed by competent authority, and as according to the terms of the contract the Government will be responsible for the rent of these floors until the 5th day of May, 1895, the conference committee thought that it would not be wise to delay the passage of this bill by the consideration of the question of the propriety of the rental contract at the present time.

It calls for an annual expenditure of about $26,000. We have the assurance, however, from members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, that an opportunity will be afforded, when the sundry civil bill returns to the House, for the consideration of the contract. It was not believed by the conferees of the House that it would be within the power of Congress to repeal the contract before the 5th day of May, 1895; so that the House will have abundant time to inquire into and take action upon it, either when the sundry civil bill returns to the House at the present session or during the next session of this Congress.

With this explanation, if no other information be desired by any member of the House, I will ask for the adoption of the report.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. RICHARDS, from the Committee on Claims, the bill (S. 1055) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Edward N. Fish and others for supplies furnished the Indian service. (Report No. 729.)

Also, the bill (H. R. 2842) to reimburse George C. Tanner, late consul, etc., the sum of $200, paid by him for rent of rooms. (Report No. 730.)

Also, the bill (H. R. 1326) for the relief of Olivia and Ida Walter, children and heirs of Thomas U. Walter, deceased. (Report No. 732.)

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. RICHARDS, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the following bills; which, with the accompanying reports, were ordered to be printed and laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 1521) for the relief of R. W. Scott. (Report No. 731.)

A bill (H. R. 775) authorizing the appointment of a commissioner and the settlement of the claims of certain citizens of Kansas. (Report No. 734.)

A bill (H. R. 1519) for the relief of Thomas Chambers. (Report No. 733.)

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HARTMAN: A bill, (H. R. 6750) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson and State of Montana—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 6751) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians in California for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 6756) to regulate the sale of goods marked "sterling" or "sterling silver" or "coin" or "coin silver"—to the Committee on the Judiciary."

By Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota: A resolution to authorize the investigation of the conduct of Judge Sanborn, of the eighth judicial circuit, in ordering certain citizens of Minnesota and North Dakota to appear before him at St. Paul April 27, 1894, in connection with the Great Northern Railway strike now pending—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 6757) to remove the charge of desertion of John Dewitt, of 460 West Ninth street, Cincinnati, Ohio—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 6758) to increase the pension of L. P. Alford—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORMAN: A bill (H. R. 6759) granting a pension to Eliza Ann Harrington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 6760) for the relief of B. F. Dowell—to the Committee on Judiciary.

By Mr. McKAIG: A bill (H. R. 6761) for the relief of Edgar H. Bates for the loss of his minor son, Millard F. Bates, who was killed on or about September 3, 1872—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 6762) to pension William H. Fry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6676) for the relief of Peter Puckett; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: Petition of pastor and trustees of Martini Evangelical Lutheran Church, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the passage of proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States acknowledging therein the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of James H. McDonald, M. D., and 291 others, of Chicago, in favor of the passage of the Manderson-Hainer bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 20, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 21, 1893, a report of the Third Auditor of the Treasury and accompanying papers in regard to any and all matters not heretofore reported relative to the Indian war claims of the State of California, etc.; which was read.

Mr. WHITE. The communication is in response to a resolution submitted by me and adopted by the Senate last December. I suggest that, in so far as the communication relates to the sum claimed, the report of the Treasury Department, and the statement of the State of California, that it be printed without the exhibits, and that with the exhibits the communication and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 14th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 17th instant, a list of all persons in office April 10, 1894, in the Department of Justice, employed by the Government in the defense of Indian depredation cases, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the International Union of Journeymen Horseshoers, of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty with China; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BUTLER presented petition of the city council of Charleston, S. C., praying that an appropriation of $155,000 be made for the purchase of a site for a depot for the Light-House Service, to be constructed at or near one of the dock piers at Charleston, S. C., and also for the erection of suitable buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Franklin Lodge, No. 16, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Moline, Ill., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of the president and professors of the University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo., remonstrating against the transfer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to the Navy and Geological Survey; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Maxville Lodge, No. 332, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Maxville, Mo., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Officesand Post-Roads.

Mr. PEFFER presented the memorial of Rev. G. Luecke, pastor, and sundry other members of St. Martin's Evangelical Lutheran Church, of Winfield, Kans., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the preamble of the Constitution of the United States recognizing the Deity; which was re erred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1841, providing for the seating of female help in offices, stores, etc., when such persons are not actively employed; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1301) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MCPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1779) authorizing certain officers of the Navy to administer oaths, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1784) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VOORHEES. Some time ago I offered what I intended to propose as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill a proposition for the purchase of the oil portrait of Dolly Madison, by Mr. Andrews. I am now authorized by the Committee on the Library to report it in the form of a bill, which I ask may be read and placed upon the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1936) for the purchase of the oil portrait of Mrs. Dolly Madison, by E. F. Andrews, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1774) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish false swearing before trial boards of the Metropolitan police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1892, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1629) to amend the act incorporating the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved June 19, 1888, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAY TICKETS.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 443) to provide for the sale of new tickets by the street railway companies of the District of Columbia, to report two amendments to the first amendment of the House, and recommend concurrence in the amendment as proposed to be amended, and that the remaining amendment of the House be concurred in without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out section 1 of the bill and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act, each street railway and street herdic transportation company in the District of Columbia shall issue its own tickets, and sell no tickets issued by any other company. Such tickets shall be printed and sold in sheets of six tickets each, and after having been once used shall be canceled by the company which issued the same.

The amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the amendment of the House of Representatives were, in line 1 of the proposed section 1, to strike out the words "from and," and in line 2, after the word "after" to insert "thirty days from," so as to read:

That after thirty days from the passage of this act, etc.

And to add to the section the following proviso:

Provided, That all street railway companies and herdic transportation companies doing business in the District of Columbia shall receive and exchange tickets with each other, and said companies shall make monthly settlements with each other, and shall redeem in money any tickets in excess of the number of tickets exchanged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the first amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the House of Representatives was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "railway" to insert "or street herdic transportation," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any street railway or street herdic transportation company doing business in the District of Columbia which shall violate the provisions of this act shall be liable to a fine of not to exceed $10 for each offense, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the second amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

COURTS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. PUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 108) to fix the times and places for holding the Federal courts in the State and district of Nebraska, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I ask that Senator to consent to have the bill which he just reported recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. In the light of what was said, I think in the Senator's absence, in regard to the creation of a new judicial district in that State, and as I understand one of the Senators from Nebraska would like to be heard before the committee, perhaps a solution of the matter could be arrived at which would be satisfactory to all parties. I ask the Senator to allow the bill to be recommitted that the matter may be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist upon that request. The bill as reported I understand provides for certain terms of Federal court in the State of Nebraska that are necessary and proper. I think that its passage ought not to be hampered in any way by the bill of my colleague now before the Judiciary Committee. If the Judiciary Committee see fit to recommend the bill now before them for the division of the State into two judicial districts, it will be a very easy matter by a very few words to fix the terms of the courts. If that bill for any reason should fail to be recommended or fail to pass, then this bill would be so much farther advanced upon the Calendar and could be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. The recommitment of the bill will not embarrass or delay the final action of the Senate one moment, I am quite sure. I take perhaps a little blame upon myself. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] desired to be heard before the committee and he was not heard. Under those circumstances, I suppose the unvarying course of the Senate would be, on the request of any member of the committee, to have a recommitment, unless it were in a case where the recommitment would substantially or at all delay the ultimate action on the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. If my colleague desires to be heard before the Judiciary Committee, I have not the slightest objection to the bill being re-referred. I was not aware of that.

Mr. HOAR. That is the ground which I offer.

Mr. PUGH. The bill that I reported from the Judiciary Committee relates purely to a local matter, and I consider that it ought to be under the control of the Senators from that State. It has passed the other House unanimously, and——

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the bill had better be recommitted to the committee. There are matters on file in that committee which, it seems to me, must have been overlooked in the deliberation upon the bill. But it is not only for that reason, and because I had no notice that this local matter was to be heard by the committee and acted upon. Yesterday I introduced a bill which is akin to this, and I think it should be considered with it. For these reasons I think it desirable that the bill should be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will consent to a recommittal of the bill. I have in my hand some papers handed me by the senior Senator from Nebraska some time ago, and also some papers from a member of the other House from Nebraska. I was unable to be present at the last two meetings of the committee, which was of course my own fault. For this reason I should like to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. PUGH. To terminate this consumption of time, I consent to a recommittal of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the recommittal of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING OF MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. William H. Enochs, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, 8,000 copies, of which number, 2,000 copies shall be delivered to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Ohio, which shall include 50 copies to be bound in full morocco to be delivered to the family of the deceased, and of the remaining, 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to have engraved and printed a portrait of the said William H. Enochs, to accompany the said eulogies.

BERING SEA AWARD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I introduce a bill and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put it upon its passage. It is to correct a palpable error in the act recently passed prescribing the Bering Sea regulations. I do not know where the error occurred, but the bill as it passed the two Houses of Congress substituted the word "exclusive" for "inclusive," which makes a very material change in the award, and I think it ought to be at once corrected. There can be no doubt about the error. I myself went to the office of the Secretary of State and saw there the error carried into the enrolled bill signed by the President of the United States, and it had already been the subject of correspondence between our State Department and the English minister. I therefore ask leave to introduce a bill and have it read at length, and, if there is no objection, I should like to have it passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The act as it was passed makes the measure mean the very reverse of what it was intended to mean, I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. And this bill is to correct it.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill I introduce is a mere correction of the error.

Mr. HOAR. Let us know what is the mistake and what is the plan proposed for correction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I introduce the bill and ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 1928) to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration, at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals" was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration, at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals," approved April 6, 1894, be amended by striking out the word "exclusive," where it occurs in said section 1, and inserting the word "inclusive," so that said section will read: "That no citizen of the United States, or person owing the duty of obedience to the laws or the treaties of the United States, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or pursue, at any time, or in any manner whatever, outside of territorial waters, any fur seal in the waters surrounding the Pribilof Islands within a zone of 60 geographical miles (60 to a degree of latitude) around said islands, inclusive of the territorial waters."

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that I have before me the printed bill as it was passed. It shows that in the preamble, in the recital of the articles of the award of the Tribunal of Arbitration, the words "inclusive of the territorial waters" are used. Then in the body of the bill, in the enactment of the law to carry into execution the award, the words used are "exclusive of the territorial waters." I am satisfied that this error was not made in the Secretary's office. I examined and found that the bill as it was sent to the Printer was right, and instead of "exclusive," as in the print, the word was "inclusive;" but when it came back from the Printer it was acted upon by both Houses of Congress without noticing the error, which undoubtedly in some way occurred in the Printing Office. The bill passed both Houses of Congress, and was sent to the President and signed by him and became the law of the land. This mistake should be corrected promptly, so as to avoid any misapprehension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1929) to grant an honorable discharge to Isham B. Rogers, alias R. A. Canfield; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 1931) for the relief of Holmes and Leathers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1932) granting a pension to Mrs. Sophia Lessing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 1933) granting a pension to Ann E. Chapman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 1934) defining the rights and privileges of mixed-blood Indians under the treaties and statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 1935) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER. At the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution (S. R. 76) to print the proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, held in conformity with the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, was read by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF STATE-BANK TAX.

Mr. GORDON. I submit a resolution which I consider of great moment at this time, and I beg leave to read it from my desk:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to report at the earliest day practicable, with such provisions as said committee may approve, a bill to repeal the law and all amendments thereto imposing a tax upon the issues of State banks.

Mr. President, I am deeply impressed as to the advisability of such action at this time. Of course, I shall not now discuss the resolution or the subject to which it relates; but I ask the Senate to allow me a few moments only, to read the few suggestions which I hold in my hand and which I wish to send with the resolution to the committee and the country. The serious condition of business interests, as well as the threatened disturbances in the country, would seem to justify careful consideration of any proposition which might prove helpful.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. GORDON. The suggestions are as follows:

First. The repeal of this tax will do more than any other possible legislation to bring quiet to the country, to settle the disturbing financial controversy, and to relieve this question of the somewhat sectional character which it has assumed and which all thoughtful men must deplore.

Second. Such repeal will place upon each State which may take advantage of it the responsibility of providing a sound, sufficient, and satisfactory currency for the local use of its own citizens—a currency which can and will be made available for the payment of State taxes, salaries of State officers, expenses of State governments, and furnish a medium of exchange for nineteen-twentieths of all business transactions within the limits of the State.

Third. It will leave the present banking system to stand upon its own merits and to furnish the necessary facilities for interstate exchanges.

Fourth. It will bring immediate quiet and confidence to the people of those States which demand the right of organizing State banks of issue within their own borders and for the convenience and benefit of their own citizens—a right of which the people of such States believe themselves now wrongfully denied by the representatives of other States.

Fifth. Such repeal can not by possibility damage the interests or disturb the business of those States which fail to avail themselves of the advantages which repeal will afford.

Sixth. The conditions have wholly changed since this prohibitory tax was imposed; and banking intelligence and education acquired by the experience of the last thirty years give assurance that the Legislature of no State would devise for its citizens an unsound banking system; or if it should, the damage would fall upon the citizens of that State, and the failure of such system to meet the requirements of business would insure its speedy repeal or the substitution of a better system.

Seventh. Such repeal will be a recognition of the doctrine which lies at the foundation of our free institutions, namely: That the people are capable of self-government; while a refusal of such repeal is a standing proclamation by Congress of its disbelief in the honesty and capacity of the people of the States.

Eighth. Such repeal will enable the States to protect their own citizens against the concentration of currency in one locality or section, either by design or by the ordinary accidents or mutations of trade.

Ninth. Such repeal will be an honest compliance with one of the plain pledges given to the people by the party now intrusted with power.

Tenth. Such repeal will in large measure divert from Congress to States the growing popular demand for more money, lessen socialistic tendencies in the country by turning popular thought from the General Government to the respective States as the sources of relief, and thus commit to the States, where under our system it rightfully belongs, the duty or responsibility, each for itself, of solving or dealing with those disturbing problems which more and more threaten the peace of communities and the permanence of free government.

I earnestly invoke, sir, the prompt and thoughtful consideration of this important subject by the Finance Committee and the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed.

REPORT ON NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. BUTLER (for Mr. MORGAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved. That there be printed for the use of the Senate 5,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 331, relative to the Nicaragua Canal, together with a topical index of said report prepared under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RIVER AND HARBOR EXPENDITURES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not yet concluded. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 17th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the amount of appropriations made and expended by the Government for the improvement of rivers and harbors since the 1st day of January, 1865, to the present date, specifying the different rivers and harbors in which improvements have been made and the amounts expended therefor, respectively.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to modify the resolution by inserting "the 3rd day of March, 1887," instead of the time named in the resolution, the information having been furnished to the date I now name.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Lest I should not be here when the information is sent in, I suggest that when the report is made upon the resolution it ought to be printed in connection with the reprint of the information we already have on that subject, as I think the document in which that information is contained is pretty much exhausted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I read as follows from the New York Evening Post of April 14:

It would be a great public service, as well as a first-rate stroke of good politics, if all Democratic bodies and organizations in the land were to imitate the example set by the Minnesota Democratic committee, and send a public appeal to the Democratic majority in the Senate to either carry out the party pledges and pass the tariff bill or get out of the party. Everybody knows that when the Minnesota Democrats put the responsibility for delay upon the following Senators they put it where it belonged:

Then follows a list of those who are said to be responsible for the delay, among whom I am included. I do not read the list:

These men are doing their utmost to ruin their party by holding it in the way of the progress of the country and demonstrating its incompetency for public affairs.

I am not in the habit of spending much time in noticing (from my place in the Senate) newspaper attacks upon me, coming from whatever source they may. But this article deserves a passing notice, for it seems to point to the source of the false reports that have traveled to Minnesota and elsewhere in respect to my attitude upon the pending bill.

I had supposed that every Senator upon this floor, every citizen of my State, and the representative of every newspaper in the Senate gallery knew full well since the hour this bill was reported to the Senate, that as long as the bill remained an improvement upon the McKinley law in the direction of lower customs duties, it would receive my vote.

The correspondent of the Post in the Senate gallery early understood my position and purpose in this respect, and, as he informed me, he had so advised the publication office of the Post.

Therefore, while I do not complain of this wanton, deliberate, misrepresentation from such a source, I take this occasion to remind that journal that it is far more honorable to tell the truth than to circulate falsehoods.

SUPPRESSION OF LOTTERY TRAFFIC.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the lottery bill may now be taken up and put upon its passage. It has been already read, and I understand there is no further objection to it from any quarter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1620) for the suppression of lottery traffic through national and interstate commerce and the postal service subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to be considered. It will only take a minute. It has been read at length, and will not require to be read again.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand there is objection to the bill, and there are some amendments to it which are considered necessary.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator who proposes the amendment only desires to have the word "exclusive" inserted where the bill says "subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the United States," which, I suppose, means exclusive jurisdiction. I do not hear of any other amendment that any Senator desires to offer. I will say to the Senator I do not want any matter of substance affected by an amendment; but I am going away this afternoon, to be gone a week, and if the Senator desires any serious amendment I will not press the bill at this time.

Mr. GORMAN. My attention was called this morning for the first time to the provisions of the bill, and I should like to have a day or two longer to consider it.

Mr. HOAR. Then I withdraw the request, of course.

HEARINGS ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to take up and consider for a short time the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], which was under discussion yesterday, and went to the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate, and will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER on the 14th instant, as follows:

Whereas there exists in many places and on the part of large numbers of citizens, individually and in organized bodies, a disposition to visit the city of Washington for the purpose of personally presenting to Congress their views with respect to pending and prospective measures of legislation: and

Whereas many of such persons and bodies are reported to be now on their way hither, with others likely to follow, for the purposes aforesaid:

Therefore, to the end that these our petitioners shall have full and respectful hearing and that proceedings attending their communication with the Senate shall be orderly and not subjected to interruption by the transaction of other public business,

Be it resolved, That a select committee of nine members of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President, to be known as the Committee on Communication, whose duty it shall be to receive all written or printed communications from citizens or bodies of citizens visiting the Capitol or intending to make such visit, for the purposes mentioned in the preamble hereto, and to receive all petitions, memorials, and remonstrances of such persons and bodies and hear them orally in relation to the matters and things about which they desire to communicate with the Senate. The committee shall report fully to the Senate from time to time as other committees report.

The Sergeant-at-Arms will set aside a convenient room in the Capitol or other building belonging to the Government for the use of said committee, and furnish the same with the necessary articles for the convenient dispatch of business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield the floor to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I prefer that a representative of the dominant party should make some observations upon this matter, but the Senator from Missouri yields to me.

I am sure that the remarkable speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] ought not to go forth to the country as in any degree representative of the views of the Senate, and it ought not to pass without some conservative comment and dissent. I confess it pained and surprised me very much. I think that there is not a Senator, that there is not a sensible citizen in the United States who does not profoundly sympathize with the tens and hundreds of thousands and I may say millions of people suffering in the present extraordinary financial and business crisis. With expressions of impatience or resentment, every kind and thoughtful man will be very patient indeed, nor does any man in the world think of restraining or overruling the right of the people, in the language of the Constitution, to "peaceably assemble and petition for a redress of grievances."

But there have been circumstances arising in the last month or two that do not come precisely within that category. All the world is informed from day to day that bodies of men are assembling, as if by concert, in widely separated sections of the country and marching toward the capital of the United States with the purpose of assembling here on or about the 1st of May, to make some sort of political demonstration, by gathering, as they threaten, in front of the Capitol building in a multitude, to be addressed by their orators; and demanding also that they shall, by their representatives, march bodily into this Chamber to be heard. I need not say that that is an extraordinary course of proceeding which is without precedent in the United States anywhere, unless it be found in the colonial days in New Hampshire, when a body of men took possession of the Legislature; or, to go farther back, when the Gauls marched into the Roman senate and shook the venerable beards of the senators.

The right of the people to assemble, the right, if you choose, however misjudged the movement may be, to come here and assemble, I am not questioning; but I wish simply to suggest respectfully that the Senate of the United States owes something to its own traditions and dignity—the House of Representatives will take care of itself—and that what we say or do in this matter, in this Chamber, in this first precedent, which may possibly be followed, should be done thoughtfully and carefully. It is quite possible to manage this business gently and firmly and have it pass away, and it is quite possible to so manage it that it may become a habit to make pilgrimages annually to Washington and endeavor to dominate Congress by the physical presence of the people.

The men coming here say they are "the people," and the Senator from Nebraska speaks of them as "the people." He says the people want this; the people want to do that; the people have a right to come here, and have a right to fill the galleries, and all that. They may have, and they may not, sir. We have more authoritative advice and imperative commands from the people of the United States than Mr. Coxey can possibly bring. We have had our advice given us for a hundred years in the Constitution, in the statutes of the States, in the laws of the District of Columbia, and in the traditions and rules of the Senate. The will of the people is here carefully sifted out by a most complex and universal system of selection, by the votes of the people, by the action of their representatives, by the action of men who from personal interests, as well as motives of patriotism, are extremely desirous to do just what the people think ought to be done.

Now, sir, it is a matter of common sense, and not "infamous," as the Senator from Nebraska said, that the behavior of multitudes around this Capitol and these squares here should be carefully regulated by law and rules, and that a sufficient body of policemen, and in the case of riot a body of the military, should be here, to the end that the Constitution and the laws and the rules of the Senate and the general laws of the District shall be obeyed on every inch of ground and in every second of time. And if there be any patriotism in the misguided company of men near here, or the others who are coming, there are men in this Senate who could address them and satisfy them, I am sure, if they are Americans and have any respect for their country.

I was pained to hear the Senator from Nebraska refer to the organized militia in this district in the style and manner he did. It is a credit to the Government, sir. It was thought wise by the best men that, instead of being obliged to call for a regiment of regulars, there should be, after the analogy of our States, a body of the people themselves, practically a posse comitatus, ready here at the command of the civil arm to maintain order. Such a body has been organized.

The Senator speaks of "a man named Ordway." I have the great pleasure of being able to personally testify—for he was under my command for a time and I knew him during the war—to the gallantry, to the courage, to the common sense, and high personal character of Gen. Ordway. He is brigadier general of the militia here. It is quite ridiculous, to use no stronger term in characterizing it as a slander or abuse, to represent him as mobilizing the militia with a view to beating anybody over the head with the butt end of a musket or thrusting a bayonet into him for coming into this District.

I venture to say, judging by the Senator's speech, that Gen. Ordway has more carefully studied than has the Senator the proper function of the armed force of the Government in complete subordination to the civil power. Not one command will be given, not one step will be taken under him—and I might say the same of the tens of thousands of militia officers in the country—except at the command of the civil power.

The Senator proceeded to make other observations, not all of which I care to discuss, even if I had time before 1 o'clock; indeed, I do not know that I care to speak longer now. I have, perhaps, given my sufficient protest.

The men who are coming here do not represent the great voice of the American people. As to their complaining of the present situation so far as it is due to the political action of Congress, or so far as it is due to the generally disturbed financial condition of the world, I have little to say; but they do not represent the American people in the manner or avowed purpose of their coming. They come here to make an impression upon Congress by mere physical presence. We read in old romances of the oppressed subject who struggled to get in the way of his ruler and thrust himself prostrate in the dust under the feet of the horse which bore the emperor, that he might prefer his humble petition. No American citizen prefers a petition in that way.

I am sorry to say it, but I feel bound to say it, that the speech of the Senator from Nebraska was one that would have been received with tumultuous applause in a meeting of anarchists. It had in it, not requiring a microscope, but visible to the naked eye, the bacteria and bacilli of anarchy.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5978) to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6055) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River in the city of Pittsburg; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5276) to authorize Commander F. W. Dickins, of the United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the cross of naval merit of the third class from the King of Spain; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. It was the unanimous sense of the Senate that I should yield the floor to-day to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. At the conclusion of his remarks the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] will address the Senate. Those Senators will probably occupy the afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the anomaly is presented to the Senate of a bill that we are asked to enact into law which nobody thus far has ventured to unqualifiedly indorse or approve, with the exception of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. Even its distinguished author in the other House [Mr. WILSON] felt called upon to enter an apology for the measure in these words:

> The bill on which the committee has expended much patient and anxious labor is not offered as a complete response to the mandate of the American people. It no more professes to be purged of all protection than to be free of all error in its complex and manifold details. However we may deny the existence of any legislative pledge, or of the right of any Congress to make such a pledge, for the continuance of duties that carry with them more or less acknowledged protection, we must recognize that great interests do exist whose existence and prosperity it is no part of our reform either to imperil or curtail.

From the moment that remarkable utterance was made to the present time few genuine or whole-hearted words have been spoken in behalf of this bill. For a time it seemed to be a veritable Pariah, homeless and friendless. First, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], when the bill was reported to the Senate, with a protectionist pathos in his voice, promptly declared his opposition to some of its features. Then the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], chairman of the Committee on Finance, varied his declamatory and denunciatory speech by saying, "Faults and imperfections can, of course, be alleged and pointed out, concessions are apparent which have been unwillingly made, and only when found necessary to secure its passage."

Think, Mr. President, of the chosen leader of the Democratic side of this Chamber openly and unblushingly proclaiming the imperfections of the measure, and shamelessly admitting that it was framed, not on the principles of exact justice and fair play, but rather for the purpose of securing votes enough to pass it through the Senate! What greater condemnation of the bill can any Republican imagine than that, and how inconceivable it is that such a dishonoring bargain should have been made.

Following the Senator from Indiana came the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], himself the author of a famous tariff measure, and he bluntly and frankly declared that "the bill does not suit me. I am between the devil and the deep sea." And then the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] entered the arena, with spear and javelin in hand, and gave the measure what it is hoped may prove to be its coup de grace, by denouncing it vigorously, and serving notice on their party associates that unless it is materially modified they must look elsewhere for votes to pass it. Indeed, Mr. President, if this thing continues the bill will be disowned on all hands, and our Democratic friends will be adopting the language of Betsy Prig to Sary Gamp, and saying, "I don't believe there is no sich a person."

This, then, is the kind of a bill we are now considering, and which the tyranny of the party lash and the power of Executive patronage are expected to force through Congress. Can it be done? Certain it is that to-day the measure is sadly in need of defenders, and is presenting anything but a healthy and vigorous appearance. How aptly it is described in the following verse:

Halting on crutches of unequal size,
One leg by truth supported, one by lies;
Thus sidle to the goal with awkward pace,
Secure of nothing but to lose the race.

As I look on the bruised face and battered form of the Wilson bill I am strongly reminded of the farewell words of the country minister as he pathetically took leave of his congregation:

Brothers and sisters: I come to say good-bye. I don't believe God loves this church, because none of you ever die. I don't think you love each other, because I never marry any of you. I don't think you love me, because you have not paid my salary. Your donations are moldy fruit and wormy apples, and "by their fruits ye shall know them." Brothers, I am going away to a better place. I have been called to be chaplain of a penitentiary. Where I go ye can not now come, but I go to prepare a place for you, and may the Lord have mercy on your souls. Good-bye.

[Laughter.]

And so the Senators from New Jersey, Indiana, Texas, and New York might well turn their backs on this wretched and destructive measure, and changing somewhat the words of the good minister, say:

Wilson bill, we come to say good-bye. We don't think God loves you, for you have already brought untold disaster and wretchedness to the country. We know men do not love you, for, since you have appeared on earth, they have risen in their might in Ohio, Iowa, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Illinois, Rhode Island, and elsewhere, and denounced you as a menace to their interests and an enemy to their prosperity. Your donations are enforced idleness, want, and sorrow—moldy fruit and wormy apples of discord and misery—and "by their fruits ye shall know them." We are going away from you forever, for we would like to save Texas and Mississippi from the political ruin you have brought upon us. We are going to a better place than we find in your companionship. Where we go you can not come, for we go to labor for the industrial interests and welfare of the American people. Good-bye!

Such a declaration as that would be manly and honorable. It would insure the defeat of the measure, and would send a thrill of joy to the hearts and homes of the industrial masses of the country. It would light the fires and start the looms in mill, factory, and workshop. It would solve the problem of the unemployed, and again give work and wages to the multitude of men and women now vainly crying for employment and sustenance. But this is too much to expect of the Democratic party. All through its history, under the guidance of the South, it has degraded and oppressed labor, and the Wilson bill is a natural and inevitable sequence of its teachings and its theories.

On the 16th day of January, while the bill was pending in the House of Representatives, I addressed the Senate on the tariff question, criticising the provisions of the measure, calling attention to the iniquities of the income-tax proposition, and especially dwelling upon the effects of the bill upon the industries and labor interests of the New England States. Since then the measure has passed the House, has gone through the crucible of the Senate Committee on Finance, and is now on the Calendar substantially in the form in which it is proposed by the majority to pass it. In common with this side of the Chamber, and in deference to the wishes of the great industrial North, I had hoped that the Senate committee would eliminate from the bill its most objectionable features, and report it back in a form which, while raising sufficient revenue for the support of the Government would also throw the ægis of adequate protection around the great industries of agriculture and manufacturing, thus securing the workingman a chance for employment at remunerative wages. Instead of that the bill comes to us in worse shape than it went to the committee.

It was then bad, it is now diabolical; it was then framed in the interests of the South, it is now intensified and emphasized in every bad feature it possessed. So far as I can discover it is "evil, and nothing but evil, and that continually." It professes to be "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," but unless the words "other purposes" mean the destruction of the manufacturing interests of the North and the degradation of American workingmen, it better deserves the title of "An act to protect trusts, to recoup the South at the expense of the North, and to build up American importers and foreign manufacturers on the ruins of American industry and American labor."

As I said heretofore I now repeat that the bill is sectional in the extreme, hostile to the best interests of the country, and partial only to the products of the South and the great interests from which the Democratic party never fails to draw inspiration, money, and votes at election time. It might well be denominated a measure designed to halt the prosperity of the the North, and wither and destroy the results of the industry and thrift of the American people. It is a bad bill: bad in construction, bad in purpose, and bad in its assaults upon the onward march of the industrial energy and prosperity of this mighty Republic. It is not a wise economic measure, and I wonder that sane men could have given it their approval. Surely such a bill can not be enacted into law; surely such a scheme of spoliation and wrong must fall before the aroused indignation and protests of the mighty North.

The bill has been truthfully characterized by a Democratic newspaper as being neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring. It preaches, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has truthfully said, the gospel of despair. It is a mongrel and bastard production, which ought to be repudiated and disowned by those who brought it into being. If enacted into law (which God forbid) it will light the fires in Belgian, French, German, and British workshops, and extinguish them in American mills and American factories. It will send joy and gladness to the hearts of the farmers of Canada and Australia, and add to the hardships and struggles of the American agriculturist. It will rejoice the heart of the American importer of foreign products, and crush the hopes and aspirations of the American manufacturer.

It will rob the workingman of his chance in life, reduce his wage, and take from his home the comforts he has enjoyed. It will destroy utterly the prosperity of our manufacturing communities, and cast a pall upon the homes and the hearts of millions of workingmen and workingwomen. What true American can contemplate with satisfaction such legislation as that? The echoes of popular discontent and popular disapproval of the bill have come from almost every precinct where the people's voice has found expression through the ballot box, and what has already happened is but a zephyr to the storm that will inevitably overtake the Democratic party next November.

A WARNING TO THE SOUTH.

As I pointed out in my former remarks, and as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] so ably elaborated in his speech of the 10th instant, almost every product and industry of New England is singled out for destruction in this bill. What excuse can be urged for this wretched assault upon a people who have done so much to build up the industrial interests of this country? New England has invested millions of capital in the South upon the assurance that the old order of things had passed away, and that a new South had risen on the ruins of the old. Most of the New England money that has been thus invested is lost forever, and now those who profited by it propose to strike down our manufacturing establishments by hostile legislation. This is the answer the South sends to us: this the gratitude and the return. In all Republican tariffs the products of the South have been protected—sugar, rice, fruits, coal, iron, and every other industry that tended to the welfare and progress of her people.

But we are to be destroyed, not protected. Our woolen manufactures, cotton manufactures, paper manufactures, cutlery, granite, agricultural products—all are to be sacrificed on the altar of Southern prejudice and free-trade theories. Let me warn the South against this policy. The people are awake to this contest. They are watching with breathless interest every move on the political chessboard. They propose in due time to take a hand in its settlement. What answer will the South expect from us when we return to power in 1896? She should not forget, in this her moment of triumph, that there may be reprisals when our day of victory comes. If our agricultural products are to be destroyed in the interest of Canada, why not her sugar and rice in the interest of Cuba and other tropical countries? If our granite is to be sacrificed in the interest of New Brunswick and Scotland, why not her marble in the interest of Italy? The lesson is worth pondering, and I commend it to the careful consideration of Southern Senators.

Indeed, Mr. President, the South may sooner than she is calculating be a suppliant for the protection of her great staple, the crop that above all others is of value to her people. Not only are foreign countries competing with ours in the matter of finished products, but they are also flooding our markets with the so-called raw materials. With our present duties wool comes to us from Australia and the Argentine Republic, coal from Nova Scotia, and lumber from Canada. What assurance has the South that her markets for cotton in this country will not be invaded in due time by the products of the cotton fields of Egypt? Indeed already large sales of long-staple Egyptian cotton have been made to American manufacturers, one sale being of 400 bales, of an average weight of 700 pounds per bale. On this purchase the American manufacturer is said to have saved 2½ cents per pound, or $6,300.50 on the entire lot. In this bill the South is amply protected on everything that she produces which needs protection. To day she does not need protection on her cotton, but the indications are that the time is not far distant when such protection will be needed. Let her take pause in her senseless raid on the manufactures and the products of the North, lest when that time comes she will cry in vain for Northern sympathy and Northern help.

THE INDUSTRIES OF NEW ENGLAND.

And just here let me briefly state the effects of this legislation upon the industries of New England. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], in his most admirable speech, went fully over this ground; but it will bear repetition, especially in its relation to my own State. Not only does the bill violently assail the woolen and cotton manufacturing schedules of the McKinley law, upon which our prosperity largely depends, but it attacks almost every interest and industry, however small, of our people.

WOOD AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOD.

The wood schedule, in which the people of New Hampshire are greatly interested, has been radically changed. Lumber, hewn and sawed, which now pays a duty of 10 per cent; squared lumber, which pays a duty of one-half cent per cubic foot; boards, planks, and deals, which pay from $1 to $1.50 per thousand feet; hubs and blocks, which pay 20 per cent; laths, which pay 15 per cent; shingles, which pay 10 per cent; and sawed timber, which pays 10 per cent, are all transferred to the free list, and a heavy cut is made on many other items.

This means the practical transfer of the lumber business from New Hampshire and Maine to Canada. There will be no escape from it if this schedule of the bill is enacted into law. And what is the excuse for it? Thus far no one has ventured to say. Every dollar's worth of Canadian lumber coming into the United States is a blow to the interests of American laboring-men. Every dollar's worth of labor which comes into our markets in the way of manufactured lumber displaces a dollar's worth of labor which otherwise would have been employed and paid for in this country.

The importations of Canadian lumber into the United States for the fiscal year 1893 have been stated in round numbers as 520,000,000 feet, board measure. Now to manufacture 1,000,000 feet of lumber requires an equivalent of the labor of 1,500 operatives for one day, or the labor of one operative for 1,500 days. It will thus be seen that during the past fiscal year we imported into the United States in the shape of Canadian lumber 780,000 days' work, and thus prevented the employment in our own country of just that much labor.

It is an incorrect notion that the importation of lumber in the shape of a manufactured article simply results in lowering the wages now paid for similar labor in this country. The effect is not merely to reduce the wages now paid, but to displace as many days' labor as has been expended upon the imported article.

It must be clear to any person who stops to reason it out, that if the 520,000,000 feet of Canadian lumber imported in 1893 had been manufactured in the United States, there would have been an increased employment of labor here. In other words, if the 520,000,000 feet of lumber had not been imported, American manufacturers would have been compelled to supply the deficiency by lumber made by American labor.

Under the present bill there will inevitably be a greatly increased importation, which will deprive thousands of American workingmen of the chance to labor, and will necessarily lower the wages of those who find employment. What wretched business this is, legislating for a foreign country and against the interests of our own people. It seems utterly idiotic.

AGRICULTURAL AND FOOD PRODUCTS.

The bill under consideration plays havoc with the interests of New England farmers, and promises to wipe out forever the men who are struggling to sustain themselves on the rocky farms of New Hampshire. Under the present law our farmers are reasonably prosperous, finding a market for their surplus products in the manufacturing cities and villages of the State. They are brought necessarily into competition with the farmers of Canada, where labor is cheaper and the soil more easily tilled. Notwithstanding the high duties on hay, apples, potatoes, eggs, etc., considerable importations were made from Canada during the past year, and now it is proposed to put many of our leading farm products on the free list, and to reduce materially the duties on others.

Look at the record. Under existing law the duty on bacon and hams is 5 cents per pound; broom corn, $8 per ton; cabbages, 3 cents each; cider, 5 cents per gallon; eggs, 5 cents per dozen; lard, 2 cents per pound; milk, 5 cents per gallon; green peas, 40 cents per bushel; straw, 30 per cent ad valorem; tallow, 1 cent per pound, and wool grease, ¼ cent per pound. All these are to go on the free list. Reducing specific to ad valorem duties, the reductions made on live stock and products of the farm not put on the free list are as follows: Horses, from 30 to 20 per cent; cattle, from 50 to 20; oats, from 40 to 20; barley, from 65 to 30; butter, from 33 to 20; cheese, from 42 to 25; beans, from 40 to 20; hay, from 43 to 20; onions, from 50 to 20; potatoes, from 52 to 30; other vegetables, from 25 to 10; apples, from 34 to 20; live poultry, from 32 to 20; dressed poultry, from 54 to 20, and starch, from 84 to 30.

This means disaster to the agricultural interests of Northern New Hampshire. Coos County, which borders on Canada, depends upon agriculture and lumber for its prosperity, and of late years has been making rapid progress. What will happen to it if the Wilson bill becomes a law is so well told by Hon. Chester B. Jordan, one of its most prominent citizens, that I will quote his words:

> There is no question as to the effect of the Wilson bill in Coos. It gets in its deadly work all over the county. There is not another county in the land where the changes in the tariff schedules affect so great a proportion of the people.
> Here is our situation: We have two great interests, lumber and agriculture. Lumber, of course, is the great interest, and has been for thirty years. In respect to agriculture we have somewhat peculiar conditions. Our soil is of especial richness for raising potatoes, oats, and a grass crop. Horace Greeley wrote up Coos a great many years ago, and told what it was good for. According to him it was good for raising potatoes and oats.
> Now, this condition of soil is peculiar, almost unique. It is found in only two other localities in the United States—Northern New York and Northern Maine. The same soil conditions prevail in Canada, just across the line from us, where they can raise just as good potatoes, just as good hay, and just as good oats as we can—and just as many of them, too, for they are just as bright as we are, and their labor costs them only about half what our labor costs us.
> Therefore, we have not only to compete against the Canadian natural advantages, which are the same as ours, but have also to meet an economic condition of low wages which we have not. The protective tariff duties have thus far stood between the Coos farmer and the Canadian farmer's unequal advantages. The Wilson bill will, in a large measure, remove that defense

That is the situation which confronts the men who are tilling the soil in New Hampshire to day, and it is scarcely to be wondered at that most of them are voting the Republican ticket this year.

WOOLEN GOODS.

Under the existing law the manufacturers of woolen goods have an average protection of 98.53 per cent, and it is proposed to reduce it to 35.09 per cent. With the high rate of duty now existing woolen goods were imported into the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, to the value of $36,993,409.16, on which duties were collected amounting to $36,448,667.46. The lowering of the duties almost two-thirds means a deluge of foreign goods into our markets, which will result inevitably in crippling American industries and greatly reducing American labor. Our people find it difficult to compete with the almost pauper labor of Saxony under existing conditions, and when the duty is reduced from 98 to 35 per cent the men and women working in hosiery mills in this country will be brought to a practical realization of what foreign competition means in the matter of wages. The prospect is an appalling one from whatever point of view it is regarded.

Mr. President, the most casual examination of the estimates of the reductions in the revenue which the Wilson bill makes shows where the heaviest blow to manufacturing will fall.

In his speech opening the tariff debate the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] submitted a table of estimates, in accordance with which it appears that the Wilson bill is expected to reduce revenues to the extent of a total of $76,670,000 annually. Of this sum the rather astonishing amount of $26,500,000 is set off against the duties on woolen manufactures alone, more than one-third of the entire reduction.

According to the plan of the Wilson bill, the manufacturers of wool are to be put under a contribution equal to that which is required from all articles transferred to the free list, together with all metals and manufactures of metals.

So the woolen manufacturers may as well prepare to either shut down entirely or continue business by paying their operatives wages at starvation rates. How this thing will inevitably work is strikingly illustrated by a page of recent American history, to which Congressman RUSSELL of Connecticut called attention in a speech in the other branch of Congress. In brief it is this:

Nottingham, in England, was long famed for its manufacture of hosiery. Its products of hosiery thirty years ago were sold the world over. For some years the industry was intrenched in that city, and there were no similar manufactures of fine wool hosiery in other countries.

Nottingham had a peculiar advantage in the holding of patents on knitting machinery. In course of time, however, the patents expired, and the German manufacturers acquired the machinery, educated labor to run it, and secured work at about one-third of the wages paid in Nottingham. The Nottingham workers refused to accept the lower wages of the Germans, and the decline of Nottingham hosiery manufacture was rapid, so rapid indeed that a dozen years ago in free-trade England, in the home of its former citadel, German hosiery took the market and Nottingham knitters took to coal-mining.

German hosiery likewise took possession of the American market, taking it from the English manufacturer through the cheaper wages of the German workman. The English manufacturer saw his business destroyed, and in his despair turned to the protective policy of the United States for relief, and he got it.

Nine years ago one English concern which, prior to German intervention, from its factory in Nottingham had annually sold in the United States 200,000 dozen of fine wool hosiery, and received for the employment of English capital and labor about $1,200,000 of United States money, moved its business to this country and established itself in Rhode Island.

This was an actual importation of a new industry into this country under the stimulus of a protective tariff—an industry driven out of free-trade England by the competition of foreign cheap labor. The British manufacturers who migrated from Nottingham spent $50,000 in simply acquiring the necessary skilled workmen to handle the delicately adjusted machinery which produces the finest grade of hosiery.

In this hosiery factory, started in Rhode Island nine years ago, the first of its character in this country, there have been employed 500 people, and around the factory has sprung up a thriving village of 1,500 inhabitants.

This concern when in Nottingham sold, as above stated, some 200,000 dozen of hosiery in this country. Since its removal to Rhode Island it increased its sales in the American market to more than 500,000 dozen. When in Nottingham it sold its hosiery in this market to the wholesale trade for $6 a dozen. It sold in 1893 the same hosiery for $3.75 a dozen.

That establishment is not selling woolen hosiery to day because it is shadowed by the blight of the Wilson bill. It has paid its workmen $2 a day, and though German knitters get less than half that wage, the Rhode Island hosiery factory, under Republican protection, has held the home market, has reduced the price to consumers more than one-third, and has maintained the American rate of wages.

This is a chapter from real industrial history; it is worth tons of theory.

Now, what does the Wilson bill do for this hosiery industry? It reduces its protection by about two-thirds, makes what is left an uncertain quantity, because it is to be levied on an ad valorem basis, and, in exchange, gives it just what it had in free-trade England, and with which it was driven by Germany to shut up shop, namely—free wool.

Under this bill the hosiery industry is doomed in this country unless hundreds of thousands of intelligent American workingmen will accept the pauper and pauperizing wages now paid in the hosiery mills of Saxony. What utter, unnecessary, cruel folly this is, and what say the workingmen to the proposition?

The Boston Commercial Bulletin is as reliable a trade paper as is printed in the United States and is everywhere accepted as authority upon woods and woolens, for it is free from partisanship and its facts are collected with great care and stated with perfect fairness. With this in mind close attention is invited to its comment upon the wool schedule of the Wilson bill, which is none the less eloquent because it is composed mainly of facts which nobody can successfully question. The Bulletin says:

It is seldom that in the brief space of a twelvemonth an industry plunges from the highest condition of prosperity to the deepest adversity known in a generation. That, in a sentence, is the history of wool manufacturing in 1893.

The year preceding (1892) was the most prosperous that this country has ever seen. Every loom and spindle was employed, and there was a veritable labor famine. The wool clip of the United States had increased 26,000,000 pounds, our imports of wool increased 28,000,000 pounds, but in spite of this fact there were 13,000,000 pounds of wool less on hand at the end of 1892 than at the beginning. The consumption of wool by American mills increased nearly 70,000,000 pounds in a single year.

As in 1890 we were but 36,000,000 pounds behind Great Britain, and as that country has certainly not increased since that year, when her mills were pouring goods into the United States to anticipate the McKinley tariff, we may say with confidence that in 1892 the United States led the world in the consumption of wool.

Though the price of wool fell somewhat in that year, the prospect of the continuance of the tariff induced growers to increase their flocks. The clip of 1893 was shorn and pulled from the flock of 1892, and the figures of the clip that we have just had the honor to complete show that the clip from that flock was 334,000,000 pounds, the largest clip of wool ever raised in the United States.

In spite of the high prosperity of the first two months of 1893 the industry has gone steadily backward. Our imports of wool have declined nearly forty millions. Our mills have reexported their imported materials, our wool pullers have exported their wool pelts. Yet the stock of wool on hand on January 1 shows an increase of over 40,000,000 pounds. It is within the truth to say two-thirds of all the machinery is silent or running on reduced time. The very mills in Massachusetts that were last year advertising extra pay for operatives willing to work all night are now either shut down or running on short time with a reduced scale of wages.

It is idle to ascribe a change like this to any silver legislation. The change is due to the fear of the breaking down of the industry by an unprotective tariff, a fear that has been justified by the Wilson bill.

The hollow promise of the "markets of the world" has been exploded by experience. The only promise of hope presented to the industry by the framers of the Wilson tariff was that by cheaper raw material American manufacturers would be able to compete in foreign markets.

Now, the fact is that wool is very nearly on a free trade basis to-day, and has been for months. Some grades are quite on that basis. Wages have been cut down in almost every woolen mill in the country, yet in eleven months the increase brought about in exports of woolens by the cheap raw material that was to accomplish everything is but a trifle over $200,000.

The threat of the Wilson tariff has cost the industry millions. It has already discounted most of the effect on prices. The "markets of the world" have increased our exports $200,000 by the shipment of a job lot of carpets to England and a few bankrupt stocks of clothing to Canada.

Was ever glittering delusion more pitiably rent asunder by historical facts?

When the people of the United States agree with Mr. WILSON to adopt the scale of living that permits the sweat shops of London and Berlin we shall be able to compete with the products of the labor of those establishments—not before.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.

I might speak at length of the hostile nature of this bill to the great cotton manufacturing industry of New England, but what I have said as to woolen manufactures applies in a modified form to this industry. Under existing laws the average rate of duties on the manufactures of cotton is figured to be 35.25 per cent, and it is proposed to reduce it to an average of 38.45 per cent. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the importations of cotton manufactures aggregated $20,510,438.98, on which duties were paid amounting to $11,333,605.23. The proposition is to reduce the duties about one-third. That done and there will scarcely be ships enough in England to bring the goods to this country, and then will come the terrible struggle on the part of American manufacturers to compete with their foreign rivals. Many New England mills will of necessity be idle, for importations will surely be greatly increased, and the wages of the operatives will in all cases be largely reduced. I will further discuss this matter when the bill is considered by paragraphs.

CUTLERY.

Under the existing tariff cutlery establishments have sprung up in different parts of New England, and have been able to just about compete on equal terms with the cutlery made by cheap labor in Sheffield, England. One establishment of this kind is in New Hampshire, where liberal wages are paid, and a beautiful and thriving village has sprung up as a result. The present tariff on cutlery, such as is manufactured in New Hampshire, ranges from 50 to 95 per cent, and it is proposed to reduce the duty to about an average of 35 per cent on the different articles manufactured. The importations of table cutlery are now very large, and under the reduced tariff the American market will be deluged with foreign goods, to the utter detriment of both the American manufacturers and workingmen in this line of industry. Some months ago when I asked the Senate to pass a resolution declaring it inexpedient to make changes in the existing tariff laws, I received an interesting letter from ex-Governor Goodell of Antrim, N. H., a cutlery manufacturer, which reads as follows:

ANTRIM, N. H., August 19, 1893.

DEAR SENATOR: I am glad to see that you have introduced an amendment to the Lodge resolution, which, if passed, I believe will do a great deal towards setting the wheels of business in motion. As you know I am a manufacturer of table cutlery, butcher knives, carving knives, and the like. I have been in the business twenty-one years. It has been gradually increasing in volume during most of this time, especially so since the McKinley tariff law went into effect. While the price of these goods is fully 10 per cent lower than it was in 1889, the year before the McKinley law went into effect, the quantity of goods made in this country in 1892 must have been very much larger than ever before; certainly it was in my own factory. If we had absolute free trade we could not get our stock for much less than now. Our handle woods, which come from South Africa and Central America largely, are on the free list. Our steel is made in this country, but the prices are so low that we could not expect any material reduction if we had the open competition of foreign manufacturers of steel. If there should be any material reduction in the tariff duties upon table cutlery I see no possible chance for us to compete with manufacturers in Sheffield and other foreign points except by a reduction in price of labor.

The speech made by Mr. Folsom, cousin of the President, as consul to Sheffield, in Cutler's Hall in Sheffield recently, expressing his congratulations to the cutlery manufacturers there upon the fact that within twelve months they would have a better opportunity to sell their goods in America, alarms me. How it is possible that it can be for the interests of the laboring classes of America to be thrown out of business and have their wages reduced while English and German manufacturers at their own home are furnishing the goods for this country is beyond my comprehension. I hope, therefore, that wise counsels will prevail, and that the Senate will pass this resolution as amended by you, and thus assure the manufacturers and workmen that their interests are not to be injured by any legislation in the interest of foreign countries.

Truly, yours,

D. H. GOODELL.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER.

That letter tells the whole story. Reduced duties on cutlery will either drive out of business the American manufacturer, or else result in a material reduction of wages to the laboring classes.

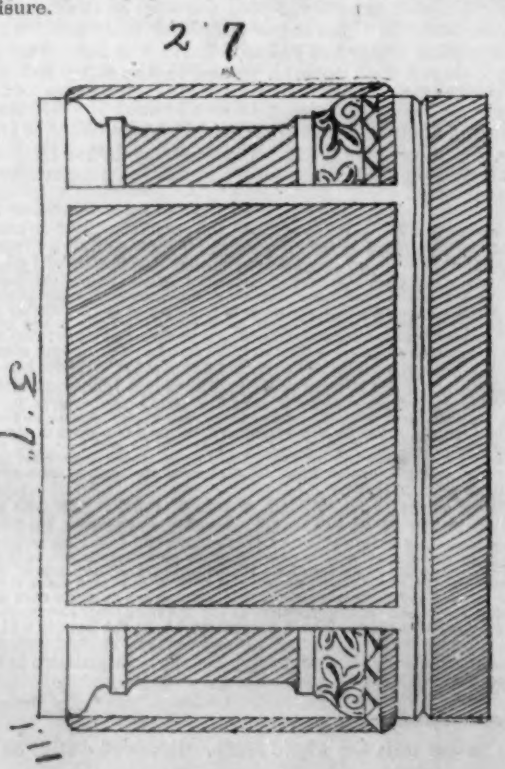
GRANITE.

New Hampshire is denominated the "Old Granite State," and we are proud of the appellation. We have an abundance of granite in our hills and mountains, but the distance to tide water and the heavy cost of railroad transportation has made it difficult for us to compete with the maritime provinces and Scotland, from whence granite can be conveyed by water.

But under the policy of the Republican party we have built up a thriving industry, and a sample of our work, which comes from my own town, can be seen in the granite of which the magnificent new Congressional Library building in Washington is being constructed. Heretofore we have been protected by a duty of 50 per cent on unmanufactured granite and 40 per cent on manufactured, but this bill proposes to put the unmanufactured on the free list and to reduce the duty on the manufactured one-half. This means the closing of our quarries, or else a large reduction in the wages of those engaged in this industry. There will be low wages and idle men in New England and plenty of business in the granite quarries of Nova Scotia and Scotland.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——



The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROCTOR in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. I infer from the Senator's remarks upon the granite industry that he is not satisfied with the proposed reduction of duties. I should like to inquire of him what will be the effect of the proposed change upon the American interest, so far as it relates to monuments and work of that kind?

Mr. GALLINGER. In just one moment I shall come to the matter of monuments, at which time I shall be glad to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas.

It should be borne in mind that Scotland can send her granite to our large cities at a very low rate of freight—indeed, some of it will come free in the shape of ballast for our ocean steamships. A Massachusetts friend of mine has kindly furnished me with a cut of a granite column die like sketch, with the relative cost of producing it in Scotland and at Quincy, from which it appears that it can be made in Scotland, freighted to Boston, and the duty of 40 per cent paid on it, and then sold for $181.93, while the same column will cost in Quincy, freighted to Boston, $238.55, a difference of $56.62 in favor of Scotland. If made in Concord, N. H., the difference will be a little greater in favor of the foreign product, the freight probably costing more from Concord to Boston than from Quincy. I will insert this cut, with explanatory text, in my speech, so that Senators can examine it at their leisure.

A column die-like sketch, 3'7" by 1'11" by 2'7".

QUINCY.		SCOTCH.
Cutting, 42 days, at $3	$126.00	Cutting, 42 days, at $1.50	$63.00
Polishing	78.75	Polishing	35.00
Blacksmith, at 25 cents	10.50	Blacksmith	5.04
Stock, 17'8", at $1.20	21.20	Stock	21.20
	236.45		124.24
Freight to Boston	2.10	40 per cent duty	49.69
		Freight to Boston	8.00

Difference, $56.62 in favor of Scotch.

Now I shall be glad to answer the inquiry made by the Senator from Kansas. I will say to the Senator that in my judgment if the tariff upon manufactured granite is reduced as is proposed in the bill, there will be a temporary reduction in the price of monuments to those who are unfortunate enough to have to buy that article. I believe there will be a temporary reduction, but the Senator from Kansas must remember that if the reduced duties wipe out the American industry and give to Nova Scotia and Scotland a monopoly of the granite business it will not be very long before they will compel us to pay a larger price for our monuments than we are paying at the present time. Again, it must be remembered that this is only one of a great variety of American industries that are threatened by the bill. If the bill becomes a law our people will have very little money with which to buy monuments or anything else.

The Senator from Kansas is a man of wide observation and learning. He studies into all of these questions and tries to understand them, and I am very glad to have an interruption from him on this point. But I will venture to state that with all the Senator's investigation he may not have discovered the fact that the United States is to-day consuming more than 50 per cent of the entire marble of the civilized world. This one country of 70,000,000 people is consuming more than one-half of all the marble that is produced on the face of the earth; and I venture the observation, without having the statistics at hand, that if we could ascertain the fact it would be found that our people are consuming at least 75 per cent of the granite product of the world. What does that mean? It means that our mechanics and our workingmen have been getting money enough in wages to enable them to buy gravestones to put at the final resting place of their loved ones, and that the other nations of the earth, with their low wages and the condition of destitution that prevails, are unable to do so.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire one more question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has had occasion to observe what is the relative merit of granite as compared with marble in the matter of durability?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not any expert knowledge on that point, but I think our Concord granite will endure much longer than will the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and probably quite as long as our children and our children's children will live. I think it is entirely durable.

I have here also a sketch of a granite monument, which was priced by reliable parties in Aberdeen, Scotland, and it was found to be, after adding consul fees, duties, and freight to Boston, $275. At the rate of wages paid in Quincy, the same monument, landed in Boston, will cost $435, without a dollar's profit to the manufacturer. Now, beyond a doubt, when the duty is removed the price of the American article will be temporarily reduced through a reduction of wages, but it requires no spirit of prophecy to discern the time when American granite-workers will refuse to take the wages that are paid in Scotland, our granite sheds will be closed, foreigners will supply our wants, and the price will be increased at their own sweet will. That will be the inevitable result of this senseless raid on the granite industry of New England.

RELATIVE WEALTH OF EAST AND WEST.

Mr. President, I have hurriedly touched upon the chief industries in which the people whom I represent are interested, and have pointed out the injury that will come to them if this bill becomes law. New England has done nothing to deserve the chastisement that is threatened her in this legislation. And just here I want to correct an impression which is abroad in the land as to the matter of increasing wealth in New England. A studious effort is being made to prejudice the great agricultural States of the West against New England on the ground that the wealth of the country is centering in the East. It is generally believed that protection works almost wholly to the advantage of manufacturing States and communities, but that is not so.

If one section of the country is prosperous, all sections share that prosperity: if one section is making money, that section buys and consumes more of the products of the other sections. If manufacturing States can afford to pay high wages to their operatives, they in turn buy and consume more than they otherwise would of the products of the rest of the country. The startling fact confronts me that New Hampshire, a State largely engaged in manufacturing, has fallen rapidly behind in wealth since 1880, as is shown by the census reports of 1890. The entire wealth of the country reaches the almost fabulous amount of $65,035,091,197, about $1,000 per capita, the largest item being in real estate, which reaches $39,544,544,333, or considerably more than one-half of the whole.

Of this wealth New Hampshire's part is $325,128,740, which makes her the poorest of the New England States except Vermont. New Hampshire shows a falling off of $38,000,000 in wealth since 1880, but a gain of $73,000,000 since 1870. Vermont and Maine also show a loss for the decade, the former of $37,000,000 and the latter of $22,000,000. New Hampshire's per capita wealth, which is $863, is $137 less than the average per capita for the entire country. It is greater than that of either Vermont or Maine, but is a falling off of $183 since 1880, in which year she was one of the richest States in the Union, according to census returns.

New Hampshire's aggregate wealth in 1890 was less than that of each of the other States and Territories except Vermont, Delaware, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Wyoming, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and Idaho.

In manufacturing she stood seventeenth, being exceeded by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Kentucky, and California.

New Hampshire's wealth in real estate with improvements thereon amounts to $176,131,000, which places her ahead of Vermont alone. In live stock on farms and ranges, farm improvements and machinery she has $14,044,975 invested, which places her ahead of Connecticut and Rhode Island, but behind the rest of New England. In mines and quarries, including product on hand, she has $1,188,049, which is a better showing than Rhode Island makes, but is less than that of the other New England States. In machinery she comes out with $30,964,366, which only lacks $5,000,000 of being as much as shown by Maine and Vermont combined. Singularly enough the best showing made by the Granite State is in her railroads. In them she has no less than $58,782,551 at stake, a larger sum than either Vermont, Rhode Island, or Connecticut, and almost as much as Vermont and Rhode Island together. She has $2,143,867 tied up in telegraphs, telephones, shipping, and canals, and $35,814,204 in miscellaneous business, in both of which directions she exceeds Vermont alone.

I give these figures to show that the frequent attacks upon the New England States, on the ground that they are, because of tariff laws, concentrating an undue proportion of the wealth of the country in their borders, is not justified by the facts. If New Hampshire has declined in wealth $38,000,000 in ten years of high protection, I beg to ask my tariff-reform friends what will become of her under the low-tariff law we are now considering?

Now, let us cast a glance at the agricultural sections of the country and see what they have been doing. It seems to me that the farmers have had their share with the manufacturers in the benefits of the thirty-three years of protective tariffs, under which they have thrived and prospered together. During that period our farm acreage has increased from 407,212,538 acres in 1860 to 623,218,619 acres in 1890; the value of our farms was $6,645,045,007 in 1860, but in 1890 it was $13,275,959,068. The estimated value of all farm products was $1,115,110,000 in 1860, as compared with $2,460,107,454 in 1890.

We exported $256,560,972 of farm products in 1860, while in 1890 we exported $629,785,917, an increase during these three decades of high protection of 145 per cent. The average value of a farm acre was $16.32 in 1860, and in 1890 it had increased to $21.30.

These figures are conclusive. They knock the bottom out of the Democratic assertion that protection has made the manufacturers rich by making the farmers poor. I commend these figures to the careful and thoughtful attention of Democratic Senators, as well as to the notice of the Populist Senators from Kansas and Nebraska. It begins to look as though the "effete" East, as we are sometimes called, will soon be compelled to surrender the scepter of wealth, as well as the scepter of political power, to the great "omnivorous" West.

MR. VOORHEES'S SPEECH.

Mr. President, I feel constrained to recur to the somewhat remarkable speech of the Senator from Indiana. It is a well-known trick of the legal profession, when the facts and the law are against them, to attempt to befog the minds of the jury with rhetorical sentences and declamatory assertions, but after the echoes of the eloquence have died away the judge and the jury usually find the law and render a verdict in accordance therewith. And so in opening this debate, the Senator from Indiana, finding that he had a bad case, adopted the methods of his profession, and instead of making an argument he filled the air with denunciations of manufacturers and attempted to mislead the popular judgment by eloquent appeals to their passions and their prejudices.

But the game will not work. The people are reading and thinking, and when the verdict is rendered in Indiana next November the Senator will then learn of the popular disapproval of the bill he is championing. Listen to some of the Senator's choice epithets, gathered at random from his speech:

"Privileged classes;" "forcible revolution and bloodshed;" "indescribable injustice and oppression;" "vicious principles and workings;" "iniquitous existing burdens;" "vast individual robberies committed in protected markets;" "the untold and incalculable millions of blackmail levied by American manufacturers for their own pockets;" "this wide and well-known field of extortion and injustice;" "the gates of avarice, oppression, and fraud;" "the appalling legislation of 1890, known as the McKinley law, unlimited in its scope and purposes of spoliation and plunder;" "riotous extravagance;" "arrogant, insolent, dictatorial;" "sinister, perfidious, and dishonest in character;" "a giant robber;" "a predatory monster;" "manufacturing interests which are now the colossal taskmasters of the whole people, commanding tribute from every day's labor beneath the sun, haughtily striding the corridors of this Capitol and issuing their edicts in the tones of dictators for or against the enactment of pending measures in the Halls of Congress;" "unworthy, unmanly, unchristian desires to commit extortion;" "in favor of the right to plunder by the law;" "favorites of fortune, pets of vicious legislation to whom the Government has farmed out the power of oppression over others;" "incarnation of human selfishness;" "sordid, brutal selfishness;" "the lust for riches;" "obstructive avarice;" "to commit crime with impunity;" "monopoly and extortion;" "a gigantic crime;" "a policy so flagitious in principle, so rotten in morality, so ravenous in its exactions on the absolute wants of life;" "unjust, relentless, unsparing, insolent, and brutal;" "delusive bribes;" "a reckless, foolhardy experiment on the forbearance of the American people;" "rash and insolent assault on the toiling masses;" "the lowest depths of human depravity may be raked in vain for a baser or more infamous scheme by which to obtain money dishonestly;" "falsehood and perfidy;" "ghastly results;" "hideous fruits;" "uproar and strife;" "distress, want, and sometimes murder;" "unconscious and contented victim of robbery;" "dangerous policy;" "unbridled extortion;" "oppressed labor;" "monopoly and brutal avarice;" "narrow and corroding selfishness of riches;" "the oppression of the toiling masses;" "dangerous pretensions and intolerant arrogance of accumulated wealth;" "continued and brutal dictation of the plutocracy;" "this fortress of greed and gain, dedicated to the plunder and spoliation of the people;" and so on ad nauseum. What a choice vocabulary for the chosen leader of the Democratic party in this Chamber!

But let us turn from the Senator's lurid denunciation of the McKinley law and the robber manufacturers to such portions of his speech as may be properly considered in the line of argument. The Senator defends the Walker tariff law of 1846, approves of a duty on sugar, supports the committee's recommendations as to taxing distilled spirits, upholds an income tax, advocates free wool, and claims that Thomas Jefferson was a Democrat after the modern type. Let me, as briefly as may be, reply to those several points.

THE WALKER TARIFF OF 1846.

In reference to the Walker tariff of 1846 the Senator says:

> In the history of tariff legislation in this Government, from the first act in 1789 to the present day, there is one enactment which stands out in its wisdom, its success, and its glory over all others. The Democratic tariff of 1846, devised by Robert J. Walker, ad valorem in its rates from beginning to end, with not a specific duty in it, has had no peer, no rival, even, in the prosperity it secured for the American people during its existence as a law.

I know of nothing so absolutely astounding and incomprehensible as the Democratic claim that the Walker tariff brought prosperity to the country. In my former speech I discussed this matter at some length, but something further may properly be said concerning it. It is the one period to which the average Democratic orator always "points with pride;" the "golden era of prosperity." Well did McKinley, the great apostle of protection, once declare, "If that was a golden era of prosperity, may God save the country from any more such golden eras."

It is easy to make a glowing general statement that the Walker tariff brought prosperity to the country. A new generation has come on the stage of action since the free-trade policy of the Southern slaveholding oligarchy was overthrown. But there are some men living who remember those days, and fortunately facts and figures are at hand to utterly disprove the Democratic assertion.

No attention whatever seems to be paid by our Democratic friends to the facts of history. They conveniently forget that in 1850 Mr. Samuel Bowles and other representative citizens of Massachusetts sent a petition to Congress entreating it to revise the tariff of 1846 in the interest of protection, and this is what that well-known editor of the Springfield Republican and his associates said at that time:

Previous to the passage of that law the manufacturing and mechanical interests in this community were in a flourishing condition. Since that time the condition of things has entirely changed, and it is fully believed that much of the stagnation of business may be traced to the operation of that law. Manufacturing languishes, mechanics are thrown out of employment, business of all kinds is dull, and unless protection can be afforded to our laboring classes poverty will overtake them. The subscribers therefore pray that Congress will so alter the tariff of 1846 that it will protect the labor and capital of the country from foreign competition.

And they seem to forget, too, that in 1852 President Fillmore, in his annual message to Congress, made this statement:

The value of our exports of breadstuffs and provisions, which it was supposed the incendive of a low tariff and large importations from abroad would have greatly augmented, has fallen from $68,000,000 in 1847 to $21,000,000 in 1851, with almost a certainty of a still further reduction in 1852. The policy which dictated a low rate of duties of foreign merchandise, it was thought by those who established it, would tend to benefit the farming population of this country by increasing the demand and raising the price of agricultural products in foreign markets. The foregoing facts, however, seem to show incontestably that no such result has followed the adoption of this policy.

President Fillmore also painted in glowing colors the disasters that had come to our manufacturing interests, and the suffering and sorrow that had overtaken our people.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FRYE. The recent elections in the North had, I supposed, utterly destroyed the Democratic party there, but I see they have destroyed it in the United States Senate also. When I commenced to speak there was one Democratic Senator here in the Chamber, now there are two.

Mr. GALLINGER. I welcome to my audience the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who I see is now entering the Chamber. It is to be hoped that after we get along a little further in the discussion of the schedules of the bill that our Democratic friends will be on hand, as they doubtless will be, especially when we take votes on different provisions in the measure. I do not find fault that they do not listen to me to-day. The people are listening, and they will settle with the Democratic party.

Going along a little further, to 1854, and we find Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, a well-known free-trade journal of that period, declaring that:

Confidence is shaken everywhere and all classes are made to realize the insecurity of worldly possessions. The causes which led to this have been a long time at work. Goods which had accumulated abroad when the demand had almost ceased were crowded upon our shores at whatever advance could be obtained, thus aggravating the evil.

A little later, January 6, 1855, the New York Herald said editorially:

Elsewhere will be found some mention of large failures at Boston and New Orleans. The epidemic is traveling over the whole country. No city of any note can hope to escape.

An address of the Unemployed Workingmen's Committee to the mayor of the city of New York was published in the Herald of that same date. These workingmen said:

We do not come as beggars, but we ask what we deem right. We ask not alms, but work. We don't want a little soup now and cast-off clothing to-morrow. But we do want work and the means of making an honest livelihood. The condition of the working classes is most piteous. They want bread. Is there not enough in the city? They want clothes. Is there none made nowadays?

The New York Herald is filled with statements of this kind, showing the terrible condition of the workingmen, and the well-known appeals for help printed in the New York Tribune of the same date and in other papers equal anything that has occurred during the past year in this country. It was Democratic times then: it is Democratic times now.

And although often quoted, the words of President Buchanan in his message to Congress in 1857 will bear repetition:

In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactories suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

Can it be possible that those were prosperous times? If idleness, low wages, hunger, failures, bankruptcy, are evidences of prosperity, then indeed did the Walker tariff bring prosperity to the country, but not otherwise.

The following letter from a resident of my State, a man of wide observation and experience, now well advanced in years, will throw a flood of light on this question:

CHARLESTOWN, N. H., April 11, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: If you propose to say anything more on the tariff question, I wish you would arraign the abettors of the "Wilson bill" for the entire falsehoods they utter in regard to the "Walker tariff" of 1846.

Those of us who were engaged in manufactures at that time well remember the prostration in business and the idleness of the working people in 1848, 1849, and 1850, despite the call for some branches of manufacture caused by the Mexican war. This continued until the gold became to pour in from California in 1851, when a short period of apparent prosperity and inflation followed, until the great crash of 1857.

The gold all went through the country to Europe, and, as you will know, the United States had to pay a premium for it in 1859.

I sketched some reminiscences of those days in the new city of Lawrence (started in 1845), in a paper for the Manufacturers' Gazette, which I sent you last week, and which I hope may be of interest to you. Few of these free-trade orators are old enough to know what they are talking about.

Yours, very truly,

SAMUEL WEBBER.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER.

A letter written by the same gentleman in January of this year, and printed in the Boston Journal, is of interest in this discussion. Mr. Webber says:

While you are perfectly correct in denying the falsely claimed prosperity of the country under the Walker tariff of 1846, you do not make use of some important facts in the history of the city of Lawrence from 1847 to 1853, when the influx of gold from California produced a temporary prosperity which lasted until the great crash of 1857. There must be some of the old stockholders in the mills of that city living, who can give you some mournful facts.

I went down there from Lowell as draftsman and assistant engineer to the Bay State mills in 1847, and well remember how in 1848 it was found impossible to start the mills on the fabrics for which they had been planned, viz, "fancy cassimeres and overcoatings." I remember when Miss Turnbull, sister of Mrs. Samuel Lawrence, brought home a plaid shawl from Scotland, and Mr. Lawrence saw it might pay to try and make some of them.

Milton D. Whipple, a well-known inventor of Lowell, was called in, and invented a machine to twist the fringes, which was done by hand in Scotland, and thus saved about 20 cents on a shawl. The success for a couple of years was phenomenal, until the fashion changed, leaving the mills to struggle along uncompleted, until they went under completely in 1857, and were recapitalized as the Washington mills at 10 cents on the dollar.

I remember how the great Atlantic cotton mills threw up half their plans and the Essex Company took back the land and wheelpits, which had been built and which lay idle for many years, until it was finally purchased by the Pacific mills, and is now utilized for the manufacture of cotton and worsted goods, and known as the "Lower Pacific."

I remember how friends of mine, who were original subscribers to the stock of the Pacific mills, were said to have sold their $1,000 shares for $75, because they could not raise the money to pay assessments called for additional stock because the expenditure had exceeded the estimates.

I well remember, also, how this call for money worried the late Hon. Abbott Lawrence, who was largely interested in those mills. I can speak only as an observer and a working engineer, but you can surely find men who can tell you of their personal losses.

The tariff of '46, planned by a Southerner, did not bear so heavily on coarse cotton goods as it did on woolens, and after the gold came in from California the manufacture of ordinary cottons was profitable, but all the prosperity of that period was due to California and not to the tariff, and that all was not prosperous before the gold came in is shown in an article in the November number of the Engineering Magazine on "The History of Strikes in America," which says: "In 1850 business was dull throughout the country. Out of 2,485,700 cotton spindles in New England over 800,000 are said to have been stopped." Wages were reduced in Fall River and a great strike followed, in which 1,800 people were out of employment for six months.

We are now repeating the disasters which followed the tariff of 1846 for four years, and we have no California to fall back on!

The young men who write the "Free Trade Tariff Reform" articles for the Boston Herald and such papers do not remember as far back as 1850, and you will do good service to the country if you will obtain and publish some facts from men who were crippled or ruined financially by the tariff of 1846.

Yours, very respectfully,

SAMUEL WEBBER.

CHARLESTOWN, N. H., January 6, 1894.

Such testimony is worth more than all the rhetoric of all the Democratic orators in the country, and ought to settle forever the contention as to the practical workings of the tariff of 1846.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to a question? I see he has a prepared speech.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all; I shall be pleased to have an interruption.

Mr. GRAY. The letter from the constituent of the Senator from New Hampshire, to which I have been listening, describes the condition of the country as he believes it to be under the Walker tariff of 1846.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. Has he said anything about the condition of the country under the McKinley tariff in 1892, 1893, and 1894, the tariff under which we are now living, and which is in active operation to-day?

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe he did not allude to that, but the Senator from Delaware knows that he could not have said anything detrimental to the operation of the McKinley tariff in 1892, as it is admitted on all hands that that was the most prosperous year in the history of the country.

Mr. GRAY. We had in 1892 some of the most disastrous strikes we have ever had in the history of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have always had disastrous strikes, and free-trade England has had more than this country has had.

Mr. GRAY. The strikes in this country never were so disastrous as they were in 1892. Never were so many men shot down in their tracks for demanding their share——

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree to that. How many men were shot down in their tracks, and under what circumstances?

Mr. GRAY. Ev r so many; I do not know the number.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. How can the McKinley tariff be said to be in active operation in the United States to-day when, ever since the election of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], which gave the Democrats their majority in this Chamber, every business man has known that if he made a contract the tariff was liable to be repealed before he could execute it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to make that very observation. Mr. Webber, the gentleman from whom I have been reading, and whom I know to be one of the most intelligent men in our section of the country, calls attention to the fact that this condition of things h s existed in this country, just as it existed under the tariff law of 1846, ever since the Democratic party came into power on a platform pledging it to re nact a tariff similar to the tariff law of 1846. It is, Mr. President, I submit, almost a reflection upon the intelligence of the distinguished Senator from Delaware for me to have to remind him of the fact that the business interests of this country perfectly understand that the Democratic majority proposes to strike down the high-tariff law of 1890 and enact a low-tariff law in its stead, and that every contract that is being made is made, and every man who proposes to invest one single dollar in any industry in this country, does it with the understanding that if the Democratic party can rally, by fair means or foul, a sufficient number of votes to pass the Wilson tariff bill, they propose to give this country a low tariff instead of the high tariff wh ich we have had for the last thirty-three years.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire unduly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. GRAY. I should like the Senator from New Hampshire to state what he thinks the people of this country meant by the mandate which they gave to Congress by an overwhelming majority in 1892, to do the very thing of which he complains?

Mr. GALLINGER. While I am not a Yankee by birth, I have lived among the Yankees long enough to answer the question of the Senator from Delaware by asking another. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware what he thinks the people of this country meant by the overwhelming verdict they have given against the Democratic party in every State where elections have been held since the Wilson bill was reported to the Congress of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. I will answer the question not by asking another, but by saying that since the verdict of the people on the McKinley law was given there has been no election in which the tariff was an issue at all. There has not been, since 1892, one single Representative sent to the Congress of the United States who was elected upon the issue, fairly raised, as to the existence of the McKinley tariff.

Mr. GALLINGER. Evidently the Senator from Delaware has been neglecting his opportunities. If he does not know that there was a contest in two Congressional districts in the city of New York, and that the tariff was the only question that was at issue, and that in one district 10,000 Democratic majority was wiped out and a Republican elected, and in another district 12,000 Democratic majority was reduced to 2,000, then I say again it is a reflection upon the intelligence of the Senator from Delaware to even call his attention to this matter.

Mr. GRAY. If I were to indulge in that kind of language, which I do not wish to do, I should say it was a reflection on the intelligence of the Senator from New Hampshire not to know that the elections in New York turned upon the local, city politics, the Tammany and the anti-Tammany organizations. It was one of those temporary disturbances in politics which occur there and in all great cities.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly did not mean to be offensive to the Senator from Delaware. This is the first time the suggestion has ever been made that those elections were conducted on local issues, and I hope the people of New York will take note of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. The elections in the two Congressional districts in the city of New York to which the Senator from Delaware has alluded were conducted solely upon the question of the tariff.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. ALDRICH. The successful candidate in one of the districts, Mr. QUIGG—I do not remember the number of the district—made a house-to-house canvass throughout the entire district, not simply upon the tariff question, but upon the bill as it then stood in the House of Representatives, the so-called Wilson bill. The election in Pennsylvania was also carried on upon tariff lines.

Mr. GRAY. The "Dutch carried Holland" there, did they not?

Mr. ALDRICH. The election in my State, where the selection of a member of this body was at stake, was carried, too, solely upon that issue. If there is anything in the signs of the times that is perfectly clear and that the Senator from Delaware understands as well as I do, it is that the people of the United States are heartily sick and disgusted with themselves for the result of the elections of 1892, and that there is a revision of that judgment going on at the present moment.

Mr. GRAY. Against the assertion of the Senator from Rhode Island and his declaration in respect to which I have no doubt the wish is father to the thought, that the people are sick of tariff reform, I have only to place again their distinct, emphatic, and impossible-to be-misunderstood verdict in 1892, and to state that since then there has been neither opportunity to reverse it nor any attempt to reverse it.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from New Hampshire will yield for a moment further——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not say that the people of the United States were sick of tariff reform. My declaration was not intended to be so broad. What I did say and what I mean to affirm is that the people of the United States, with great unanimity, are opposed to the kind of tariff reform which it is proposed to be enacted into legislation by any of the bills now before the Houses of Congress. It is this nondescript measure, which is neither for free trade nor protection, which is a thousand times worse in its effects upon the country than either would be, that the people of the country are disgusted with. I will state to the Senator from Delaware (and I I am not greatly mistaken he will find the same thing true in Delaware next November) in my part of the country there is not an intelligent Democrat of any kind who does not denounce the proposed legislation that is now before Congress.

Mr. GRAY. The only satisfactory evidence that we can ever have about popular sentiment is a popular vote, and I am not in the habit of indulging in prophesies in a matter of that kind. If I did I could indulge in some.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think it would be safe for the Senator from Delaware to indulge in prophesies.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I believe I will proceed. I will say, broadening the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island a little, that, in my opinion, there has not been an election in any State of the American Union since the Wilson bill was reported that was not fought distinctly upon the tariff issue.

Mr. FRYE. Nor in any town.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nor in any town. If the Senator from Delaware is so confident that the verdict of the American people was in favor of tariff reform, as he calls it—and I wish to call his attention to this matter—and that the American people decided in favor of this sort of legislation and that they have not changed their mind in regard to it, is he willing to put this matter over and submit it again to the people of this country in November of the present year?

Mr. GRAY. I should not dare go home to my people if I did.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator would not come back here if he did. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to another significant fact. The Democratic press of the country, the influential press of the country, has had nothing but words of praise to say in respect to the two speeches which have been made upon the other side of the Chamber in opposition to this measure. I know of no Democrats of the North who are not heartily in sympathy with the effort which is made here by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] either to put the bill into a shape where it will conform with Democratic principles and Democratic doctrines or to defeat it. This movement, I say, has the hearty sympathy of every Democrat I know of in the North.

Mr. GRAY. I crave the indulgence of the Senator from New Hampshire, as he is so amiable about yielding.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am always delighted to yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Rhode Island as usual, in the enthusiasm of his nature and with that hopefulness which builds itself to such gigantic proportions upon so slight a foundation, is building a very great superstructure on the two speeches to which he alludes. I understand both of those speeches were confined (certainly the last one was confined, unless I am misinformed) to a discussion of the income-tax provision of the proposed law, which has just about as much relation to the tariff reform that was passed upon by the people in 1892 as a ukase of the Emperor of Russia. If he builds his hopes entirely upon that foundation, I am afraid we will have to sympathize with a very grievous disappointment. If that means an objection to tariff reform, then, of course, I am quite as much mistaken as the Senator from Rhode Island no doubt thinks I am.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be very much mistaken if a large majority of the Senators sitting upon the other side of the Chamber do not arrive at the conclusion before we are through with this discussion that the income tax is a very essential element of tariff reform.

Mr. GRAY. Is the Senator from Rhode Island opposed to the income tax?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly. I am not only opposed to an income tax, but to all the innumerable odious provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can speak more definitely concerning the politics of my own State than I can speak concerning the State of Delaware or any other State. I know what our people are thinking about to-day. I heard a gentleman, who was a delegate from New Hampshire to the last national Democratic convention and who was a warm supporter of Mr. Cleveland's nomination, say in this building that if the proposed tariff law is passed there will not be any Democratic party in New England left.

I know that the member of the national Democratic committee from my State is credited with having recently said to a high officer of the Government in this city that he proposed to continue to vote the Democratic ticket as long as he lived, but that if the Wilson bill passed he thought he would be the only man in New Hampshire who would vote that ticket at the next election. It may be that the people are not talking and thinking and acting upon the tariff question; it may be that they are talking of local matters instead of national affairs, but I can not conceive how any Senator can stand in this Chamber and make a declaration of that kind.

DOCUMENTARY PROOF.

Fortunately, too, there are documents in existence bearing on the question of the tariff law of 1846 which can not be gainsaid. Among those are the pay rolls of New England manufacturing establishments. Mr. John F. Busiel, of Laconia, N. H., is a gentleman known throughout New England as a man of strictest honor and integrity. Until recently he was a Democrat, but the free trade tendencies of the Democracy have driven him into the ranks of the Republican party. In 1848 Mr. Busiel managed the Gilford Manufacturing Company, and in a recent letter to Congressman BLAIR he furnished the pay roll of his mill for the month of February, 1848. It is exceedingly instructive, and I borrow it from a recent speech of Congressman BAKER of New Hampshire:

If any Democratic Senator who thinks the period of the Walker tariff was such a golden era will take that pay roll, copied from the books of a manufacturing concern in my State, and then come before the Senate of the United States and still contend that those were prosperous times I will promise to yield the discussion absolutely.

This table shows that the average pay of each employé, including overseers, during those good old Democratic days was 51.6 cents per day of fourteen hours or 36⅞ cents per day of ten hours. Statistics show the average pay of mill operatives to have been as follows, at stated periods between 1848 and 1892:

1848, Walker tariff, 50.7 cents per day of fourteen hours, 3.62 cents per hour.
1853, Walker tariff, 57.4 cents per day of fourteen hours, 4.1 cents per hour.
1861, Morrill tariff and war time, about 50 cents per day of eleven hours, 4⅝ cents per hour.
1864, Morrill tariff, about 60 cents per day of eleven hours, 5⅜ cents per hour.
1869, Morrill tariff, $1.16 per day of eleven hours, 10½ cents per hour.
1892, McKinley tariff, $1.57 per day of ten hours, 15.7 cents per hour.
For 1893 the wage rate showed a slight increase over 1892, until the panic stopped business.

It will be seen that the wage rate under the McKinley tariff of 1890 was more than four times that of the Walker tariff of 1846. And yet the Senator from Indiana says we had marvelous prosperity under the tariff of 1846, and that the McKinley law was "a reckless and foolhardy experiment on the forbearance of the American people." What sublime and unutterable nonsense that is.

Mr. Busiel concludes his exceedingly interesting letter in these words:

Thus it will be seen that during the period of the Walker tariff and through the war, there was very little increase in the purchasing power of an hour's work, while since protection has had a natural opportunity to operate during the last thirty years, the hour's pay has become at least three or four times more valuable as a purchasing power than under the Walker period of free trade or revenue only. It should be further stated that food, clothing, and other necessaries were generally much more expensive relatively during the Walker tariff period than since that time under protection.

What is true of the manufacturing industry is also true in regard to agriculture and all other employments of society. I worked on a farm myself in those days and know that first-class hands received 50 cents working out by the day during the warm season, excepting in haying time, when they were paid 75 cents. Ten and twelve dollars by the month was the very highest pay then known to be paid on a farm in that part of the country, while six or eight was nearer the average. The improvement of the condition of our people under the policy of protection is beyond realization by those who have not witnessed it in others or experienced it themselves.

These are solemn facts as against Democratic theory; but notwithstanding it all the Democratic party will continue the cry that the Walker tariff period was "a golden era of prosperity." Heaven save the mark!

SUGAR.

The Senator from Indiana defended with much vigor the proposed placing of a duty on sugar, and denounced the bounty feature of the McKinley law as a great outrage on the American people. It is difficult to discuss seriously such a speech as that of the Senator from Indiana. How can argument reach a man who claims that the farmer does not need protection for his wool, because, as he says, "a man canopied by the free open heavens can not prosper by the artificial and unfair processes of protection." The same logic would forbid the farmer, with the free canopy of heaven over him, to use artificial fertilizers on his land.

The Senator exulted in eloquent language because the price of sugar has fallen heavily since 1846, and then he fiercely denounced the bounty system, to which alone that decline is due. If he does not like McKinley prices for sugar why does not he go back to Walker prices in 1846, which were more than twice what they are to-day? The Senator calls the $10,000,000 paid in bounty robbery and extortion, but he conveniently forgets the $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 that have gone into the pockets of the people because of practical free sugar under the McKinley law.

The price of sugar has fallen because three-fifths of the sugar supply of the world is furnished by beets; and the beet sugar industry, created by protection of the most stringent character, has always been, and is now, stimulated by bounties. The Senator does not like "artificial" methods of producing industrial results under the free canopy of Heaven. But if there ever was employment of artificial means in such a direction it was when France thus summoned into existence, and the other nations of Europe promoted and developed, the culture of the sugar beet. Eloquent references to the free canopy of Heaven and to the intrinsic viciousness of bounties will not disguise the facts, first, that this friend of the farmers is trying to destroy a new industry which in the great West promises much for the prosperity of the agricultural population; and, second, that while he will relieve the people from payment of about ten millions annually for bounties, he will compel them to pay in sugar duties from fifty to sixty millions which they are not now required to pay.

This is the grand scheme of the Democratic party in regard to sugar. It strikes a blow at every man, woman, and child in the land, and especially in the families of the poor. It protects and fattens the great sugar trust, while at the same time it imposes an additional burden upon every consumer of sugar in the United States, and sounds the death knell of the beet-sugar industry in Kansas, Nebraska, and other States.

Whether, as is rumored, the Democratic majority have further yielded to the sugar trust, and are contemplating an added increase of duty, I do not know. It matters not whether that be true or false, the people understand the question, and the day of reckoning for the Democratic party on this subject is not far away.

TAX ON DISTILLED SPIRITS AND THE EXTENSION OF THE BONDED PERIOD.

In discussing the tax on distilled spirits and the extension of the bonded period the Senator from Indiana declared that the task was easy and the way smooth. He then proceeded to show that the proposed increase of tax and the extension of the bonded period was altogether in the favor of the Government and not at all to the interest of the whiskey ring. It will be difficult for the Senator to impress his views on this subject upon the minds of candid men. The present internal-revenue tax on whisky and other distilled spirits is 90 cents a gallon, to be paid by the distillers three years after the liquor is made, or at any time within the three years if it shall be sold.

The three years are allowed for the reason that the newly made liquors are unfit for use, and require about three years to ripen and evaporate their rawness. For the purpose of keeping these liquors until sold for use, the Government provides bonded warehouses in which to put them during the three years' process of maturing. The tax is not demanded until the liquors are taken out of these warehouses for sale. But whenever they are taken out, the tax must be paid. The result of this system of storage is an enormous stock of liquors constantly in these warehouses unsold. So far so good. But now, what do we see? The new "reform" tariff, with its internal-revenue attachment, provides that the tax shall be increased from 90 cents to $1.10 per gallon, but the additional 20 cents shall not apply to the liquors now stored and to be stored before the new act goes into effect, but shall apply only to the liquors made after the law goes into operation. This is manifestly for the purpose of giving the distillers, the whisky, rum, and gin makers, the chance to add the 20 cents a gallon to the price of their products as clear profit without paying it as a tax at all. In addition to this, the new bill extends the storage period to eight years, so as to give the whisky ring all the advantages of the market for this long term instead of the three years now provided, and thus relieve the distillers from the trouble of raising money to pay the tax and saving them interest on the whole amount. This job of legislation will put millions into the pockets of the whisky ring as clear profits.

But let us see how this proposed increase on distilled spirits will work. The whisky ring will remove from bond an immense supply of the stock on hand, increase the price the amount of the additional tax (20 cents per gallon), and the Government will get nothing additional by way of tax. Not only the consumer of whisky, but those who use alcohol in the arts will be compelled to contribute 20 cents per gallon to the most unscrupulous and desperate ring that has ever existed in this country. Now, let us go a step further. The bill proposes to extend the bonded period from three to eight years. What will be the result of such extension? The Government will be deprived for five years of its tax of 90 cents per gallon. Ninety cents, at 6 per cent, is 5.40 cents annually, and for five years it is 27 cents. So that every gallon of spirits left in bond for five additional years will pay the Government 20 cents additional tax, and at 6 per cent interest the whisky ring will make 27 cents, or 7 cents more than will be paid to the Government.

At 5 per cent the loss to the Government will be 2½ cents on every gallon, and at 4 per cent the Government will make a profit of just 2 cents per gallon. This is a matter of simple mathematics which I seriously commend to the consideration of the Senator from Indiana and his Democratic associates. I say that the pretended advance of the duty on distilled spirits is a humbug from beginning to end. It will not much benefit the revenues of the Government, it will largely increase the price of alcohol used in the arts, and it will enrich an already highly favored class of men, combined to control the market in distilled spirits. In addition to which it may be said that while the Government is keeping the whisky eight years in bonded warehouses it will probably double in value because of its added age.

WHY NOT A TAX ON BEER?

If additional revenue is needed why not put the tax on fermented liquors? The tax on beer is paid yearly, and there is no bonded period. Alcohol and spirits now pay 700 per cent tax, while beer pays about 25 per cent. The former is used to a large extent in manufactures, while the latter is all drank. Let the tax on distilled spirits remain at 90 cents, and the tax on beer be increased from $1 to $2 per barrel. Such an arrangement would not be profitable to the whisky trust, but it would be sensible and just. Why this extreme tenderness and consideration for the brewing interest of the country which accumulates vast fortunes? The claim that beer is a food product and should not be further taxed is ridiculous in view of the proposed tax on sugar, used by every person in the country, rich and poor alike, and from the fact that inasmuch as only a small proportion of the sugar consumed by our people is produced in this country, it is entitled to free admission to our markets.

Beer is an article not carried in bond in such large quantities as to affect the interests of any trade by an increase of the internal tax from one to two dollars per barrel. The increased income would be immediately available; the retail price would not be affected in the least. There would be no one engaged in the arts and manufactures to suffer, as will be the case should spirits and alcohol be advanced in price. Aside from this very important consideration, the money market will not be disturbed, as there would be no demand for funds to take out goods under the present law, thereby deferring for an indefinite period the benefits of legislation. The limit the Government hopes to benefit ultimately from the increased tax on spirits is twenty millions per year, and really nothing for a long time. Beer increased $1 a barrel would bring in a revenue of over thirty millions per year, the increase becoming immediately available. From this the Government could continue the present bounty on sugar, and have nearly twenty millions surplus.

Then why not tax beer? Will some one on the Democratic side kindly make answer?

THE INCOME TAX.

With his usual exuberance of language the Senator from Indiana gives his approval and blessing to the income tax proposition. He sees nothing in it but good, and even finds authority for it in the Good Book itself. But that, I will suggest to the Senator from Indiana, was a very different and much better income tax than the one now proposed.

In my former speech I pointed out that the proposed tax is inequitable, inquisitorial, and sectional, and will in time of peace subject the people to methods that were well nigh intolerable in time of war.

Since then the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] have discussed the subject with great ability, and have pointed out the overwhelming objections to this form of legislation. I will now content myself with calling attention to the utterances of certain public men and leading newspapers in opposition to this scheme.

Hon. J. C. HENDRIX, a Democratic Representative in Congress from New York, discussed this question in a speech in the House of Representatives with such remarkable keenness and ability that I can not refrain from quoting liberally from him. Among other things, Mr. HENDRIX said:

A volume could be written on the mysteries of this bill before we get within 40 miles of the plutocrat. If you make $5,000 on the sale in 1894 of a house purchased in 1892, you pay on that 2 per cent. If you lose $5,000 on a house you bought in 1892—these real-estate transactions run from the year of our great victory—you pay 2 per cent of that also.

If you speculate as a business and lose $5,000 in Wall street that is deducted from your taxable income. If you paid $5,000 for a piece of real estate and the title proves bad—that is, if you bought it in 1892 and discovered your loss in 1894—you get no deduction. If there was a house on it and you had that burned you get a deduction, provided it was not insured. The law reads "losses actually sustained during the year arising from fire, shipwreck, or incurred in trade and not covered by insurance or otherwise." That "otherwise" is scattered through this bill like plums in a pudding.

If you own a building which does not pay because it has no elevator, and you put one in, the cost of that elevator is part of your income and you must pay 2 per cent on it. You can deduct the Medicine Lodge mortgage in some distant year when you have ascertained that it is worthless, but until so ascertained the tax runs on the interest upon it, and there are no drawbacks. The curios are not ended. From the aggregate income of all the members of any family one deduction of $4,000 is made. What is the size of the family? The proposed law says it may be composed of one or both parents. It does not limit their ages—"one or more minor children"—it does not say whose children—"or husband and wife." Now, if there is not a problem for you!

Between them all, $4 000 may be deducted. The grandparents may be living with their only son and his wife and their one or more minor children—all with $4,000 incomes. Whose $4,000 of income is to be deducted? Does the exemption run to the "old folks at home?" The grandfather may never care to wander from his son's fireside. If he and his old wife should take a house next door they would save taxes on $4,000, because they would be clearly within the statute. If they live with their only son and his wife and their one or more minor children, the taxable wealth of the country would probably be increased by $8,000. If a husband and wife should each have a separate income of $4,000 a year, they will have to be taxed, if they live together, on $4,000. If they get a divorce, they are not taxed.

Four sisters, girls of 17, 18, 19, and 20, say, jointly own a city house which yields $16,000 a year income. They pay a tax on an income of $12,000 because they live in sweet sisterly love with a big brother who is their guardian. They all marry in one season, and that taxable wealth is knocked into oblivion. A law that can shoot in as many directions as this one and hit something every time, is too dangerous to let loose in hard times on a suffering country.

If a poor farmer puts money into a little company and utilizes some waterfall near by for a factory, down comes the hand of a tax collector and makes his investment so unprofitable that it is better to keep his money idle, without the risk of business, in an old stocking. This law is an octupus. It has a tentacle for every man who has a dollar in any paying corporation in America. If a page here owns one block of Western Union Telegraph stock which pays him $5 a year he must lose 2 per cent on that $5. If I own a million dollars of Government bonds I do not have to lose 1 cent, not even on the accrued interest, on the premium, on the bond, or on that mystery of finance, the "premium on the coupon."

If I own $100,000 worth of New York Central stock, I lose 2 per cent on $4,000. If I go into a manufacturing enterprise that pays no dividend, but tries to build up a surplus for hard times, I get no return for my money and have to go to work. If my salary is $4,000, I must account for the ratable share of the surplus of the factory, and that is taxed. So I am better off to lock my money up in governments or to put it in a savings bank, where it is under favor of State and national laws and is kept out of business. The bill should be entitled "An act to encourage idle capital."

It is a tax upon industry. There is a messenger boy in the bank of which I am president, who has put his savings into a corporate stock. He pays his 2 per cent income tax, although he has not over $300 in the world and his salary is not over $10 a week. His income is about $15 a year from his investment, but it is taxed. A clerk who gets $4,000 and saves nothing does not feel the tax at all. A stockholder lives on the proceeds of $150,000 of Detroit City 4 per cent bonds and goes untaxed. The tax reaches the boy's $15, but it does not touch the wealthy stockholder. Yet this bill is framed on the theory of each citizen's ability to pay! The widow gets insurance on her dead husband's policy. All dividends coming to her are taxed 2 per cent, and she receives, say $10,000, in one year. She must pay 2 per cent on $6,000 of that. She invests the whole $10,000 in some corporate stock, and her income, all that she has or ever expects, is $600 a year. She loses 2 per cent tax on that by this bill. A rich man's widow puts $100,000 into Brooklyn City 4's and doesn't pay a cent.

The President of the United States, with $50,000 a year salary, pays nothing, it is claimed, and a member of Congress, who gets $5,000 a year, and pays $1,000 taxes on a fine house which he owns, escapes taxation. The member who rents a house for $1,000 has to pay taxes on $1,000, yet there is to be no inequality in this taxation! The Cabinet minister, with $8,000 a year, may pay $4,000 taxes on city lots, and not be taxed a dollar for the Government.

The law sends a prying, curious lot of officials about with power to invade homes and business houses, and to exercise all sorts of tyranny. It must be inquisitorial to the last degree. It punishes enterprise, hunts coöperation with a malicious mind, and seeks to discourage the strength that grows out of the union of savings in adventure, and drives capital into idleness and hiding. You can drive a coach and four through it, and yet it will take 2 cents out of one single dollar paid to a New England mill operative on her invested savings.

That is Democratic testimony from a man of large business experience, and as such is entitled to great consideration.

Hon. Roswell G. Horr, of Michigan, a sound thinker and writer on economic and financial questions, has this to say in an article published in the New York Tribune:

The income tax on the earnings of corporations, as it now stands in the Wilson bill, will compel national banks to pay an additional tax over and above that which they now pay as local taxation. The savings banks will be compelled to do the same thing. Indeed, the tax is universal and applies to the earnings of all corporations.

The President recommended such a tax in his message, but did not favor a tax on individual incomes. He no doubt conceived the notion that a tax on corporations could be more easily collected, and would not be so repugnant to our people as a tax on individual incomes. Such a tax on the earnings of corporations is, in fact, a tax on every stockholder of such corporations. Consequently the claim that the income tax will reach only about 85,000 people in the United States is nonsense. The law as it now stands will affect several hundred thousand people who own stock in the numerous corporations. It is on that account that such a tax is unfair and unjust.

Many of the stockholders of these corporations are widows, children, and other persons who have not even $1,000 of income a year. They suffer by such a tax, while the people who earn $2,000, $2,500, $3,000, $3,500 a year go scot-free. Such a tax is not perhaps as obnoxious to the people of the country as the direct tax on individual incomes, but it is by far the most unequal tax.

The savings banks will be affected. They will have to pay their own local taxes, also this tax on their earnings, and will suffer by the tax being also collected on the dividends of many stocks which they hold as investments. These banks must also pay interest on their deposits.

There is no use trying to evade the conclusions. An income tax of this kind will have a tendency to cripple corporate institutions. The purpose seemed to be to tax all kinds of successful industry and to strike a direct blow at every person who is prosperous. I do not know that there was any special prejudice against the stockholders of national banks. The intention of the bill was to raise a large amount of money from persons and corporations that are doing well.

No one will deny the fact that the income tax is class legislation of the rankest kind. The exemption was placed at the high sum of $4,000 in order not to reach any people except those who have large incomes. Such a tax is simply communism in an indirect way. In England the exemption is only $500. A large exemption makes it a tax of the few for the benefit of the many.

The old rule that all property should be taxed equally is violated by such a law. Under this law more than one-half of the incomes of the United States are not taxed at all. The tax will be considered unjust by those who are required to pay it; and when taxes are so considered people always resort to schemes to avoid their collection. The premium thus offered for fraud and evasion leads to immorality.

The Washington Evening Star, in a very able editorial, says:

With a growing deficiency staring it in the face this Government, through those who are legislatively responsible for its present conduct, is searching for considerable additions to its income, and after more or less of thought the majority have come to the conclusion that a tax upon incomes will do much toward filling up the unsightly hole in the Treasury. The proposition is, however, extremely unpopular save with two classes—those Democrats who imagine they see in it the only relief for an embarrassed Administration and the Populists, who, as a rule, have no incomes large enough to be taxable. Even among loyal Democrats there is opposition to the tax; in fact, the more loyal the Democrat the less is the enthusiasm on this interesting topic. It is admitted by those who are convinced that tariff duties must be lowered that the deficit will have to be made up through the agency of internal taxation, but as soon as that point is reached there is instant division and divergence. It is more than difficult to understand the processes by which income-tax advocates can have satisfied themselves that they alone have reached the true solution of a most intricate problem, especially when history makes plain the antagonism with which Americans greeted an impost similar in general outline to that now proposed.

In an exhaustive review of income-tax legislation, published in the Annals of the American Academy, Prof. Frederic C. Howe of Johns Hopkins University says that "few taxes were more unpopular or odious to the people than the income tax. From its first imposition it was assailed as invading the sanctity of the most private affairs, as being inseparable from inquisitorial scrutiny into business relations, and an insufferable penetration into those affairs of the individual which were in a sense sacred, and which in the past had been exempted from the visits of the excise man. It was further alleged, with some truth, that a tax which offered such opportunities for evasion was a charge upon honesty and a premium upon false returns."

But there are other reasons why no such tax should be levied, and among these is that which shows sectional inequality and proves that the burden is on the class that deserves exemption—the successfully industrious and thrifty. Of course there is not so much disparity between the North and the South as there was during 1857 when one collection district in New York received more than twice as much income tax than was collected in all the States of Virginia, Texas, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and Florida, but comparisons startlingly similar will surely develop if this extremely unpopular attachment to the Wilson bill becomes a law.

The New York Press, under the caption of "The Plunder and the Blunder Tax," dissects the income-tax proposition in these words:

The Wilson bill for the benefit of foreign manufacturers and the degradation of American labor is fittingly crowned with an income tax, intended to transfer to American and especially to Northern shoulders the burden heretofore borne by the foreigner. According to the estimate made by the advocates of the Wilson bill, the proposed income tax would yield $30,000,000, by far the greater part of which would be exacted from the thrift and industry of New York, New England, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and other Northern sections, and thereby removed from circulation and trade in those localities. A plain statement of the case is that the income tax would be a levy on the North to punish this section of the Union for having been loyal and prosperous; for having supported the principle of protection and taken advantage of its opportunities. The idea that an individual can be plundered without injuring the community in which he lives has been sufficiently exploded by the experience of the year that has passed.

No New York Congressman can be foolish enough to suppose that the removal, say, of $5,000,000 from the bank accounts and pockets of New York citizens to the Federal Treasury by an income tax would not be an appreciable loss to the business interests, the merchants, the tradespeople, and working people of our city. The men who do not spend the larger share of their net incomes in the immediate vicinity of their homes are probably very few in number.

The income taxpayer may have to endure no serious inconvenience by curtailing expenditures for the household, for the church, for society and charity. But the church, the merchants, and tradespeople and the other beneficiaries of the expenditures thus diminished would also have to curtail. In the end the income tax would come out of the pockets of the wage-earner, or be paid at his expense. The New York Congressman, therefore, voting an income tax, would be voting, practically, to take a large amount of money from the current circulation, the business interests, and the wages earned in the city of New York. And the same statement applies to every place in the country that is a center of business energy.

There is no resemblance, and there can be no comparison, between a Federal income tax and the direct taxes levied for State and local purposes. The people of New York have paid many millions yearly in direct taxation, but the money goes directly into the channels of trade here in New York and supports thousands of resident families. Of the money paid in obedience to a Federal income tax but a small proportion would find its way back to local circulation. It would be virtually lost to the community from which it had been exacted, and it would be a loss appreciable by every resident, whether himself a contributor to the tax or not. Everybody knows the influence of a liberal circulation of money in promoting business and trade. The drain of an income tax on that circulation could not fail to have an unfortunate effect.

To the free traders whose desire is to buy foreign goods in preference to American goods, either without a tariff or with a fraudulent tariff that could be readily evaded, the income tax would be welcome. Most of them live where thrift and industry have no substantial foothold, and where honest labor has been considered degrading. It would gratify such men to see communities built up by protection desolated by free trade and robbed by an income tax. But their wishes are not likely to be gratified. A large number of Democrats are said to be aroused to the suicidal folly of a proposition which is grossly antagonistic to the cherished American principle of the greatest individual liberty compatible with the common welfare and security.

Hundreds of other similar expressions can be found in the leading papers of the country—Democratic as well as Republican. The only papers which give this proposition unqualified support are those which advocate the doctrines of the Populist party. They seem to believe in distributing wealth by act of Congress, and hence roll the income-tax idea as a sweet morsel under their tongues. But time will not permit me to discuss this matter much further, and I will only add a quotation from an editorial from the Journal of Commerce, of New York, an exceedingly able publication, devoted largely to financial matters. It is the ablest discussion of the question that I have yet found. That nonpartisan paper says, under the appropriate heading of "Fiscal Tyranny:"

If the political desperadoes who attached the income tax to the tariff bill had any conception of the feeling aroused among citizens who comprehend its true significance, they would find strong reasons of party prudence for promptly reconsidering their rash proposals. For what are the facts as to this extraordinary innovation upon our customary methods of taxation? Let the following facts answer:

The income tax is a fulsome copy from imperial precedents. In European countries, where large armies are the custodians of the filched rights of the people, when all other sources of taxation have been exhausted this taxing by violence has been resorted to. In the case of nearly every government adopting it, it has been the last desperate resort either to support war or to pay its after penalties, and states once committed to the expedient rarely find it possible to throw it off. England resorted to the tax during her wars at the beginning of this century, with the express understanding that it was to be but temporary, and to be consistent with that pretense she has since renewed it from year to year, no statesman daring to suggest its fixed perpetuation. However insincere the pretense, it is at least a standing confession of the illegitimacy of the tax; and no statesman would pretend to justify it on any other ground than that of fiscal expediency. In this country we reluctantly adopted the tax under the imperative necessities of the late war, but dropped it the moment those exigencies ceased, so distasteful was it to the self-respect of the individual citizen. In restoring the odious impost now, we should have no such excuse as then, nor even as much warrant as the European governments, whose fiscal straits are chronically perilous.

The tax is odiously inquisitorial. It starts with the demand that the citizen shall declare to corrupt and leaky officials the foremost secrets of his affairs, and swear to the exact amount of his income. Realizing how such inquisitions are calculated to evoke a just resentment, it next assumes good citizens to be dishonest, and puts in force the most insulting appliances of compulsory examination and search. By law of this boasted free country, therefore, every citizen who has been able to earn a competence is put in the category of thieves and swindlers, and is threatened with severest penalty if he hesitates to render absolute submission to these intolerable insults.

The tax violates the citizen's sacred right of privacy. In this aspect, it is a striking illustration of a certain brutish conception of governmental powers that is becoming too common in legislation. It is simply the coarse spirit of a vulgar bully that would demand access to a man's most cherished secrets as a means of extorting from him tribute which he is quite ready to pay in a legitimate way; and every Congressman who votes for this tax shows himself wanting in the first elements of decent manners, to say nothing of his lack of statesmanly appreciation of the most delicate of personal rights.

The execution of this tax involves a ruthless abuse of "the right of search." Under certain circumstances, a government may legitimately exercise the power of search or seizure over a man's house, his property, or his papers. Where a man is charged with crime, that authority may be properly exercised in the interests of justice and public order, but, even then, only upon a prima facie presumption of guilt established before a court by due process. But to create a tax which needs the exercise of this highly arbitrary form of power amounts to a wantonness of authority which nothing short of the last extremity of national danger could warrant. As a last resort of war finance, and especially if the loyalty of the people could not be trusted, it might be allowable. But to use such an instrument for the collection of taxes among a loyal and orderly people, ready to pay all reasonable revenue, is a shameless abuse of this search power; and all the more so because there are many other readily available means of raising revenue that would suggest no such brutal exercise of authority.

Surely the following language, from the Constitution of the United States, expresses a regard for the sacredness of the rights of privacy wholly incompatible with the flippant authorization of searches and seizures contained in this bill: "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated." It is a poor sign of political tendencies when a majority of the legislators of this great Republic shows so little discrimination between a necessary and a wanton exercise of the severer powers of government.

The methods of enforcing this tax are copied from the Star Chamber—with this difference, however, that the English tyranny was enforced by judges, while in this case it is intrusted to the execution of politicians, who would be as liable to sell the secrets that come into their hands as to blackmail the victims of their authority. It is an incredible anomaly that methods of power that were abandoned by the Long Parliament should two hundred and fifty-three years later crop out again in the United States Congress.

The tax exposes the citizen to the faithless cupidity of leaky spies. The majority of Representatives who have voted for this tax consists largely of lawyers. Those gentlemen do not need to be told how much it is worth to know the secret of a man's business, his fortune, and his family prospects. Their experience has taught them how many varieties of harpies there are who are ready to turn such information to their own account and to the injury of the man whose secrets have been filched. The political experience that has brought these gentlemen to Washington has not left them ignorant that the class of men to whom the execution of this tax will be intrusted are, as a rule, not too virtuous to divulge an official secret for a consideration, and that there is "in the party" a class of official hucksters to whom they durst not refuse such secrets. All this, every member of Congress knows to be a certainty; and yet, with this knowledge of the abuse that is to be made of the secrets to be exacted from the citizen, they deliberately give their assent to the infamous wrong. We repeat that this income-tax scheme is a revelation of political turpitude in the National Legislature more startling than has appeared for many years. Can we wonder at the rottenness of local politics, when the picked leaders of party are found ready to thus prostitute the higher powers of the National Government?

The imposition of an income tax is an unjust form of class legislation. It is aimed at what is called the moneyed class, and carries the implication that they are the select few who should bear the national burthens. The notion is as shallow as it is demagogic. It conveys the false implication that the final incidence of taxes rests with the persons from whom they are collected; whereas the immediate payer always finds one means or another of shifting a large portion of what is collected from him upon other heads, and the burthen is finally distributed more or less equitably among the community at large. This is true indeed of every kind of taxation, and natural law, not the apings of conventional law, finally determines who shall pay the taxes. But in the case of this particular tax, one class is deluded by the flattering assumption that it is escaping the taxes, and the demagogic legislator is rewarded by the gratitude and hurrahs of his dupes.

The income tax owes its present advocacy very largely to a vicious sectional motive. Its Congressional supporters hail mainly from the Western and Southern States. Those sections are smitten with an insatiable jealousy toward the Eastern and Middle States. The latter sections can not be forgiven because their civilization happens to be older, more mature, better organized, and therefore more successful in the accumulation of wealth. The offense of the older States is that having grown out of the agricultural stage of development, they have become manufacturers, merchants, bankers, railroad builders, and the intermediaries for the exchange of our exports for imports. These services to the West are the crime of the East. The crime is to be atoned for by paying the Federal taxes; and the Western and Southern franchise is the authority by virtue of which the penalty is to be inflicted. But for this petty sectional envy, there would not have been ten men in the House of Representatives who would have stooped to demean themselves by thus conspiring against the liberties and immunities of American citizens.

This tax has a direct tendency to create disaffection towards the Government and to debase the public sense of honesty. A people respect their government in proportion as they are respected by the government. If citizens are dealt with on the assumption that they are as a mass dishonest and if on that suspicion they are beset by inquisitorial espionage and held under threat of forfeiture, they are apt to retort by treating the government as a robber and by evading its exactions by any and every means. This process of governing by force and of meeting the force by deceit and evasion is the device of fools and not of wise statesmen; and its tendency is to extinguish every sentiment of patriotism and to weaken private morals by debasing the morals of the public administration. Arbitrary government means death to national morals; and that is what might be expected from this monstrous proposal to rob the citizen of his most valued personal rights.

This great newspaper argues with striking ability that the income-tax proposition in this bill is unconstitutional, but, inasmuch as the United States Supreme Court, by a majority decision, affirmed the constitutionality of the income-tax law of 1873, that point may well be passed over without discussion. Very likely, however, if this bill passes, a test will be made of its constitutionality, and possibly a different conclusion may be reached by the Court. But, however that may be, the proposition to impose such a tax is contrary to both good business sense and good morals.

FREE WOOL.

When the Senator from Indiana got thoroughly warmed up to his subject nothing seemed to daunt him. Notwithstanding there are in the Senator's own State over 1,000,000 of sheep, the owners of which are to-day in close competition with the sheep-raisers of Australia and the Argentine Republic, he sees no reason why wool should not be put on the free list. The Senator's scheme seems to be to destroy American flocks by free wool, and then to destroy the American manufacture of woolen goods by putting the finished product on the free list. It is a grand scheme so far as the interests of England, Germany, France, Australia, and South America are concerned, but it means utter disaster to woolgrowing and wool manufacturing in this country.

The sheep industry in the United States is a very important one. There were in 1890 in all of the States 47,273,553 sheep, of a value of $125,909,264, and the wool clip for that year aggregated 364,156,666 pounds. In New Hampshire there are 115,471 sheep, being a little less than our per capita proportion on the basis of population. This is a great industry, and deserves and should receive adequate protection. The Republican party has recognized that fact in all tariff laws passed since 1860, but the Democratic party at its first opportunity proposes to strike a blow at the interests of the farmers and utterly destroy this great and important industry.

We hear a great deal of talk about the decline of sheep husbandry in the United States. The wool clip in 1893 was 364,156,566 pounds, which was 31,139,261 pounds more than the clip for 1892, and 56,156,665 pounds more than for any other year in the history of the country. That surely does not look like retrogression in this great agricultural staple. Indeed, sheep husbandry, under adequate protection has twice made such rapid headway in the increase of flocks as to lead to the assurance that with the continuance of that protection we would soon produce the total amount of wool consumed by this country. During the last twelve years of the tariff law of 1867, the American clip increased 100 per cent, that increase being from 170,000,000 pounds in 1873 to over 340,000,000 pounds in 1884. If the duties had not been lowered at the end of that period, it is fair to assume that the same ratio of increase would have continued, in which case we would have produced in 1895 over 650,000,000 pounds, which, including the wool imported in the shape of manufactured goods, is the total amount of wool consumed by this country. A serious check to the growth of the wool industry was given by the reduction of duties in 1883, but with the restoration of a portion of those duties by the McKinley law in 1890, such an impetus was given to the woolgrowing industry that the clip again increased at a rapid rate. The increase was from 310,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 360,000,000 in 1893, so that if the McKinley law had not been assailed, while the increase would have been slower than it was between 1873 and 1884 it is fair to assume that by the year 1900 we would be producing 650,000,000 pounds.

I find in a recent circular from Justice, Bateman & Co., wool merchants of New York, two interesting diagrams, which I will reproduce. The actual increases in the wool clip during the two periods already alluded to are illustrated by the solid black lines extending from left to right in the diagrams. The dotted lines which continue in the same direction indicate the time at which we would arrive at the production of our entire home consumption of wool.

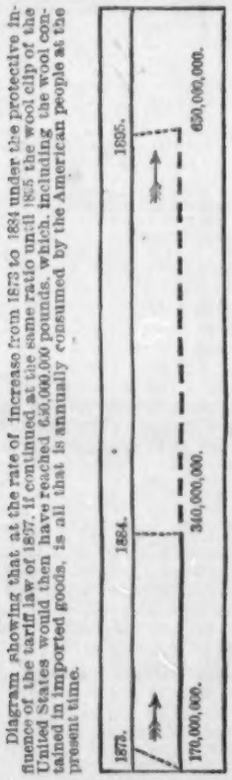

Diagram showing that at the rate of increase from 1873 to 1884 under the protective influence of the tariff law of 1867, if continued at the same ratio until 1895 the wool clip of the United States would then have reached 650,000,000 pounds, which, including the wool contained in imported goods, is all that is annually consumed by the American people at the present time.

Diagram showing that at the rate of increase from 1891 to 1893 under the McKinley law, if continued at the same rate until 1900 the wool clip of the United States would then have reached 650,000,000 pounds, which, including the wool in imported goods, is all that is annually consumed by the American people at the present time.

It is undeniable that the number of sheep has declined materially in the United States during the past year. Why should it not be so when their very existence is threatened by the free-wool policy of the party now in power?

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] declared in his very able speech that if we have free wool we must have free woolens. I do not quarrel with that utterance. It is logical and just from the point of view of the farmer, and very likely the one will follow the other. When that day comes foreign countries will furnish us both our wool and our woolen goods, and when sheep husbandry and the manufacture of woolen goods are destroyed in the United States, England and Australia will fix the price of what they sell to us, and the cost of wool and woolen goods to the people of this country will be much greater than now. It is a grand scheme to destroy American capital and degrade American labor; worthy of the statesmanship and patriotism of the once great Democratic party!

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Senator from Indiana closed his most remarkable speech by this outburst of patriotic fervor:

Sir, this is the birthday of Thomas Jefferson. One hundred and fifty-one years ago to-day he came into the world the greatest emancipator of thought, philosopher of liberty, and teacher of the natural rights of man ever known in human history. The blows he struck for freedom, justice, and equality in government are yet resounding throughout the earth, and they will never cease to be heard until the last shackle of privilege and tyranny is broken. Ten days before his soul took flight from his mountain home he wrote his own countrymen and to all the races of mankind. With this great dying message before us, and in its spirit, we take new courage and go on with our work. "All eyes are open, or opening," he said, "to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth, that the mass of mankind has not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately by the grace of God." Hail, mighty message, and hail its speedy and certain fulfillment! All hail the counsels of Thomas Jefferson in this hour of caste based on wealth, of privilege granted by law, and of monopoly fastened on the slavery of labor!

The galleries applauded, and the Senator modestly received the congratulations of his fellow Democrats. But, Mr. President, what cruelty it is to drag Jefferson before the people of this generation as a patron saint of the Democracy. Why Jefferson never wrote a word or uttered a sentiment, so far as I can find, that can be tortured into support of the doctrines and the teachings of modern Democracy. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] quoted some of Jefferson's teachings on the question of direct taxation, and the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] also pointed out the fact that Jefferson was a strong protectionist. I want to call attention to some further lessons that have recently come to my knowledge from the writings of that great man. In 1817 Jefferson wrote:

The history of the last twenty years has been a significant lesson for us all to depend for necessaries on ourselves alone—

And he expressed the hope that—twenty years more will place the American hemisphere under a system of its own.

What would Jefferson think of modern "Jeffersonian Democrats," if he could come back to earth, who are trying to overturn an American system which has made this the greatest manufacturing nation on the earth.

Again Jefferson asks:

Shall we make our own comforts or go without them at the will of a foreign nation? My own idea—is that we should encourage home manufactures to the extent of our own consumption of everything of which we raise the raw material.

In 1816 Jefferson wrote a letter, from which the following is an extract:

Experience has taught me that manufactures are now as necessary to our independence as to our comfort; and if those who quote me as of a different opinion will keep pace with me in purchasing nothing foreign where an equivalent domestic fabric can be obtained, without regard to difference of price, it will not be our fault if we do not have a supply at home equal to our demands, and wrest that weapon of distress from the hand which has so long wantonly used it.

That is the true American (the true Republican) doctrine. Jefferson a Democrat? Why, Mr. President, one might as well expect the great apostle of agnosticism in this country to accept the teachings of Calvin as to expect that Thomas Jefferson if on earth would countenance the free-trade, income-tax teachings of the degenerate Democratic party of the present day.

THE SENATOR FROM TEXAS.

Following the Senator from Indiana came the Senator from Texas. His speech was brief, fiery, and eloquent. He announced his belief in ad valorem duties, and assured his Democratic associates that he proposed to vote for the bill, which must have been very comforting to them. But the Senator from Texas frankly confessed that the bill was not according to his taste.

The bill does not suit me—

Exclaimed the Senator.

I am between the devil and the deep sea, and when a question is presented to me whether I shall go to the devil and sustain the McKinley law, or go to sea, I am going to sea, with the hope that some fair wind or tide will bring me ashore again.

And so the Senator has gone to sea, threatened in his voyage by the sharks of protection and the devil fishes of free trade. Let us hope that he will come to shore safely, welcomed by the plaudits of the demoralized Democracy, who, dreading the result of their vote on this bill, will chant in his ear the solemn refrain:

You shall and you shan't,
You will and you won't,
You'll be damned if you do,
And damned if you don't.

[Laughter.]

THE LABOR PROBLEM.

Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on the labor problem in this country; for after all is said and done, it is the laboring classes who bear the brunt of unfortunate economic changes. A reduction of 10, 15, or 20 per cent in the rate of wages primarily means distress and suffering to the toiling multitude. But the evil does not stop here. A reduction of wages means a curtailment of the purchasing power of the wage-earner. If he receives less by way of compensation for his work he necessarily purchases less of the products of the farm and the mill, so that farmer, merchant, and manufacturer all share in the evil results.

It has been our boast that we consume, per capita, twice or three times as much as European nations, and Congressman REED has made the startling statement that as compared with England as a market our 70,000,000 of population are equal to 175,000,000, while taking the whole world outside of ourselves compared as a market our population is equal to 700,000,000, nearly one-half of the entire population of the globe. That is a startling and instructive fact, teaching the lesson that we should foster and protect the home market rather than to waste our energies in pursuing the delusive and disappointing "markets of the world," about which our Democratic friends talk so much.

Mr. President, the policy of the Republican party contemplates a high wage rate for the workingmen of the country. No Republican sympathizes with the utterance of a certain distinguished Democratic Congressman when he declared: "If I were certain that wages were higher here I would seek to repeal those laws which make wages higher, and would let wages have their natural place all over the world." That is Democratic, not Republican doctrine. It is the doctrine of the cotton field of the South, not of the workshop and the mill of the North. Every workingman and working woman in the land should read and ponder that declaration, the force of which is not broken by the attempt to qualify it. Every intelligent man and woman in this country knows that wages are at least twice as high here as in England, and many times higher than in Asia.

That statement expresses the purpose of the Wilson bill with great clearness and force. In striking down the McKinley tariff law the Democratic party, under the lead of President Cleveland, proposes to "repeal those laws which make wages higher" in the United States. There can be no mistake about that. In urging the passage of this bill the Democrats are seeking to "let wages have their natural place all over the world," to break down the barrier which keeps out the products of European pauper and Asiatic coolie labor, to force the wage-earners of America to sell their labor in unrestricted competition with impoverished and ignorant Europeans and half-naked and half-savage Asiatics, who live as the beasts that perish. It is a startling programme, against which the laboring men of the country have risen in indignant protest.

The Chicago Inter Ocean recently pointed out the startling fact that a reduction of 20 per cent in the wages paid in the United States means a reduction of the purchasing power of the people by $2,000,000,000 a year. The figures are beyond comprehension, but they are not beyond the sense of feeling. When $2,000,000,000 is taken from the wages of the artisans and laborers of this country just that much is taken from the stores in which food, furniture, clothing, and fuel are sold, and from the trades that build houses or that carry goods. When that immense sum is taken out of the stores and offices of the country just that much less in value are the orders given to manufactures, to lumbermen, to coal miners, and to shippers. When the wage list is lowered by 20 per cent times are hard—very hard.

The free traders tell us that when the Wilson bill becomes law things will mend and prosperity will return. Indeed they say that things have already begun to mend, but where or how they do not tell us. There is no sound reason for the belief that the passage of this bill will make times prosperous, and there is certainly no ground for belief that times will be as good under this bill as they were before the stability of the McKinley law was threatened by the election of a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress.

When the wage fund of this country is reduced by $2,000,000,000 a year, affairs can not prosper. Twenty per cent is the sum stated in Dun's Review as the average reduction of wages in such mills and factories as have reopened, after a long season of forced closure, and a 20 per cent reduction all along the line is, as before stated, equal to $2,000,000,000. The reopening of avenues to labor, even at a 20 per cent reduction of wages, may make conditions somewhat better than they now are, but they will leave them worse by the incomprehensible sum of $2,000,000,000 a year than they were before the Democratic party fooled the workingman by promises of "an untaxed dinner pail."

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

No man had a keener prescience and a wider intellectual view than the late Secretary Blaine. Listen to his remarkable words of prophecy uttered before the last Presidential election:

I love my country and my countrymen. I am an American, and I rejoice every day of my life that I am. I enjoy the general prosperity of my country, and I know that the workingmen of this land are the best paid, the best fed, and the best clothed of any laborers on the face of the earth. Many of them have homes of their own. They are surrounded by all the comforts, and many of the luxuries of life. I shudder, however, at the thought that the time must come when all this will be changed; when the general prosperity of the country will be destroyed; when the great body of workingmen in this land, who are now so prosperous, will hear their wives and children cry for bread; that the day must come when the great factories and manufactories of this land will shut down, and where there is now life and activity, there will be the silence of the tomb.

And the reason why this must be is this: The great Southern wing of the Democratic party are determined to establish the doctrine of free trade in this land. They will be assisted by their Northern allies. The fight is now on. There is a great body of visionary but educated men who are employed day by day in writing free-trade essays and arguments in favor of that doctrine, which find their way into every newspaper in this land. The great body of our people have never experienced themselves the sufferings which always result when the protective principles are laid aside. Poisoned and excited by the wild statements of these writers and the demagogic appeals of Democratic speakers, the result will be that in the very near future these forces which are now working will be strong enough to defeat at the polls the party advocating the doctrine of protection.

It must inevitably follow that uncertainty and doubt will ensue. The business men of the country, fearing the destruction of the principle of protection, will decline to engage in business, consequently mills will shut down, and the workingmen will be thrown out of employment. The people will then see what they have never seen before, that they can not be prosperous and have work while this principle is threatened. In the midst of their suffering they will learn that the only way they can be prosperous and happy is to vote for the party that has built up the industries by which they have gained a livelihood: because they will then see clearly that when the manufactory is shut down there is no demand for the only thing which they have to sell, and that is their labor.

The fulfillment of that prophecy is threatened to-day, and it remains with the Senate of the United States to say whether or not it shall be fully consummated.

All through his speech the Senator from Indiana conveyed the idea that the Democratic party is the friend of the laboring man. So, too, the United States minister to Hawaii pretended to be the friend of the President of that unhappy country, while at the same time he was plotting to restore the monarchy. Professions are not enough to satisfy the workingmen of this country—they want works as well as faith; practical demonstrations as well as theoretical assurances.

After vigorously denouncing the manufacturers, the men who risk their capital to give employment to the working classes, the Senator from Indiana spoke as follows:

The farmer, the mechanic, the wage-worker, and the manifold producers of every kind come not here; they have neither time nor money to spare from their busy, overworked lives; they can not visit the lobbies of Congress to argue their side of the case; their careworn, sunburnt faces have never been seen in the purlieus or in the hurried, heated, anxious haunts of unhallowed avarice; their hard, toil-worn hands are not grasped or felt in salutation as we struggle through waylaying crowds from committee room to the door of the Senate; the labor element, on which protected monopoly preys ravenously and unceasingly, is absent from the precincts of this Capitol, and well the millionaire beneficiaries of protection know that their victims on farm, field, and ranch, in workshop, mine, and furnace, on railroads, rivers, and in every toiling pursuit in which bread is honestly earned, can never confront them here and demand a division of time in discussion before the committee. The favorites of fortune, pets of vicious legislation; those to whom the Government has farmed out the power of oppression over others, take no heed of the rights, the protests, the sufferings, or the servitude of the mighty masses who constitute the nation's strength and glory.

Sir, I can not say whether the Senator from Indiana failed to see the delegations of laboring men which actually came to Washington, notwithstanding the committees of both Houses had notified them that they would not be heard. Evidently the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] saw one of those delegations, for he is on record as having told them that he knows more about the tariff than any other living man. I saw several such delegations, and in two instances they had a subscription list showing that the money was raised to defray the expenses by contributions from the operatives in sums of 25 and 50 cents.

Very likely the Senator from Indiana did not see them, as he was usually behind closed doors, conferring with an entirely different class of men. If I mistake not the Senator did see a delegation of working women, but they were received in the Marble Room, and there told that they could not be heard by the committee. No delegations of laboring men or from labor organizations in Washington! Why, Mr. President, if they had not been told by the Finance Committee to stay at home there would have been hundreds of such delegations here. Let the Senator examine the petitions and protests on file in the committee room from laboring men and women all over the country, if he wants to know what they think of this legislation, and in the interests of truth and impartial history I beg of the Senator to seek an early opportunity to correct his misstatements on this point.

NOT ALONE OPPOSED BY REPUBLICANS.

Mr. President, this bill is not alone opposed by Republicans, but is bitterly denounced by leading Democrats and Democratic newspapers in all parts of the country. Why, sir, words have been spoken against it in this Chamber by distinguished Democrats which ought to assure its defeat. Never before did a measure of this kind encounter the bitter hostility of a portion of the party proposing it that this bill has.

NEWSPAPER CRITICISM.

Let us glance at the criticisms of leading newspapers in various sections of the country which supported Mr. Cleveland.

From the day the bill was presented to the House to the present hour the New York Sun has thundered its anathemas against it, recently saying that the charge in the Democratic platform that the McKinley law was "the culminating atrocity of class legislation," should now be applied to the Wilson bill. That great newspaper truly says that it is a bill to make States Republican, and then belabors its party in these words under the significant caption "Licked all along the line:"

The map of the late Democratic reverses reaches from Rhode Island to New Mexico and Utah. A very large part of the territory is Democratic soil taken possession of by the Republican conquerors. In the present condition of Democratic panic and skedaddle, it is hard to point out any safe Democratic ground. Perhaps even Kentucky is Republican to-day. The Populists have been swallowed up in the West. The Democrats have been swallowed up everywhere, including Queens County. For the present the Republicans rule the roost.

What makes the country Republican? Not the hard times merely or principally, but the Democratic failure to relieve the hard times by carrying out the Democratic pledge of a constitutional tariff. This country might have endured patiently the days of disaster if they were to be followed by increased prosperity, but it is natural that the country should kick when the Democracy, having disturbed all branches of industry under the pretense of changing radically the system of Federal taxation, calmly retains the old protective system.

All this trouble for nothing. Why not keep the same tariff and let industry alone, if you were only going to pare and prune the old tariff and the old system? If the Democrats have only the Republican tariff with a Populist addition to offer, what's the use of voting the Democratic ticket? So a large number of Democrats voted the Republican ticket, or else refused to vote at all, for great was their disgust with the Democratic imbecility and double dealing at Washington.

There is no doubt that the majority of Democrats condemn the foreign policy of the Administration. Some of them would have taken the opportunity to vote the Republican ticket as a means of expressing their aversion to that policy.

Do these latest Democratic reverses come early enough to be a means of grace? We are afraid not. We are afraid that nothing can put courage and honesty into the cowards and traitors who in one year have brought the Democracy from sweeping victory to the verge of defeat as sweeping; and that defeat, dishonorable to the intelligence and the moral sense of the party. The great army of Democrats is broken and sullen, chafing at the incapable and traitorous chiefs. How shall it be reorganized? How shall ruinous defeat be averted?

We know of but one way, if there is any. Reorganize the Democratic conscience!

That, Mr. President, is an utterly hopeless task.

Under the title, "Is this the end?" Henry Watterson, the star-eyed apostle of Democracy, discourses in the Louisville Courier-Journal, and urges the representatives of his party in Congress to "have done with cowardice and lying." Listen to him:

It is safe to say that whatever act is finally passed will be infinitely more objectionable than was contemplated by the darkest forebodings of the friends of real reform, and yet, already, we hear it on every hand that, with this measure of Democratic stultification—this finished product of ignorance, cowardice, and corruption—this iniquitous offspring of the blackmailing manufacturer and the political harlot—the whole question must go to the rear, making way for other and more urgent and important issues!

The New York Herald suggests that "It would be better for the country for Congress to adjourn, go home, and let the McKinley law stand." The Herald further says:

The curious compilation reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee seems to be satisfactory to nobody. It has been criticised adversely in all quarters. It is not only denounced by the Republicans, but fails to command even Democratic support.

The Cincinnati Enquirer calls the measure "The Clamor Tariff Bill," and beseeches the Senate to reconstruct the House bill, but on what lines does not advise. The Enquirer says that the House bill "is not a measure grounded on judgment, calmness, and deliberation," and I will venture to add that unfortunately the same criticism will apply to the bill reported by the Senate Committee.

The Brooklyn Eagle makes use of these words:

We would rather have the McKinley law without an income tax than the Wilson tariff bill with one.

The New York World does not like the bill, and comments upon it as follows:

The people of the country should thoughtfully consider what has been going on in the Senate during the last six weeks. A great party's name has been prostituted. Its promises have been treated with contempt. Its urging forward march of victory has been turned backward in a rout. The verdict of the American people as rendered at the polls has been reversed by thronging lobbyists and rapacious Senatorial agents of protected industries. The clock of reform has been set back by the sugared fingers of its pretended friends.

A Democratic voice comes from Ohio in behalf of sheep husbandry. Hear the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

The Plain Dealer has done its best to make the present tariff bill equitable and defensible. It started with the determination to have a bill passed that was in the line of historic Democracy: that is, a bill for revenue with incidental protection. Under that doctrine every industry would be treated alike. The Plain Dealer is in favor of a tariff on wool, just as it is in favor of a tariff on coal, iron or lead ores, or on steel rails and wool manufactures. It considers that injustice to one industry is injustice to all, and that it is a great mistake for the Democratic party to make an exception of wool in the tariff bill. The farmers of this country are a pretty intelligent set of men; they read the papers; they think for themselves, and the Democrats are making a great mistake if they think that the farmers are going to vote against what they believe to be for their own interest. It is for these reasons that we hope the Democrats in Congress will put wool onto the tariff list, and treat it fairly side by side with other great foundation industries.

The Philadelphia Record, a Cleveland independent newspaper, under the heading of "A paralyzed party," uses this language:

The interminable conflict over the tariff bill has disgusted the country and paralyzed the Democratic party, which, if it went to an election now, would secure but a corporal's guard of representatives in Congress. The spectacle of a party which came into power in 1892 with almost unexampled enthusiasm now in the slough of despond because of the selfishness, incapacity, and narrow-mindedness of its leaders in Congress is not flattering to republican government. The party press, which so vigorously championed tariff reform, now importune Congressmen to do anything rather than keep up the suspense.

The Chicago Times declares that:

The bill is a monstrosity, a libel upon Democracy, an insult to the intelligence of the nation. The best thing the real Democrats in the Senate can do is to vote with the Republicans against it.

The Springfield Republican is in the habit of liking pretty much everything that is labeled tariff reform, but it refuses to accept this bill, saying:

After more than four weeks of higgling over the tariff rates, the Democratic majority of the Senate Finance Committee has finally announced its bargain, by which supposedly all members of the party in the upper branch are ready to stand. It is not a good bargain for the country. It is not even a fair bargain. It comes near being a gross sectional steal.

The Providence Journal left the Republican party in 1884, and has been shouting itself hoarse for tariff reform ever since. But it fails to find the genuine article in the Wilson bill, of which it says:

The Democratic Senators in whose charge the Wilson bill was placed have used up more time in mulling over it and tinkering it than was spent in the entire debate in the House that preceded its passage by that body; and during that time, forgetful or rather wilfully ignoring every requirement of their party's platform and the commercial needs of the land, they have given ready ear to all sorts of appeals to timidity and demands of selfishness. The result of it would be the most outrageous violation of the meaning of words to call it a tariff-reform bill.

The last quotation I will give is from the Manchester Union, the leading Democratic newspaper of New Hampshire. It expresses itself in these words:

The majority of the Senate Finance Committee, after devoting more time to the Wilson bill than the House occupied in the discussion of that measure, has given the results of its labors to the public. The changes in the bill are numerous, and for the most part unsatisfactory and uncalled for. The Wilson bill goes to the Senate in much worse shape than it came from the House. The principle of free raw materials has been sacrificed to the clamor of local interests; duties have been still further reduced in lines which affect important industries, and it would seem, in short, that wherever the committee has touched the bill it has been to make a change for the worse rather than for the better. This has been done, too, in the hope of placating a few Democratic Senators who had threatened to withhold their support from the bill unless their own selfish demands should be complied with. It appears, indeed, to have come now to the question whether the whole United States shall be governed by four or five Southern Senators, who, not even representing the whole of the South—in fact but a small minority—have assumed to dictate what shall and what shall not become law.

Mr. President, that is an interesting collection of Democratic opinion on the bill now under consideration. It conclusively shows that the Democratic press of the country is opposed to the enactment of this law, and wants it defeated. The people are against it, the press is against it, and every sound economic argument demands that it shall not be allowed to pass the Senate. The duty of Republican Senators is plain, and the duty of Democratic Senators, especially those from Northern States, ought to be equally clear. Will they be equal to the occasion, or will they give their votes to the passage of this destructive and wicked measure?

CONCLUSION.

Sir, the country has had thirteen months of Democratic rule, and wherever the electors have spoken they have repudiated that party with a unanimity almost unparalleled in American history. The laboring masses of the industrial North have set their seal of condemnation on the Wilson bill. They have issued their mandate to Republican Senators to fight the measure unceasingly and unsparingly. The great North is united to-day as it has not been united since the flag was fired on at Sumter. Now, as in that supreme crisis, mechanic, farmer, merchant, and manufacturer are standing shoulder to shoulder in defense of the welfare and the progress of the nation. Factories are idle, homes comfortless, and wives and children suffering for the necessaries of life.

The wage-earners of the North have decreed the death of the Wilson bill, and woe be to the Northern Senator who turns a deaf ear to their demands. When men stand face to face with the loss of employment, or with wages reduced to a point barely sufficient to give them food and shelter; when they have been compelled to eat the bread and wear the clothes of charity because of the proposed hostile legislation of a political party, they do not stop to ask what ticket they voted last year, but ally themselves with the party that stands for protection, good wages, and for happy and comfortable homes. In this contest I speak but for myself when I say that no effort will be too great, no sacrifice too severe for me to make to help defeat this bill. I believe that every consideration of patriotism, of justice, of respect for the popular will, and of regard for the nation's welfare, demands that it shall be opposed, resisted, and obstructed at every point.

The people demand this: That we shall defend their farms, their workshops, and their homes from the blight of this measure. For one, I am ready to do anything and everything in my power to beat back this assault upon the industries and the labor of the country, and I am hopeful that the Senate of the United States, mindful of its obligations to the people, will refuse to enact into law this wicked and atrocious bill. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] closed his able speech by saying that unless the income-tax feature of the bill is stricken out "God save the Democratic party." I say that if the bill is passed, income tax or no income tax, then God save the industries and the labor of this great country. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, the rapid and substantial growth of the State of Michigan in agriculture, mining, and manufactures has been coincident with the policy of protection. The people of that State very naturally and very justly are decidedly opposed to breaking down by legislation, as proposed in the Wilson bill, the policy under which their State has made such marked progress in everything which goes to make a commonwealth great and its citizens prosperous.

Michigan, when admitted into the Union in 1837, was twenty-sixth in population; in 1890 it ranked ninth; and the advance in material wealth, in educational facilities, and in charitable institutions has been even greater. From her mines have come riches almost beyond computation, and these treasures have been enjoyed as well by the people of other States, who furnished the capital to develop them or the labor to convert them to the uses of civilization. Her public-school system has been the model for the States which came after her.

In her great university last year 1,200 young men and women from other States and from fourteen foreign countries received instruction which cost the State over twice the amount of tuition fees. Her charitable and penal institutions have often been pioneers of their kind. All these establishments, with plants valued at nearly $8,000,000 in the aggregate, have been built up and maintained by public taxation, and yet the State is free of debt.

To support them in the future, the State must continue to be prosperous, and her people must continue to have the opportunities for profitable employment. It is because the Wilson bill strikes at every one of the great products of our State that the large majority of the people of Michigan, without distinction of party, are opposed to that measure. This overwhelming sentiment for the maintenance of the protective policy is no new thing with the people of Michigan. From the day the State was admitted into the Union, the vote of the Michigan members of of the House of Representatives has been given for protection, unanimously in a majority of instances, and very nearly so in others. In the Fifty-first Congress no Michigan vote is recorded against the McKinley bill.

IRON ORE.

It was not until the stress and strain of war threw this country upon its own resources that Michigan began to give up the raw material of industrial progress. The mining region of the upper peninsula, thrust upon the unwilling State by Congress, for years was an inaccessible wilderness. It was not until 1844 that the Government surveyors accidentally discovered indications of rich deposits of iron ore, and twelve years elapsed before shipments began. So late as 1861 the three iron mines of the Lake Superior country sent out in the aggregate only 100 tons.

In 1892 these shipments reached the astounding total of 9,000,000 tons, 7,267,874 tons coming from the Michigan mines. Enormous as is this production, the capacity of the upper peninsula is many times greater than has yet been demonstrated. Mr. J. M. Longyear, one of the most experienced men connected with the development of the iron country, states that—

The greater part of the peninsula is still a wilderness, and there are many miles of iron ore indications yet untouched by miners or explorers. Many of these indications are fully as good as those first found on the older ranges.

The iron-ore business of the peninsula multiplied over seven times in the eighteen years between 1873 and 1890, and it is safe to say that it may be still multiplied seven times before the limit of the productive capacity has been reached. And when the time comes that new processes shall enable the working of the lean ores, Michigan will be able to supply billions of tons of ores now neglected by the miner.

Until the advent of the Wilson bill the mines of Michigan, taken as a whole, continued their production alike through times of prosperity and years of stagnation in general business; and notwithstanding the fact that thousands of workmen, embracing all nationalities, have been employed, no general strike and none of long duration has occurred. Industrious miners have been able to provide well for themselves and their families; they are well fed, well housed, and well clothed; they have good schools, and it is no rare thing for men who began life as common laborers in the mines to attain wealth and political and business influence.

THE EFFECTS OF THE WILSON BILL.

The effect on the iron regions made by the Wilson bill is well summed up in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, by Mr. R. P. Tutten, of Iron Mountain, Mich. He says:

We have five mines within the limits of this city capable of producing 1,500,000 tons of iron ore annually and employing about 3,500 men. For the past nine months all these miners have been idle; but now (March 3) the Pewabic is employing 300 men—less than half its regular force—at a reduction of 50 per cent in wages. Three thousand persons in this city of less than 10,000 people have been dependent on charity during the past three months for their daily bread.

Briefly stated, this is the present condition of things. As to future prospects: bessemer ore has recently sold in Cleveland for $2.75 per ton—90 cents cheaper than ever before known. The men who produce the ore are receiving from 70 cents to $1 per day, and even at these very low wages only mines favored with exceptional facilities as to location, quality of ore, and easy conditions of mining can hope to do business. With iron ore on the free list it is extremely doubtful if half the mines of the Lake Superior district can resume work.

The question as to whether there shall be an adequate duty on iron ore is far from being a sentimental one in Michigan. Such a duty is the only barrier that stands between the miner and starvation. In a memorial addressed to the United States Senate by the citizens of Bessemer, Mich., regardless of party affiliations, (Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 8, Fifty-third Congress, second session) it is stated that during the year 1892 6,000 men were employed in iron mining in the single county of Gogebic. Their average monthly wage earning power was from $350,000 to $400,000. In addition 1,000 men found work in the lumber operations connected with the mines.

The threatened act on of Congress in regard to the tariff closed every mine in the Lake Superior country. The expenditures in Gogebic County for poor purposes increased from less than $10,000 in 1892, to over $25,000 in the first eight months of 1893, leaving out of the account the hard winter months. The poor fund was exhausted, the county treasury was emptied, poor orders anticipating the future were issued only to become valueless, because it was a problem whether there would ever be a future for the county.

In this extremity the people of Gogebic County drew up a statement as to the actual cost of a ton of iron ore. Starting with the value of iron ore in the ground at 35 cents a ton, it was found that the whole cost of a ton of ore delivered at a Lake Erie port was $3.96. This does not include the cost of superintendence or interest on the capital invested. Yet under pressure to realize, ore has been selling at $2.75 a ton in Cleveland!

PROTEST OF THE PEOPLE OF BESSEMER, MICHIGAN.

Is it any wonder that under the stress of such circumstances the citizens of Bessemer, on November 25, 1893, unanimously adopted a memorial to Congress, drafted by an equal number of Democrats and Republicans, asking "in the name of common humanity, in the name of our desolated homes, and suffering poor, that this nation be not committed to a policy that must prove destructive alike to its industries and to the prosperity of its people."

The intelligent, progressive Lake Superior miner, who has been receiving good wages and has been able to surround himself with opportunities for mental improvement, is to be called to compete with the underpaid and ignorant labor of Spain and Cuba.

The great Bilboa district in Spain is sensitive to the slightest increase in the demand for iron ore. Only so lately as 1885 the output of the Spanish mines was a million tons greater than that of the entire Lake Superior district, and in the nine years, from 1877 to 1885, inclusive, there was only one year when the Bilboa district did not show a greater output than did the Lake Superior region. It is true that in 1890 the product of our mines was double that of the Spanish; but under either free ore or a low tariff we may expect to see these figures reversed.

The Michigan ores, with a 75 cent tariff, have a small advantage over Cuban ores when laid down in Pittsburg. This after a water carriage of 1,200 miles, which is about the distance from Cuba to New York. The hard specular and magnetic ore from Cuba has already invaded the Pittsburg market, closing at least one Lake Superior mine.

For years the price of iron ore has been declining, profits have been getting less and less, the mines have required more and more expensive machinery. The pertinent question forced by the Wilson bill is as to what reduction of wages will be necessary to enable the Lake Superior mines to compete with foreign ore which, on a free-ore basis, with wages at the normal rates, will drive Lake Superior ore out of every market east of Cincinnati.

If the progress of this country in the manufacture of iron and steel had been prevented by duties on iron ore, then there might be some excuse for reducing or removing those duties; but when the policy of protection has been the means of making this country the greatest producer of iron and steel on the face of the globe, there is neither statesmanship nor common sense in making the destructive change contemplated in the Wilson bill.

COPPER.

Fostered by a protective tariff, the copper mines of Michigan have been developed to a point where this country has become a large exporter of that metal. It is worthy of record, how-over, that the great Calumet and Hecla mine, famous the world over not only for the vastness of its product, but also for the intelligence and prosperity of its employés, was not discovered until 1863; and that previous to this date copper mining depended on chance rather than on science. In time the iron mines of Lake Superior will unquestionably outgrow the necessity of protection: but that day has not yet dawned, and should the Wilson bill become a law such a consummation must long be postponed.

THE VESSEL INTEREST.

Another, and a mighty interest, is threatened by the abolition or the serious reduction of the duties on iron ore. The lake vessel interest now represents a capital of over $69,000,000. The capital invested in iron-ore docks on Lakes Superior and Michigan is nearly $11,000,000; and on Lake Erie there is upwards of $12,000,000 more. The capital required for the rail transportation of iron ore alone from the mines to the shipping ports is $32,000,000, and from the receiving ports to the mills and furnaces, $26,000,000.

Since the Wilson bill first cast its shadow on the iron industry over $200,000,000 of capital, including the money actually invested in mining plant, has been unproductive, and 17,000 men have been thrown out of work. Shipbuilding has virtually come to a standstill, and the loss to the vessel interests alone was upwards of $1,600,000 last year.

The people of Michigan are opposed to any fiscal policy which will endanger appropriations for river and harbor improvements. The Peninsular State, with its 2,000 miles of coast line, includes within its boundaries the great water ways by which many of the staple products of this country reach their markets, and these water ways the State holds as a trustee for the nation. By improvements begun and carried beyond the point of success under State direction freight rates between the East and the West are regulated and are being constantly cheapened.

The Portage and the St. Marys Canals; the locks at Sault Ste. Marie, surpassing in size any others in the world; the Hay Lake and the Twenty-Foot Channels the St. Clair Flats Canal, and the Lime Kiln Crossing, all are within the State of Michigan. Mr. William A. Livingstone, of Detroit, has shown that up to 1891 the total cost of all the river and harbor improvements on the Great Lakes was about $20,000,000, and that the saving in freight rates by water carriage when compared with the rates that were charged by the railways amounted in 1890 to $147,000,000, or over five times the entire cost of the lake improvements.

Two hundred and sixty freight trains a day would have been required to handle the freight carried by lake vessels during the season of navigation in 1891.

The policy of internal improvements has had its most signal success on the Great Lakes, where there has been provided a means of transportation costing in 1890 only one-ninth the cost of the same service by rail, and bringing the farmers of Minnesota in closer proximity to New York than is the farmer of Southern Ohio.

The manufactures of the east are carried 1,000 miles west at a less expense than the same goods can be shipped 250 miles north or south; and there has been called into being a steam tonnage that in 1890 was increased by 40 per cent more than was the steam tonnage of the entire seaboard. Great as these achievements are, and beneficial as they have been to both the producer and the consumer, the triumphs of the future must far exceed those of the past, provided we here and now repudiate the policy and defeat the bill which aims to produce not a surplus, but a deficit.

FREE LUMBER BENEFITS CANADA ONLY.

Doubtless the framers of the Wilson bill thought that by placing lumber on the free list they would benefit the farmer and the workingman. An examination of the prices of lumber as given in the report of the Senate Finance Committee shows that in spite of successive reductions in duties, and also in spite of free logs, the price of lumber has steadily advanced. In so far as Michigan is concerned, free lumber simply means that the Canadian logs which have been rafted across the lakes to be cut will hereafter be manufactured in Canada, with a corresponding benefit to Canadian labor and detriment to American labor.

The value of Canadian timber limits will be increased, and the price of the product will continue to be held up by means of combinations easily formed, because of the great capital required for lumbering operations. Michigan has made the record of having manufactured enough lumber in the single year 1881 to house comfortably a million people, or to load a train 2,470 miles in length; and the product for 1892 (3,794,256,754 feet) was but a little more than 100,000,000 feet below that of 1881. Two-thirds of the lumber now manufactured in the Saginaw Valley is cut from Canadian logs, and free lumber will result in the transfer of the mills to the Canadian side of Lake Huron.

Instead of cheapening lumber, therefore, the Wilson bill will simply lessen the demand for American labor, to the advantage of our neighbors across the border. And just here it may be noted that free staves means simply that Ontario will hereafter be called on to supply to the sugar refiners of New York the barrels which have hitherto come from Michigan. Canada with her cheaper labor and shorter carriage will be able to undersell the Michigan stave manufacturers, whose business is conducted, as a rule, in inland towns, and whose timber comes from the farmers. Thus the lumber schedule so fair on its face, becomes simply another method for reducing the demand for labor without a corresponding diminution of prices.

FREE SALT.

Closely allied to the lumber interest is the salt industry. From the days when Great Britain held possession of the lake country salt was known to exist in Michigan; but it was not until a century later that the manufacture of that article was begun in the State. After ten years of discouragement and financial disaster, in 1870 the manufacture of salt in the Saginaw Valley became a financial success. The State bent all her legislative energies to bring about this result, and the salt manufacturers voluntarily taxed themselves to cover the expenses of State inspection.

Michigan produces about one-half of all the salt manufactured in this country, and her salt works have a capacity equal to two-thirds of the American product. In order to obtain any profit the manufacture must be conducted in connection with the lumber mills, using for fuel the refuse from the logs, and of late years only the salt blocks operated under the most favorable conditions have been profitable.

The history of salt prices shows that since 1872, when duties were reduced to the present rate of 8 cents a hundred pounds in bulk and 12 cents a hundred pounds in packages, the importations have decreased by 50 per cent, and the price has dropped from $1.46 a barrel to 53 cents, including the cost of the package, worth from 20 to 25 cents. With the transfer of the lumber mills to Canada the manufacture of salt will follow, for the salt deposits of Canada are as rich as those of the United States, and England, which now controls the trade on the Atlantic coast, will extend her markets inland, to the detriment of the producers and workers of New York and Michigan.

THE WOOL INDUSTRY.

Other Senators, and notably the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], have given exhaustive attention to the subject of the duty on wool, and I need only allude to it briefly. Michigan, in 1889, was the fourth State in the Union in the production of wool, being surpassed by Ohio, California, and Texas. Since the census was taken I believe that Montana has come in ahead of our State. The Michigan farmer comes into competition with the Australian sheep-raiser, who uses Government lands fenced by the Government; whose sheep require no herding, and whose only cost of production is the labor of shearing and marketing,

More than one-half the wool now consumed in this country is imported either in the form of wool or woolen goods. The increase in the world's production of wool between 1860 and 1885, both years inclusive, was over 100 per cent; and it has been the experience of the Australian producer that in 1887 his product brought scarcely more than was paid for half the quantity in 1872.

The increase in the production of foreign wools, and the comparative difference in transportation in favor of the foreign producer who reaches his markets by water, have placed the American farmer at a disadvantage, even with a rate of duty that is seemingly high. To admit wool free could only result in such a decline in the American production as would practically ruin wool-raising as an industry; and with the decrease in the number of sheep would come a corresponding decrease in the demand for pasturage, hay, and oats, thus increasing the present depression in agricultural pursuits.

AN UNDERSTANDING WITH THE CANADIAN ADMINISTRATION.

A comparison between the Wilson bill as it comes from the House and the new Canadian tariff shows how close an understanding must have existed between the framers of the two measures. In each bill lumber, buckwheat, rye and rye flour, and corn are put on the free list when imported from any country which admits these articles free of duty.

Canada offers to place apples, beans, peas, potatoes, hay, vegetables, and barley on her free list, wherever any other countries do the same; and the Wilson bill places apples and peas on the free list absolutely. Eggs and salt are made free in both countries, and the United States offers Canada free oats, oatmeal, wheat, and wheat flour in exchange for like favors. Ores of metals are on both free lists, and so is wool.

It is interesting to note that the party in this country which is offering these concessions to Canada is the party which has denounced the policy of protection as unconstitutional and which is now theoretically engaged in making a tariff for revenue only. On the other hand, the party in Canada which is meeting the American free trader half way is avowedly the party of high protection and is still engaged in building up what is known in Canada as the national policy, the one object of which is to make that country independent of the United States.

The Canadians have made no mistake. They admit free of duties only those commodities in the production of which they have so much the advantage of us as to prevent us from entering their markets. They secure from us unlimited markets for their surplus products. For these favors they give no concessions in their tariff on manufactured articles, but still maintain their duties at the prohibitive point, and they even go so far as to place a bounty of $2 a ton on pig iron.

For the past fifteen years Canada has been pursuing the policy of shutting the American farmer and manufacturer out of her markets. How successful she was is told by her minister of finance in his speech on presenting the new tariff measure. In 1878, says Mr. Foster, the people of the United States found in Canada a market for agricultural products and animals and their produce to the value of over $16,000,000; in 1893 the entire imports into Canada of such products amounted to less than $3,000,000.

Again, in 1877 Canada imported, mainly from this country, $13,855,079 worth of flour and grain, including peas. In 1893 these importations had been cut down to $1,339,429. Only so recently as 1889-'90 the Canadians took from us $1,734,225 worth of bacon, hams and shoulders; last year the amount so imported was but $452,312 in value.

Not only has Canada shut our farmers out of her markets; she has also appeared as our competitor in the markets of Europe. More than this, she has entered our own markets, and in spite of the duties, has firmly established her trade in competition with the American farmer in the marts of the United States.

In 1893 Canada exported horses valued at $1,461,000, of which amount the value of those sent to this country was $1,123,000; of $146,000 worth of swine exported we took $133,000 worth; of $1,247,000 worth of sheep our share was $1,088,000; of $336,000 worth of wood for wood pulp we took all but $15,000 worth; out of a total of $9,640,000 worth of planks and boards exported $8,313,000 in value came to the United States; Canada sent us $554,000 worth of staves and sent $47,000 to the rest of the world; and we took $734,000 worth of shingles, or within $15,000 worth of the entire export.

From Canada we bought last year $324,000 worth of eggs; $52,000 worth of poultry; $246,000 worth of wheat; $151,000 worth of oatmeal; $854,000 worth of hay; $78,000 worth of clover and grass seed; $259,000 worth of potatoes; $422,000 worth of peas, and $228,000 worth of wool. The American farmer is now suffering from oversupply of his products in the markets of the world; and yet the Wilson bill proposes entirely to break down the barriers which have to some extent preserved to our own people their home markets.

CANADIAN CHEAP LAND AND LABOR.

The Canadian farmer has a double advantage over his neighbor across the border. First, his land is worth much less than is the land of his competitor; and, secondly, he pays his labor at least 35 per cent less than American labor is paid. Mr. Joseph Nimmo, jr., in answer to questions propounded by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, has discussed very carefully the question of the comparative costs of production in this country and in the Dominion; and the information on which he based his conclusions, gathered from abundant sources, was well sifted.

He reached this result: In order to allow the New York farmer to compete successfully with the Ontario farmer, the average rate of duty on Canadian farm products would have to amount at least to 44 per cent, of which 12 per cent represents difference in the value of lands, and 32 per cent represents the excess labor costs in New York. The figures for Michigan would be about the same; certainly there would not be a smaller discrepancy.

How cheering, therefore, is the message which the Wilson bill brings to the Michigan farmer, who is asked to give his Canadian competitor free access to the markets of Detroit, Chicago, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, or at best to allow a considerable reduction of the now inadequate duties.

Those persons who have not given careful attention to the location of Canada with relation to this country, fail to appreciate the importance of the competition on the part of the Dominion. The natural course of Canadian trade is southward.

The maritime provinces are cut off from the remainder of the Dominion by the State of Maine, which extends 100 miles north of Quebec. New England, with a population about equal to that of all Canada, could easily find a market for all the products of the maritime provinces, such as lumber, coal, gypsum, grindstones, and fish, and in the light of experience it is safe to say that should the Wilson bill become a law the imports from those provinces will be more than doubled.

Toronto is only 450 miles from New York City, but by Canadian lines it is over a thousand miles from Halifax, the only Canadian port that is open all the year. The distance from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Boston and Portland, Me., by way of the Canadian roads is about the same as to New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia. Even now the grain, wool, and other products of Michigan find their way by rail to Eastern markets across the Province of Ontario, and the roads which bring the goods of the East to our merchants traverse Canadian territory.

The wheat lands of Manitoba, separated from Ontario by a thousand miles of inhospitable country, find a natural outlet at St. Paul and Minneapolis; and British Columbia is naturally tributary to Portland, Oregon, and to San Francisco. To give these Canadian provinces a free or practically free and convenient market for their products, while obtaining nothing in return, is not statesmanship, to say the least.

AN ATTEMPT TO REVIVE THE DISCARDED RECIPROCITY TREATY.

We are not left to guesswork, nor yet to the figures of Treasury experts, to find how the Wilson bill would affect the trade relations between this country and Canada. The Wilson bill is a virtual attempt to obtain by coordinate legislation in the two countries, the revival of the provisions of the reciprocity treaty of 1854. In so far as the pending measure deals with Canada, it is open to all the objections which led to the abrogation of that treaty.

More than this, the settled and avowed policy of Canada now being to build up her own manufactures by shutting out those of other nations, there is at this time no such excuse for opening our markets to Canada's natural products as there was in 1854, when that country imposed but nominal duties on manufactures. The results of the reciprocity treaty, however, should be sufficient warning against any endeavor to revive it.

The leading feature of the treaty negotiated by Secretary Marcy and Lord Elgin was, that the natural products of the United States and Canada should be admitted to each country, respectively, free of duty. At the time the treaty took effect (September 11, 1854) Canadian duties on manufactured articles varied from 5 to 12½ per cent. Within three years Canada had placed duties of from 62½ to 100 per cent on our leading manufactures.

The effect of these increases was to cut down our exports to that country from over $20,000,000 in 1856 to less than $13,000,000 in 1863. Of the $239,000,000 worth of Canadian products which entered the United States during the continuance of the treaty, 94 per cent came in free, while but 58 per cent of the American products sold to Canada crossed the border without paying heavy tribute.

During the twelve years, while the treaty was in force, the entire sales of the people of this country to our Canadian neighbors—free and dutiable goods, domestic products, and foreign products reexported to Canada—aggregated less by $26,000,000 than the free goods which the Canadians were enabled by the treaty to sell to the United States.

In the ten years from 1851 to 1861 Canada nearly doubled both the amount and the value of her improved land; her wheat crop increased 78 per cent, and her oat crop 91 per cent; her timber advanced more than 50 per cent in value, and her exports of lumber were more than doubled.

Unquestionably the treaty was a decided benefit to Canada, and had that country shown the least disposition to extend the reciprocity provisions of the treaty to manufactures in addition to natural products, that treaty would before this have brought about the entire abolition of duties between the two countries, to the mutual advantage of both.

As is was, the Chicago Board of Trade called for a more free and liberal treaty; the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce passed resolutions in favor of actual reciprocity, instead of the kind brought about by the then existing treaty; the Detroit Board of Trade, finding that American manufactures were practically shut out of Canada, while Canadian wheat competed on equal terms with that of Michigan in the markets of New England, favored either a broader treaty or none at all; Oswego declared in favor of a customs union. Canada, however, gave no heed to these requests, and on March 17, 1867, the treaty was terminated at the instance of this Government. Since that time the trade relations between the two countries have been most unsatisfactory.

BENEFITS OF POLITICAL UNION.

The question asked a few days ago by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is a pertinent one. How, he inquired, would commercial union benefit the farmers of the United States? His question is itself an argument against the Wilson bill, since it involves the admission that the Wilson bill does harm the American farmer by reason of allowing the Canadian products to come into this country free of duty.

Political union would give to the State of Michigan at least one-third more territory in which to sell manufactures, and this building up of manufactures would in itself create a greater market for agricultural produce. The city of Detroit stretches for 8 miles along the river, and 4 miles from the center of the city land is worth $3,000 an acre for manufacturing purposes, while Canadian land across the three-quarters of a mile of water is worth less than $300 an acre. Political union would change all this, building up on both sides of the strait the commercial facilities which proximity to navigable water brings about.

It is absurd that a stream which forms the highway of a commerce equal in tonnage to that entering the ports of London and Liverpool combined should form a commercial barrier between the United States and Canada greater than the Rocky Mountains ever formed between the Pacific coast and the remainder of the country. The manufactures of Detroit, representing a capital of over $45,000,000, and paying annual wages in excess of $18,000,000, are shut out of a territory to which nature has furnished the easiest possible access; but to the products of Canada the doors are to be opened!

It is too much the custom in this country to belittle the resources and capabilities of our vigorous and enterprising neighbor on the north. Canada is nearly as large as all of Europe, and contains more than one-half the fresh waters of the globe, with thousands of miles of coast lines. Her wheat area for the highest grades of grain is nearly four times as large as that of the United States. Her inexhaustible fisheries, her wealth of timber, the coal of Nova Scotia, and the immense deposits of iron ore in Ontario and Quebec, all await only the free markets of this country for their development.

Those markets the Wilson bill proposes to open; and none are more surprised at the offer than are the Unionists of Canada. Mr. Elgin Meyers, Q. C., of Toronto, in an address delivered before the Michigan Club, on May 24, 1893, said:

Reform politicians are now telling the people of Canada that there is, with the present Cleveland Administration, a chance of destroying the tariff wall that separates Canada from the United States. Well—if you are willing to give Canadians all the benefits of the American continent without their assuming any of its responsibilities, it will be another indication that you are a great-hearted people; and no one would rejoice if prosperity should follow more than the Unionists of Canada; but it would postpone union for some time.

In the short and sharp political battle that was fought in Canada in 1890, the Tories took their stand for reciprocity with the United States, limited to the natural products of both countries. The Liberals were beaten only by a narrow majority on the issue that the custom-houses along the border from the Atlantic to the Pacific be abolished, and that a uniform tariff be made for both countries.

It is political, not commercial, union that promises the greatest advantage to both countries; for the American lives only under his own flag, and until it leads the way across the border, Canada, with all her undeveloped wealth, has no charms for him. But political union would dot Canada with American cities, enlarging our markets and augmenting the opportunities for employment.

THE ULTIMATE DESTINY OF CANADA.

On two occasions the best portion of Canada was almost in the grasp of the United States. In 1779 the Congress sent to our minister to France an ultimatum that the new boundaries of this country should be run so as to bring the present Province of Ontario within our limits. Again, in 1812, nothing but astounding cowardice on the part of Gen. Hull prevented the conquest of that country, whose inhabitants were not unwilling to become American citizens. Some day the failures of diplomacy and the blunders of war will be retrieved.

No American can doubt that the ultimate destiny of Canada is to become a part of the United States. That day will be a welcome one to the people of Michigan, who are now hemmed in on the east by a territory with which there are no fair exchanges. To the people of the Dominion, also, a union with the United States would be advantageous in the highest degree. They would awake to find themselves wealthy and prosperous beyond all present possibilities.

To the dreamers of a great northern empire, the lovers of political power for its own sake, to the Tory party of Canada, annexation means annihilation. To them in their extremity the Wilson bill comes—as it comes to every foreign nation—bringing joy in the prospect of larger markets and greater profits, while to our own people its portion is smaller wages and restricted activities.

Our civilization has reached the point at which that man may be counted happy who is sure of steady employment and adequate pay. The exceptionally strong will make their own way to the front; but society estimates its distance from the brute creation by the measure of its success in overcoming the law of the survival of the fittest. It may be a question as to how far this Government or any government should go in legislating to furnish work for its citizens; but there should be no question that to close up the avenues of employment already created is vicious legislation.

Thirty years of hard labor has made Michigan the leader among the States in the production of iron ore, lumber, and salt; for ten years her yield per acre of wheat, oats, corn, barley, buckwheat, and hay has been unsurpassed; in the production of wool she stands fourth, and in vessel tonnage she is surpassed only by New York State, with her combined ocean and lake traffic. Each and every one of these industries—with others equally important although perhaps less conspicuous—is threatened by the Wilson bill. As the result of a popular wave that has already receded the people of Michigan are to be left stranded amid the wreck of their industries. Is it strange then that from every part of the State, and from Democrats as well as Republicans, comes the demand to defeat the Wilson bill.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have agreed, with the consent of the Senate, to yield the floor to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH addressed the Senate. After having spoken thirty-five minutes,

Mr. QUAY (at 5 o'clock p. m.). Mr. President——

Mr. DOLPH. I will be through on this point in a moment.

Mr. QUAY. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to conclude it this evening?

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to finish my statement of the census figures.

Mr. CULLOM. It is 5 o'clock.

Mr. DOLPH. Very well; I will yield at this time and retain the floor for to-morrow.

[Mr. DOLPH'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. GRAY. I desire to give notice of a motion to amend the rules of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

I hereby give notice that I shall move to amend the standing rules of the Senate, by adding as an additional paragraph to Rule XIX the following:

"4. No Senator shall read a speech, nor shall he read from any book or paper except it may be to quote an authority or illustrate a point or argument which he is making, without unanimous consent."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment of the rules will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6055) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River in the city of Pittsburg, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fourteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 21, 1894, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 20, 1894.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Cavalry arm.

First Lieut. James Lockett, adjutant Fourth Cavalry, to be captain, April 14, 1891, vice Wood, Fourth Cavalry, deceased.

Second Lieut. Thomas H. Slavens, Fourth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, April 15, 1894, vice Hodgson, Sixth Cavalry, appointed assistant quartermaster.

To rank from February 27, 1890:

To be brigadier-general by brevet.

Maj. Edwin C. Mason, Twenty-first Infantry, brevet colonel United States Army (now colonel Third Infantry), for gallant and meritorious service in action against Indians in the Lava Beds, California, April 17, 1873, and for gallant service in action against Indians at the Clearwater, Idaho, July 11 and 12, 1877.

Lieut. Col. William B. Royal, Third Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army (now colonel retired), for gallant service in action against Indians on Rosebud Creek, Montana, on June 17, 1876.

Capt. Guy V. Henry, Third Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel Seventh Cavalry), for gallant and meritorious service in action against Indians on Rosebud Creek, Montana, June 17, 1876, where he was severely wounded.

Maj. Andrew W. Evans, Third Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel retired), for gallant service in action against Indians at Big Dry Wash, Arizona, July 17, 1882.

Maj. John Green, First Cavalry, brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel retired), for gallant service in action against Indians in the Lava Beds, California, January 17, 1873, and for conspicuous gallantry in the several actions during the Modoc war.

Maj. Lewis Merrill, Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel retired) for gallant service in action against Indians at Canon Creek, Montana, September 13, 1877.

Capt. Frederick W. Benteen, Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army (now major retired), for gallant service in action against Indians on the Little Big Horn, Montana, June 25 and 26, 1876, and in action against Indians at Canon Creek, Montana, September 13, 1877.

To be colonel by brevet.

Maj. Charles E. Compton, Sixth Cavalry, brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army (now colonel Fourth Cavalry), for distinguished service in leading a cavalry battalion in a gallant and successful charge in action against Indians on the Red River, Texas, August 30, 1874.

Capt. Anson Mills, Third Cavalry, brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army (now colonel Third Cavalry), for gallant service in action against Indians at Slim Buttes, Dakota, September 9, 1876.

Maj. John Green, First Cavalry, brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army (now lieutenant colonel retired), for gallant service in action against Indians at Mount Turnbull, Arizona, April 30, 1869.

Capt. Marcus P. Miller, Fourth Artillery, brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army (now major Fifth Artillery), for gallant and meritorious service in action against Indians in the Lava Beds, California, April 17, 1873, and for special gallantry and military ability in action against Indians at the Clearwater, Idaho, July 11 and 12, 1877.

Capt. George M. Randall, Twenty-third Infantry, brevet major United States Army (now major Fourth Infantry), for gallant service in action against Indians near Pinal, Ariz., March 8, 1874, and for distinguished services during the campaign against Indians in Arizona in 1874.

To be lieutenant-colonel by brevet.

Maj. George M. Sternberg, surgeon (now brigadier-general, Surgeon-General), for gallant service in the performance of his professional duty under fire, in action against Indians, at the Clearwater, Idaho, July 12, 1877.

Capt. David S. Gordon, Second Cavalry, brevet major, United States Army (now colonel Sixth Cavalry), for gallant service in action against Indians at Miner's Delight, Wyoming, May 4, 1870.

Capt. George M. Brayton, Eighth Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now colonel retired), for gallant service in actions against Indians in Arizona, June 25, 1875, July 4, 1875, January 10, 1877, January 21, 1877, and January 30, 1877.

Capt. James S. Casey, Fifth Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now lieutenant colonel First Infantry), for conspicuous gallantry in leading his command in a successful charge against a superior number of Indians, strongly posted, at Wolf Mountain, Montana, January 8, 1877.

Capt. Richard Comba, Seventh Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now lieutenant colonel Twelfth Infantry), for gallant service in actions against Indians at the Big Hole, Montana, August 9, 1877.

Capt. John M. Bacon, Ninth Cavalry, brevet major United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel First Cavalry), for gallant service in the actions against Indians on the Rio Pecos, Texas, June 7, 1869, and near the headwaters of the Salt Fork of the Brazos River, Texas, October 28 and 29, 1869.

Capt. Curwen B. McLellan, Sixth Cavalry, brevet major, United States Army (now lieutenant-colonel retired), for gallant service in action against Indians in the San Andreas Mountains, New Mexico, April 7, 1880, and in action against Indians near Red River, Indian Territory, August 30, 1874.

Capt. George M. Randall, Twenty-third Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now major Fourth Infantry), for gallant service in actions against Indians at Turret Mountain, Arizona, March 27, 1873, and at Diamond Butte, Arizona, April 22, 1873.

Capt. John A. Kress, Ordnance Department, brevet major United States Army (now major Ordnance Department), for gallant service in action against Indians on the Columbia River, Oregon, July 8, 1878.

Capt. Adna R. Chaffee, Sixth Cavalry, brevet major United States Army (now major Ninth Cavalry), for gallant service in leading a cavalry charge over rough and precipitous bluffs held by Indians on the Red River, Texas, August 30, 1874, and for gallant service in action against Indians at the Big Dry Wash, Arizona, July 17, 1882.

Capt. James Jackson, First Cavalry, brevet major United States Army (now major Second Cavalry), for gallant and meritorious service in action against Indians during the Modoc war, especially in the action on Lost River, Oregon, November 29, 1872, and for gallant service in action against Indians at the Clearwater, Idaho, July 12, 1877.

Capt. Wirt Davis, Fourth Cavalry, brevet major United States Army (now major Fifth Cavalry) for gallant service in action against Indians on the North Fork of Red River, Texas, September 29, 1872, and in action against Indians in the Big Horn Mountains, Montana, November 25, 1876.

First Lieut. John B. Babcock, Fifth Cavalry, brevet major United States Army (now major and assistant adjutant-general), for gallant service in actions against Indians at Tonto Creek, Arizona, June 16, 1873, and at Four Peaks, Arizona, January 16, 1874.

Maj. Alfred E. Latimer, Fourth Cavalry (now major retired), for gallant service in action against Indians on the North Fork of Red River, Texas, September 29, 1872.

Capt. Tullius C. Tupper, Sixth Cavalry, brevet major, United States Army (now major retired), for gallant service in successfully leading a cavalry charge against Indians in the action on Red River, Texas, August 30, 1874, and for gallant service in action against Indians at the Las Animas Mountains, New Mexico, April 28, 1882.

Capt. Wyllys Lyman, Fifth Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now major retired), for gallant service in the actions against Indians on the Upper Washita River, Texas, September 9, 10, and 11, 1874.

Capt. James M. Bell, Seventh Cavalry, brevet major, United States Army, for gallant service in action against Indians at Canon Creek, Montana, September 13, 1877.

First Lieut. Allan H. Jackson, Seventh Infantry, brevet major, United States Army (now captain, Seventh Infantry), for gallant service in action against Indians at the Big Hole, Montana, August 9, 1877.

First Lieut. Charles C. Cresson, First Cavalry, brevet major, United States Army (now first lieutenant, retired), for gallant and meritorious service in action against Indians at the Lava Beds, California, April 17, 1873, and for gallant service in action against Indians at Camas Meadows, Idaho, August 20, 1877.

To be major by brevet.

Capt. Henry C. Hasbrouck, Fourth Artillery (now major Fourth Artillery), for gallant service in action against Indians at Serass Lake, California, May 10, 1873.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1860) to authorize Prof. Asaph Hall, of the United States Navy, to accept a gold medal from the Academy of Science of France; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and Senate joint resolution (S. R. 74) for the proper enrollment of Thomas R. Proctor in the Navy of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MERCER obtained leave of absence for Friday evening session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration——

Mr. BURROWS. Before that is done, the gentleman will yield to me a moment.

The day before yesterday I called the attention of the House to what I conceived to be a violation of the rules of the House and its uniform practice on the part of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. It was then laid over, on account of his absence. I was hoping yesterday that he would so explain the matter to the House that it would be satisfactory and no further action would be necessary. I notice the gentleman is in his seat this morning, and possibly he can give such explanation as will be satisfactory to the House and will require no further action.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, there is no member of this House who has a higher appreciation than myself for the importance of observing and exacting the strictest compliance with every rule of this body and every rule of parliamentary law. During a momentary absence from my seat on Wednesday morning I learn that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] seized an opportunity to criticise what he chose to term an infraction of the rules of the House, and it was not until his attention was publicly called to the fact that I was not in my seat that the gentleman announced he would delay proceedings until my arrival. I was in my seat during a great part of the day, of which fact the gentleman was well aware, but he failed to renew the attack.

I again hoped he would bring the matter up yesterday morning. I was in my seat ready for it, and the gentleman did not do so.

I will begin by saying that it comes with very bad grace from a gentleman who for six weeks has been leading a revolution——

Mr. REED. A successful one.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama (continuing). Yes, a revolution against the rules of this House, with his hands, I might say, if it were parliamentary, red with the blood of murdered parliamentary rules and parliamentary procedure. [Laughter and applause.] I am not surprised that the gentleman is unable to deny that the course pursued by him and his colleagues was revolutionary.

It ill becomes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to criticise any member of this House for an infraction of its rules. Most certainly it does not become him when the infraction complained of could by no possibility harm anyone. For more than a month the gentleman from Michigan has been guilty of flagrant, uncalled-for, and, were it not of doubtful parliamentary propriety, I might use the strongest possible language to characterize his violations of the rules of the House, repeating, as he has, these violations many times for many weeks.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], I see by the RECORD, also arose to criticise my absence from my seat during a single moment of the sittings of this body. It does not come with good grace from him and his brother from Michigan, who have been leading in this destruction—I might say assassination—of parliamentary hours and days during the last six weeks or two months, men who knew that the country was demanding legislation—legislation necessary to relieve the millions of suffering people.

These gentlemen have been the leaders of the most uncalled-for and revolutionary transgression of rules that has ever been committed by members of Congress since the organization of our Government, and this has been done with a full knowledge that the people are suffering and pleading to Congress for relief. Elected to enact legislation essential to the welfare of the people, they have done everything in their power to stop legislation.

In reply to the people's appeal for action, they insult and mock them by doing all they can to prevent action; they could not accomplish this purpose lawfully, they have therefore endeavored to thwart the wishes and deny the appeals of the people in an unlawful manner, and now, with possibly a hundred violations of the rules staring them in the face, they have the effrontery to stand up in this House to criticise a member who, from the beginning of this session, has been constant, faithful, and earnest in discharging every duty imposed upon him and in executing every trust confided to his hands. The gentleman from Michigan and his colleague, Mr. REED, are the last members of this House who should have risen to criticise fellow-members and talk about infraction of the rules.

Where I have transgressed a rule once, these gentlemen have committed the offense a hundred times. I am a firm believer in the propriety of complying with the rules of the House, but I should like to ask the gentlemen why they do not call attention to the violation of rules which are constantly under their observation? It is a violation of the rules for members to smoke on the floor of the House; yet on yesterday several Republicans were smoking in the immediate presence of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Maine, and they made no attempt to correct it, and that offense is now being committed and has been repeated nearly every day of the session. This distinguished gentleman, Mr. REED, in violation of rules, loitered around the clerks while they were calling the roll a few days ago, and yet the gentleman from Michigan seemed to rather approve his action.

The revolutionary violation of the rules of the House led by these gentlemen has stopped legislation for many weeks, and cost the Government more than $1,000,000 in cash, and cost the people many millions. So far was the revolution carried, that when a day was set apart for solemn eulogies upon the life and character of Senator Gibson, our late very distinguished colleague, Mr. REED and Mr. BURROWS, unawed by the solemnity of the occasion, filibustered and compelled the day to be lost, and the solemn ceremonies did not take place.

These are the men who come here to criticise a member who, I may say, possibly more than anyone else, has regarded and observed the rules of this body. The infraction which the gentleman referred to was simply extending remarks in the RECORD, a practice which has been in vogue ever since both of those gentlemen have been members of this House. It is true that where members desire to extend their remarks to any considerable extent permission is asked and almost universally granted. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat, I am in favor of the closest observance of every rule of this House. The House has been altogether too lenient in the matter of enforcing rules, and we have too frequently allowed them to be infringed.

I am delighted to see this newly awakened anxiety upon this important subject by the gentlemen from Maine and Michigan, and to show to the House my sincerity in this matter, I desire to say that if I have infringed any rule, even in the slightest degree, I stand here ready to accept any censure that this House may regard proper. The remarks which I extended were written immediately after the discussion which took place on that day. I left the Hall and went to my room and wrote out the remarks which I regarded as proper to be made upon the question of adopting the rule. I will admit that I ought to have come here and ascertained that permission had been granted, or asked it myself. I will further say that it was my intention when I left the Hall to write out my remarks, to come here toward the close of the session and ask permission to extend them. I commenced upon them, and wrote the ideas which were in my mind, and which I intended to utter in this House if proper time had been given us for the discussion, and, as is usually the case, the ideas expressed on the floor, when elaborated occupied more space, and to these I added quotations from the Constitutional Convention, the Revised Statutes, the decision of the Supreme Court, and Hamilton's remarks in the New York convention, all of which took up the space as stated by the gentleman from Michigan, and upon which he bases his complaint. I think I am justified in the statement that it has been a universal custom for members to illustrate their remarks by appropriate extracts and citations, which are not read upon the floor, but are incorporated in the speech to substantiate what it contains.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I should say anything further upon this subject. I admit that I extended the remarks a little more than I intended. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, it has been a rule in this House to allow this courtesy to members ever since there has been a Congress, and I do not think there is a member of this body who has not availed himself of this privilege of revision.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion we can not hear. I want to hear what the gentleman from Alabama admitted.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And it was simply in compliance with this rule that that which is complained of occurred.

Now, to illustrate the extent to which it has been carried, I saw some correspondence a few years ago, by some of the oldest citizens of Washington, to the effect that the great speech delivered by Daniel Webster in the Hayne debate was retained from the Globe thirty days, and when it appeared it was entirely different from the speech as delivered in the Senate.

No one will question but that all members have availed themselves of the privilege of revising their remarks, striking out all expressions that may be objected to, any expressions which in heat of debate might reflect upon a member; and I want to say here that during my career in this House I have never on a single occasion uttered one word that was not of the kindest character in referring to any member in this body. I have not been one of those who stand here to criticise my fellow-members. I have not been one of those who stand here and impede legislation or prevent my fellow-members from obtaining consideration of measures they think important. I have tried to stand here as an American citizen, sent here by an honest, brave, honorable, and intelligent constituency, to do my duty to my people, to my God, and to my country [applause], and to uphold the banner and the principles of the party of which I am proud to be a member. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks which appeared in the RECORD may stand, and that I may have permission to print them the same as if permission had been given before the RECORD was published.

Mr. BURROWS. Do I understand the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks of this morning?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, sir; I did not. I simply asked unanimous consent that the remarks——

Mr. BURROWS. I want to say a word.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That the remarks which appeared in the RECORD may stand the same as if permission had been granted before the publication.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Alabama suggested that I called this matter up in his absence, with a view of taking advantage of that fact. If I intended to secure an advantage over the gentleman from Alabama I would certainly always wait for his presence. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I waited yesterday, hoping that he would call the attention of the House to the matter; and, as he did not do that, I felt constrained to direct the attention of the House to it this morning, that the House may take such action as it sees fit.

Now, in this case it seems to me that there is no question about the violation of the rule, a most flagrant violation, because it will be observed on page 4663 of the daily RECORD that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], having the matter in charge, asked unanimous consent that gentlemen making remarks upon the subject might be permitted to extend them in the RECORD, whereupon the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] objected to such request. Then, immediately afterwards, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] secured, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], one minute to address the House; and it would appear that in the one minute he got into the RECORD over four columns, at the close of which he puts the Speaker in the attitude of saying, "The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired." [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I trust the gentleman from Michigan does not consider rapidity of utterance a sufficient ground for criticism on a member of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the report of what the gentleman from Alabama did say in that minute I hold in my hand, and I ask the Clerk to read it, so that the House may judge whether he has extended his privilege beyond what is permitted by the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am always ready and willing to do what my party decides, but I regard this as a question which ought to have more deliberation than is given in this debate. The Constitution particularly states that upon the demand of one-fifth the yeas and nays shall be recorded. On the vote upon a bill which is vetoed the Constitution especially states, again, that the noes shall be recorded, and that the yeas shall be recorded; and I ask this House to consider if this rule complies with and provides for all the exigencies that might arise on a vote of that character; and I think, Mr. Speaker, we ought at first give a full opportunity to test the effect of enforcing the law we now have——
> The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
> Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope the gentleman from Maine will now take his fifteen minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. That is what the gentleman from Alabama did say, and the House knows what he has inserted in the RECORD. Now, I do not think I shall make any motion in regard to the matter. The House having the facts before them, if they desire to have this established as a precedent, we on this side have no objection; but then, of course, it will be understood that every member of the House may print whatever he sees fit to print, even in the face of a refusal of the House to grant the privilege of extending his remarks. I was in hopes that the gentleman from Alabama while he had the floor would also explain how it happened that on a previous occasion, where he had five minutes for the discussion of the Post-Office bill in Committee of the Whole and obtained leave to extend his remarks, he printed twelve columns of the Canadian tariff. [Laughter.] I think some action should be taken about that also; but, so far as the minority are concerned, we have nothing further to suggest.

I think the remarks which the gentleman inserted in the RECORD on the question of the adoption of the new rule ought to be stricken out, and those just read from the Clerk's desk inserted in its stead in the permanent RECORD. I repeat, it is for the majority to determine the question; but, if that is not done, of course the case will be drawn into precedent, and hereafter every member will feel at liberty to print what he pleases, even in the face of a refusal of the House to grant permission.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, following the usual practice, I move a reference of the whole matter to the Committee on Printing with the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that this matter be referred to the Committee on Printing with the right to report at any time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have had a little experience with the Committee on Printing [laughter], and I would suggest, in furtherance of what has been said, that no greater favor could be done to the gentleman from Alabama than to refer this matter to that committee, and I certainly hope that reference will be made.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be understood, and perhaps it should be embraced in the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the extended remarks of the gentleman from Alabama should not go into the permanent RECORD until the committee shall have reported upon this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would understand that as a matter of course, because the action taken would not be effective if, in the mean time, the extended remarks went into the permanent RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understood the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to be that the "whole matter" should be referred to the Committee on Printing. I do not understand—and if I am mistaken I wish to be corrected—I do not understand that the reference of "the whole matter," to use the language of the gentleman from Missouri, would include the other remarks referred to by the gentleman from Michigan, in connection with which he says the gentleman from Alabama printed a portion of the Canadian tariff.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to merely refer to that in debate.

Mr. BURROWS. That was all. I simply expressed my regret that the gentleman from Alabama, when he had the floor, had not explained that matter also.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan, there was this difference, that in that case the gentleman from Alabama had a leave to print.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what I understand, and that is why I raise this question.

Mr. BURROWS. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that matter had better go to the committee also, because I am informed that the gentleman from Alabama used the privilege of extending his remarks under the five-minute rule, and then subsequently printed independently of that ten or twelve pages of the Canadian tariff, prefacing it with some remarks.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In any view of the case I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the reference of that matter would be futile, because that extended speech has already gone into the permanent RECORD, and therefore the committee could not make any effective recommendation in relation to it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will explain that matter. The speech to which the gentleman from Michigan refers was all sent to the Printer at once, but he sent me word that he could not get it all set up that night, and therefore he was compelled to defer printing a portion, and insert it in the RECORD of the following day.

Mr. BURROWS. But there are two speeches printed under that leave, are there not?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, sir. That is what I have just explained. I sent the whole of that speech to the Printer the day it was delivered, and the reason it appeared in the RECORD in two parts and on different days was that the Printer was unable to get it all set up the first night.

Before printing the new Canadian tariff I consulted with several of the older members of the House, all of whom concurred that it contained valuable information which ought to go in the RECORD for the use of the members. To show the extravagant exaggeration of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], I call attention to his statement that this tariff occupied ten or twelve pages, when in fact it contained but six pages and a few lines over.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now understand the gentleman from Michigan does not ask to have referred to the committee the matter in reference to the extension of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama on the post-office bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is not included in my motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that is not included in the gentleman's motion. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the House make an additional order; that the speech now in question be withheld from the permanent RECORD until this matter is settled.

Mr. STOCKDALE. As I understand, the motion in regard to this matter comes from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], not the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. It is that there be referred to the Committee on Printing, with leave to report at any time, the question as to the right of the gentleman from Alabama to have inserted in the RECORD of April 18 certain remarks that there appear.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I hardly see the necessity of referring a matter like this. There is certainly nothing objectionable in what the gentleman from Alabama has published. I know that it has sometimes happened that members under leave to print have attacked other members of the House, or have taken advantage of the privilege in a covert way to speak in a manner which was not becoming a member. But here is simply a legitimate matter of debate.

No doubt the gentleman from Alabama has technically violated the rule of the House in printing this matter in the RECORD without leave. But I can see no objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that his remarks be permitted to remain in the RECORD, the proceeding, of course, not to be regarded as a precedent hereafter. The gentleman admits that he went beyond the rule in printing these remarks; but he did so with the expectation, when he wrote out the remarks, of getting the leave of the House; and (through inadvertence probably) the remarks were printed without leave having been obtained.

I renew, therefore, the request for unanimous consent that the gentleman's remarks remain in the RECORD. There is nothing in them derogatory to any gentleman in the House; and let it be understood that what is done in this case is not to be taken as a precedent.

Mr. DOCKERY. Without desiring to interfere with the request of my colleague [Mr. BLAND] for unanimous consent, I ask the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent that the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, which have been referred to, be permitted to remain in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps——

Mr. BLAND. I think that the action which I now request is due to the gentleman from Alabama and myself and a few others who voted against the new rule the other day.

Mr. BURROWS. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] did not understand that just before the delivery of the brief remarks of the gentleman from Alabama on this floor the request for unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD had been denied by the House not only to the gentleman himself, but to others.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that very well. But the gentleman from Alabama has admitted that he violated the rule; and I think the matter might now be settled by unanimous consent in the way I have suggested.

Mr. BURROWS. I think it had better go to the committee for examination. After such examination, if the House should by unanimous consent desire to let the remarks stand, that can be done.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] demands the previous question on his motion.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the Public Printer be authorized to omit these remarks from the permanent RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks that the Public Printer be directed to withdraw the remarks in question from the permanent RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. It seems to me that this question ought to be settled. I do not think it ought to be decided hastily. The RECORD has been made for a long time the wastebasket of the House of Representatives—I do not mean to say that this has been inappropriate, but I think we had better know exactly what we are doing. As I understand, the object of this request is to avoid a decision on this point: but it seems to me the House ought to decide it one way or the other.

Mr. DOCKERY. It does seem to me that the gentleman from Maine ought not to deny to the gentleman from Alabama the privilege of withdrawing from the RECORD the remarks objected to. The gentleman from Alabama has stated frankly that they were out of order, and he desires to withdraw them.

Mr. REED. Well, I am not inclined to press such a matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama admits that he was in error and asks leave to withdraw the remarks.

Mr. REED. I would like the opportunity to say that under this system of extending remarks in the RECORD and printing remarks not delivered, a good many statements appear—sometimes in regard to myself—which apparently are not denied, although they have not the slightest foundation in fact or in the average human imagination. In fact they were never delivered in anybody's presence and I thought I would take an opportunity to say so. I think the gentleman from Alabama himself indulged in about an hour's printing of that character in a fifteen minutes' speech that I took particular pains to give him an opportunity to make. Instead, however, of availing himself of the opportunity, he did not say anything about the subject I have referred to, but printed a good deal that had reference to it. But I suppose it is true always that lies—no. I will say incorrect statements—will eventually correct themselves.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I think the gentleman from Maine is mistaken in his assertion. I recollect the occasion to which he refers very well. I took particular pains to make my statement upon the floor of the House, and the gentleman will recollect that I was not confined to fifteen minutes, but that my time was extended after the expiration of that time for half an hour longer. It was an exceedingly interesting subject, a land-forfeiture bill. I spoke of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as a field marshal commanding an army. The speech ought to be read by every member in the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I notice that it was not only an interesting subject to the gentleman, but has continued to be such.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama to ask now that these remarks be omitted from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. As I understand the request of the gentleman, it is to have expunged from the permanent RECORD the remarks.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I did not say "expunged" from the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. Well, omitted.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama (continuing). I ask that the Public Printer be permitted to omit them from the permanent RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. And you desire to insert in the RECORD what you did say, as read from the desk this morning?

Mr. WHEEELER of Alabama. No, sir. I will seek to get them into the RECORD on another occasion, in a way that I hope will be entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. But you desire to have what you did say on that occasion put into the RECORD, so as to make the correction complete?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No; what I want is that the Public Printer be instructed to withhold all of my remarks on that occasion, making the usual statement that they are withheld for revision. [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURROWS. I do not understand the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. What I mean is that the gentleman from Michigan can not insert in the RECORD my speech. I am the man to determine that for myself in my own time, and not the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. But I supposed the gentleman from Alabama desired to omit from the permanent RECORD what he did not deliver on the floor and have inserted in the RECORD what he actually did say. In that event everything would be regular; the yielding of one minute by the gentleman from Mississippi, the time occupied by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], and the announcement by the Speaker that the time of the gentleman from Alabama had expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No; I want all of my remarks omitted or else all of them put in and allowed to stay there. I made a proper and logical speech against the rule, which you championed, and you do not want it in the RECORD, and you know it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STORER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose did the gentleman rise?

Mr. McRAE. To make a motion in connection with the pending matter.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to ask, then, if the previous question is voted down, if a motion would not be in order——

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered, and the pending question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. McRAE. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. I make this motion with a view to allowing the House to vote on the question as to whether the gentleman from Alabama shall not have permission to withdraw the remarks in question. He certainly ought to have the right to do so. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The question was submitted, and the vote ordering the previous question was reconsidered.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman Arkansas has the floor to submit a motion.

Mr. McRAE. I move that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed to withdraw all of the remarks in question printed in the RECORD on the 18th instant.

Mr. REED. But the question now is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. REED. There has been a decision, however, on that question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to withdraw the demand for the previous question in view of the fact of the refusal of gentlemen on the other side to allow the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his remarks from the RECORD.

Mr. REED. And the question now is on the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. But that motion was reconsidered.

Mr. REED. But even so, there has been a decision, so the motion can not be withdrawn at this time.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WELLS. I rise to make a motion relative to this matter.

The SPEAKER. A motion is not now in order. What is the point of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in regard to the withdrawal?

Mr. REED. The point which I make, if the Chair please, is that a motion which has once been voted upon by the House has been decided by the House; and the fact that the House voted to reconsider can not give a member the right to withdraw it. The Chair has already decided in a previous case that where a vote had been taken—a vote which was not final and determinative—that the motion could not be withdrawn, and that decision is, I think, in accordance with the precedents and with sound judgment. The House has once decided the question whether it will have the previous question ordered or not, and has decided to order it. That was thereupon reconsidered, and now the question is upon a motion which is in possession of the House. It seems to me it must be so.

The SPEAKER. But if the House reconsiders the vote by which the previous question is ordered, it is an undoing of that decision by the House.

Mr. REED. No; it is not an undoing of that decision, it is a reëxamination of that decision. The decision still remains, unless the House votes it down. No; I am not correct about that, but it is a reëxamination of the same decision. I think it will be found that wherever the House has proceeded to a division, that is regarded as a decision within the meaning of the rule. There is always danger, in interpreting these rules, of giving the meaning of a particular word a too sharp comprehension, and I think that the Chair has already decided the matter in the case of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to withdraw the motion for the previous question on the discharge of the order directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms. I think the Chair decided that and held to the decision; and surely, when there has been an actual vote on this, even if it has been reconsidered, the reconsideration does not seem to me to change the fact that the House had to come to a decision upon it. It is now in the possession of the House, and not in the possession of the member. The House may conclude to ratify its decision.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who makes a motion usually has the right to control it until a decision is made. The motion has not passed beyond the control of the gentleman who made it, any more than it was beyond his control when he first made it, and it has been the unbroken custom of the House to allow the member making them to withdraw such motions when he so desires. I do not think there can be any question about it. The gentleman from Missouri who made the motion has the right to withdraw it, and has said that he does withdraw it.

Mr. REED. I do not think a precedent for this can be found anywhere.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair has any doubt about it whatever, I have a decision directly in point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have order. I should like to hear this debate.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I claim that after a vote has been taken upon a proposition it is a decision within the meaning of the rule, and that the matter having been stated to the House is beyond the control of the mover, and in the possession of the House. I refer now to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, page 1808. This debate arose upon a proposition to withdraw a motion. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The point now arises whether the motion to reconsider has passed into the possession of the House.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] can not renew it, that would seem to indicate that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] has no right to withdraw it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. I desire to read the rule on that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. It is clause 2 of Rule XVI, and is as follows:

"When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment."

Mr. GARFIELD. A decision has been had; the House has decided not to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would consider that the vote of the House against laying on the table the motion to reconsider is a procedure on the part of the House to consider the motion to reconsider, and in a vital sense is a proceeding upon that subject. Therefore, if objection be made to the withdrawal, the Chair would rule that the motion to reconsider is in possession of the House. A decision by the Chair to the contrary would be unusual and unjust to the House, because a majority of the House by a yea-and-nay vote have indicated a purpose to proceed with the motion to reconsider to its conclusion.

Mr. WILBER. I object to its being withdrawn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND of Illinois. Does the Speaker decide that I have no right to withdraw the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the vote of the House upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider was a proceeding and decision upon the subject which is vital to the subject itself. The Chair decides that the motion to reconsider is in the possession of the House. The House has proceeded to consider it, and the Chair has not now the power to take from the majority of the House the opportunity to carry out its wish in that respect.

After some further debate the Speaker again said:

The Chair rules this: That, the motion having been voted upon and the opinion of the House having been expressed upon the issue involved in the proposition, it is now in the possession of the House, and not in the power of the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw such motion.

Speaker Randall decided that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman regard that as an authority in this case?

Mr. BURROWS. I think so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should bear in mind what this case is. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] demands the previous question upon a pending resolution and the previous question is ordered. Afterwards a motion is made to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. That motion prevails; so that the demand for the previous question stands before the House unvoted upon, undetermined. Now, does the gentleman hold that it is not within the power of the gentleman demanding the previous question to withdraw that demand?

Mr. BURROWS. I think it is not. I think the proper construction of the rule is, that when any member makes a motion it is within his power to withdraw that motion at any time before he allows it to be submitted to the House, but that when the Chair submits it to the House for action, either on the demand for the previous question or on any other motion and the House once votes upon it, then, according to the precedents and according to the spirit of the rule, that is a decision of the House upon the question. The motion has passed beyond the control of the mover. Certainly a motion can not be controlled by the mover one minute, be in possession of the House the next minute, and then, subsequently, be taken from the possession of the House and put back under the control of the mover. In the case I have referred to a member said to Mr. Townshend, "Withdraw your motion to reconsider." Mr. Townshend declined to do so, but allowed it to go to a vote. Then the Speaker, Mr. Randall, said, "The gentleman has lost his only opportunity to control his own motion." If the Chair will look at the case he will see that that is a correct statement.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman does not seem to appreciate the suggestion made by the Chair, that a decision by the House is some determination, as expressed by a vote. A mover of a proposition may withdraw his motion at any time until there has been a decision by the House. Now, in this case the House decided to order the previous question and then reconsidered its own action. Having done that, can it be said, in any proper sense, that the House has made a decision of that question, when in fact the House has reconsidered the action by which it did make a decision? What is the effect of that reconsideration if it is not absolutely to set aside or undo the decision that the House had previously made?

Mr. BURROWS. That is perhaps true; but I believe the authorities will bear out the statement, and I think a proper interpretation of the rule would be, that if the mover of a proposition allows it to go to a vote, although the House may subsequently reconsider its action, the motion, notwithstanding that, has passed beyond the control of the mover. For instance, suppose I, as the mover of a proposition, demand the previous question, and the previous question is ordered. When I demand the previous question, and the Speaker states the question to the House, it is then in possession of the House and has passed beyond my control. Then, suppose a motion is made to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. That is this case. Now, does the Chair hold that if that action is reconsidered the House thereby loses control of the proposition in such a way that the mover may withdraw it? I think that is not the rule. I think that, having once passed into possession of the House, the proposition remains there to be acted upon. If the House does not desire to order the previous question it can vote it down, it can lay the motion on the table, it can postpone it, it can do anything with it, in order, that it pleases; but the mover of the proposition having allowed it to go to a vote, either upon the previous question or upon any other motion, loses control of it and it passes into the possession of the House.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the situation which confronted the Committee on Rules a few days since when it was desired that the first report made by that committee should be withdrawn. I then understood my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to assent to the proposition that the Committee on Rules had the right to direct me to withdraw that report, and the committee did direct me to do that, and I did withdraw it. The question, I say, was precisely the same as the question here. The motion to order the previous question was pending; the question was whether the House would order the previous question or not, and it was decided by us in the Committee on Rules, in consultation with the gentleman from Michigan, that in that situation the committee had the right to direct me to withdraw the report, and I did withdraw it, and the House assented to that action.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The language of the rule is that a motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision is had upon it or before it is amended. Now, the only question in this case is, has there been any decision upon the demand for the previous question, or has it been amended? Of course it has not been amended. The next question then, is, Has there been any decision upon it? There was a decision, the previous question was ordered, but a motion was made to reconsider that action, and it was reconsidered, and therefore the question stands now before the House without any decision having been had upon it, or the same as if there had been no decision upon it; so that it is in the power of the mover to withdraw it. It seems to me the proposition is as clear as any proposition can be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule on this subject:

When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the distinction between the rule of this body in relation to the withdrawal of a proposition and the rule ordinarily prevailing under what is known as "general parliamentary law." Under general parliamentary law, when a motion is in possession of the House it is beyond the control of the movant. Under general parliamentary law as well as under the rule of this House a proposition is in the possession of the House when it has been stated by the Chair. But under the rule of this House a withdrawal may be made under certain circumstances even after the motion is in the possession of the House.

The rule of the House provides that though a motion be in possession of the House (having been stated by the Chair), it may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or an amendment. To this extent the rule of the House is a change or alteration of what is known as general parliamentary law.

Now, here is a resolution pending on which the previous question was demanded and ordered. If the case stood just there that would be such a decision by the House as in the judgment of the Chair would prevent the movant from withdrawing the proposition; because the previous question is a decision that the House will proceed to vote upon the question. The House made that decision, but immediately reconsidered it—nullified or destroyed its action; so that in no sense can that action be called a decision by the House.

The Chair will state further, that so far as his observation extends—and he recollects repeated instances—it has been the uniform practice, when there has been a reconsideration of the order for the previous question, to allow the motion to be withdrawn. The Chair has known this to be done very often.

It seems to the Chair that no inconvenience to the business of the House can arise from permitting such a practice. On the other hand, very great inconvenience might arise from holding that after the House has reconsidered the vote upon a proposition it is still to be assumed that there has been a decision by the House. The Chair therefore thinks the gentleman from Missouri can withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do withdraw it, and also withdraw my motion to refer.

Mr. McRAE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his motion; and the gentleman from Arkansas submits a motion which the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] be permitted to withdraw from the permanent edition of the RECORD his remarks printed in the proceedings of Monday last in reference to the adoption of the amendment to the rules which was then pending.

Mr. REED. I move to amend by adding the words "and printing the speech actually delivered."

Mr. McRAE. I believe I have the floor. I demand the previous question on my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the previous question.

Mr. REED. Does that allow a vote on my amendment?

The SPEAKER. It does not, as the gentleman from Maine had not the floor.

Mr. REED. I do not contend that it does. I would simply like an opportunity to state the case to the House.

Mr. McRAE. We have had the case stated. We all understand it. The gentleman from Alabama has confessed that he violated the rule, and is willing to withdraw from the RECORD all that there is in it. It seems to me this is a privilege which ought to be allowed any gentleman who makes such a request, and it is certainly all that can be accomplished by reference.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I want the position on this side understood; it is very simple. The only thing which ought to be done is the right thing, and that is to substitute for the speech which was not delivered, the speech that was delivered. Surely we do not want to set an example of mutilating our RECORD by excluding a speech that was delivered, simply because we take out a speech that was not delivered. This matter seems to me so plain that I think the gentleman from Arkansas, if he will consider a moment, will admit my amendment, which expresses the correct idea about this question. Otherwise we shall establish the precedent that a gentleman may keep a speech out of the RECORD simply by putting in something that was not delivered, and then dropping that, while not reinstating the other. Either the RECORD is one of the proceedings of the House or it is not. I know that in many ways we wander from the real matter——

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman from Maine be kind enough to state how much more time he desires?

Mr. REED. Only a minute.

Mr. McRAE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I really think we ought to have the RECORD, in all cases like this, conform to the actual facts. If not, then I think we ought to advertise on the face of the RECORD itself that it does not contain our proceedings; and that is pretty nearly the fact.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman from Michigan desires to be heard——

Mr. BURROWS. I only want a moment.

Mr. McRAE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the gentleman from Alabama is perfectly content to have inserted in the RECORD, in place of what he asked permission to withdraw from it, the remarks that he actually made. I so understand from a conference with him.

Mr. McRAE. I did not so understand. I understood exactly the reverse. I want to do whatever the gentleman from Alabama wishes to do in connection with the matter.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I did think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan ought not to insist on inserting a speech of mine in the RECORD that I had no opportunity to see and correct. But, as I said before, I have at all times in all my service here been anxious not only to comply with the rules of the House, but have also always endeavored to comply so far as possible with the views of my fellow-members on this floor. In that anxiety—seeing that some gentlemen on the other side desired to have the remarks I made incorporated in the RECORD—I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. BURROWS. That is what I understood.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And now I renew my request——

Mr. McRAE. Before that, if the gentleman from Alabama has no objection to the insertion of what has been read from the desk in the RECORD, then I am willing to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine as a part of my motion.

Mr. REED. Let the Clerk report the amendment to the amendment now, so that we can see that it is in the right form.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending amendment:
"And print the speech actually delivered."

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, I want first, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent to have permission to withdraw the printed speech from the RECORD, and I think the House ought to grant me that consent rather than submit the matter to the House in the shape of a motion. I also ask, in order to gratify the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], to have inserted in the RECORD in place of the withdrawn remarks the speech which it is contended was delivered on the floor of the House and which has been read from the desk.

Mr. BURROWS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama now asks unanimous consent that the speech which has been printed in the RECORD may be omitted from the permanent RECORD, and in lieu thereof that there be inserted the remarks which were taken down by the reporter on the occasion in question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. Now, I withdraw the motion I have made.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Arkansas is withdrawn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to print that speech in the RECORD—the speech that has just been withdrawn. As gentlemen are aware I might have read it this morning in my own time and procured its insertion in the RECORD in that way, or I could have had it read from the Clerk's desk. But I never trifle with the House. I have never sought to obtain advantages by sharp practice or indirection. I have never attempted to do indirectly that which I could not accomplish by direct, unquestioned, and straightforward methods. I have never obtained the floor in my own right, and then because it was in my power to do so proceeded to exercise that power in an unusual or unexpected manner, as has sometimes been done, in violation of parliamentary courtesy.

And with that record of nearly fourteen years of service on this floor I now ask unanimous consent that that speech, which appeared in the proceedings of the 18th instant, I may now be permitted to print in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that he have the privilege of inserting in the RECORD the remarks which have been withdrawn from the RECORD of the 18th instant?

There was no objection. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5802) to increase the pension of Pickens T. Reynolds, of Hall County, Ga.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BUNN. I want to enter an objection——

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TATE. Will the gentleman not allow the report to be read?

Mr. BUNN. I want to say just this in connection with the subject: The House of Representatives established a rule making Friday a day for the consideration of private business. It has never, in the six months since that rule was established, devoted a day to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. TATE. But we passed on this bill under a rule of the House in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUNN (continuing). We have never had a day, and I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to demand it. I give notice now that I shall demand the regular order on this day for the purpose of proceeding with the business under the rule and for no other purpose.

I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The committees were called for reports; when reports were submitted, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT WORTH, TEX.

By Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill (H. R. 1950) to authorize the construction of an additional story to the public building in Fort Worth, Tex.—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to submit a report on the bill H. R. 6725. It is now in my committee room, and I ask unanimous consent to file it with the Clerk during the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman's request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to make the same request in regard to a bill which I have been authorized by the committee to report, but which I have not had an opportunity to prepare. Next Monday is District day, and I should like to have permission to file the bill with the Clerk during the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that request will also be allowed.

There was no objection.

CHAPTER 40, LAWS OF SECOND SESSION FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

Subsequently Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6725) to modify an act approved January 30, 1883, being chapter 40 of the laws of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1928) to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals;" in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 5276) to authorize Commander F. W. Dickins, of the United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the cross of naval merit of the third class from the King of Spain; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUNN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

DYNAMITE CRUISER VESUVIUS.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 222) to remit the penalties on the dynamite gun-cruiser Vesuvius.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I reported that bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside without prejudice to-day, to retain its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside without prejudice, to retain its place on the Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

F. Y. RAMSEY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 509) for the relief of F. Y. Ramsey, the heir at law and distributee of Joseph Ramsey.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to F. Y. Ramsey, son and heir at law of the late Joseph Ramsey, late collector of customs and superintendent of lights, district of Plymouth, N. C., the sum of $430.42, balance due said Joseph Ramsey as per records of the Treasury, according to final settlement therein recorded April 30, 1861, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available therefor.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under consideration on a former occasion the question was asked of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether this amount had been paid by the Confederate government. I withdrew the bill at that time for the purpose of getting the information. I desire the Clerk to read a letter from the Treasury Department in answer to my inquiry.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. We can not hear the gentleman, and this is an important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests members to be in order, so that gentlemen can hear. The Clerk will read the letter, as requested by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN].

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., October 13, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference, of your letter of the 5th instant, addressed to the Adjutant-General, inclosing the report of the Committee on Claims, relative to the balance claimed to be due the estate of Joseph Ramsey, deceased, formerly collector of customs and superintendent of lights in the district of Plymouth, N. C., and in which you inquire whether this account was settled by the Confederate government.

In reply, you are informed that an examination has been made of the files and records of the Confederate treasury, now on file in this Department, and it appears, from the record of the Confederate first auditor's certificates of settlement of accounts, that a "final account under the old bond" was settled September 2, 1862, with Joseph Ramsey, collector and disbursing agent from May 10, 1861, the date of North Carolina's act of secession, to August 31, 1861, the date of the new bond.

On the same day a settlement under the new bond was made, commencing September 1, 1861, and ending December 31, 1861. The only settlements with Joseph Ramsey, as superintendent of lights, found of record are as follows:

October 23, 1861, for the quarter ending September 30, 1861, under the bond of August 31, 1861.

July 29, 1862, for the quarter ending December 31, 1861.

April 4, 1864, from January 1 to September 30, 1862.

Thus it will be seen that there is no evidence found in the records of the first auditor of the Confederacy of the settlement of the balance referred to above.

Respectfully, yours,

W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

Hon. BENJAMIN H. BUNN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen from that letter that the amount standing to the credit of Mr. Ramsey has not been paid. That is a sufficient answer to the question that was presented by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when the bill was up before. This bill merely provides that a balance which is standing to the credit of Mr. Ramsey be paid to his heirs-at-law. I do not know of any possible reason why the bill should not pass. I want to say that the same bill passed the House of Representatives in the Fifty-first Congress unanimously, and was lost because of want of consideration in the Senate. If there is any member on the floor who desires information, I will be glad to give it to him.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUNN. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that the purpose of this bill is to provide for the payment of a claim against the Federal Government for carrying the mail before the war?

Mr. BUNN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I should like to know what it is for?

Mr. BUNN. The bill provides for the payment to the heirs of Mr. Ramsey of $430 due to him, the balance standing to his credit as collector of the port at Plymouth, N. C., on the 30th day of April, 1861.

Mr. KILGORE. Is there any proof that this claim was not paid by the Confederate government?

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I am utterly astonished at the question. The letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which has just been read, states that it has not been paid. Where was the gentleman sitting when the letter was read?

Mr. KILGORE. The Confederate government paid a great many of these claims.

Mr. BUNN. But this is from the archives of the Confederate government in answer to that very question propounded heretofore, and the archives of the Confederate government show that it was not paid by that government. It stands to Mr. Ramsey's credit on the books of this Government, and the books of the Confederate government show that it was not paid.

Mr. DOLLIVER. On what account is this balance?

Mr. BUNN. It is a balance of one of his accounts for wages and money paid out for light, fuel, and so forth. The books of the Federal Government show this amount standing to his credit.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is the gentleman prepared to state whether this is one of many such claims, or is it an exception?

Mr. BUNN. I will state as chairman of the Committee on Claims that there are very few of these balances remaining unpaid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. BUNN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, while the amount involved in this bill is comparatively small, a little less than $500, yet there may be a principle lying back of it which may possibly open the door to a very large class of claims, and therefore I would like to get some information as to the facts. This is a claim of a collector of customs at Plymouth, N. C., a custodian of funds under the General Government, for a balance alleged to be due to him for his salary for the quarter ending April, 1861, about which time North Carolina voted to secede from the Union. The claim extends back, therefore, about thirty-three years. As I understand, and I desire to be corrected if I am mistaken, this claim was not settled at that time because this officer under the Federal Government went into the rebellion, or at least transferred his allegiance to the Confederacy, abandoning his duties as a Federal official and becoming a Confederate official, and now, after having thus abandoned his duties as a Federal officer, he, or rather his heir, comes back at the end of thirty-three years and asks for a settlement of this balance.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the gentleman from Maine will permit a suggestion, I do not understand that his statement of the facts agrees with the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BUNN].

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, I want to be informed as to the facts.

Mr. BUNN. This old man died very soon after the time this claim arose, died at an advanced age, and never went into the Confederate army at all. This claimant was a very young man, and, of course, did not enter the Confederate army. I did not know that that had anything to do with the case or I should have stated it before.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then how did it happen that the accounts of this official, if he still continued loyal to the Government, were not settled at the time?

Mr. BUNN. I can not answer that except by saying that he was inside of the Confederate lines, and, as the gentleman well knows, it made no difference how loyal a man was when he was inside the territory of a seceded State. In the meantime this man died, never having taken any part in the rebellion, and, as I have said, this young man, the claimant, was too young to take any part.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did this official ever present this claim for the balance of his salary to the Federal Government?

Mr. BUNN. It was presented the day the balance was struck. The balance was struck by the Department, not by him. They balanced it up, and this is the balance that they found due him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you know why it was not paid?

Mr. BUNN. I do not. The officials say it is still there unpaid. I want to say, further, that so far as the lapse of time is concerned this young man was an infant, with nobody to look after his rights, and so the claim slept for years; but it has been pending in Congress since he attained his majority, a period of about ten years.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is no considerable number of cases that could be affected by this precedent?

Mr. BUNN. Very few have been presented to the committee so far. I want to say further to the gentleman that not a single case of this kind has been presented so far that has not been paid. The committee in the Fifty-first Congress reported favorably on at least two-thirds of the bills presented similar to this, and the money was paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no question, then, in this case that this claimant's father abandoned his duty as a Federal official and entered into the Confederate service as an official of similar character?

Mr. BUNN. Not at all. On the contrary it appears that there is even a larger amount due to him, but it was not included in the balance to his credit because of the fact that before the next quarter ended the State of North Carolina had seceded. The difference, however, is not large—only about $10.25, I believe.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly what the facts in this case may be. I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to this matter, before we establish a precedent that may trouble us in the future with reference to the payment of salaries claimed to be due to officials who left the Federal service in 1861, and, in many cases, went into the service of the Confederate government in a similar capacity. It appears here—and I understand that in that respect this case is differentiated from others—that the Confederate government did not pay this official for the particular period set forth here.

Mr. BUNN. That is so.

Mr. DINGLEY. The presumption is that he continued to discharge these duties under the Confederate government after North Carolina seceded and became a Confederate official.

Mr. BUNN. I do not know about that. I know that he died soon after this claim arose.

Mr. AITKEN. Do you know what became of the Federal property that was in his possession at that time?

Mr. BUNN. I do not.

Mr. AITKEN. How much Government money did he have in his possession?

Mr. HERMANN. I will say to the gentleman that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the amount in this official's hands was all charged up against him, and this covers only the balance found to be due him.

Mr. DINGLEY. Did he account for all the Government property in his hands?

Mr. BUNN. Yes, sir; every dollar, and this is the balance found to be due him.

Mr. DINGLEY. In that case, Mr. Chairman, in view of the peculiar circumstances, I do not know that I have any objection to offer to the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RELIEF OF RALEIGH, N. C.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 19) for the relief of the city of Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask that that bill be passed over informally. There are several bills pending before our committee involving the same question that is involved here, and since passing upon this bill the committee has authorized me, as chairman, to prepare a general bill embracing them all in one. For that reason, I asked that this be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BENJAMIN ALFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 522) for the relief of Benjamin Alford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin Alford the sum of $79.20, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated, and made immediately available therefor.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 522) for the relief of Benjamin Alford, report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Your committee find the facts to be as follows: The claimant is the owner of a grain distillery in Johnston County, N. C., and that $38.70 was reported against him for the month of February, 1893, on package No. 10, 43 gallons, and $40.50 for March, 1893, on package No. 15, 45 gallons, making a total of $79.20.

On the 15th day of March, 1893, the said distillery was broken open and the packages Nos. 10 and 15, were stolen therefrom.

The aggregate of these two sums, viz, $79.20, was paid under protest by the claimant, he having made application for release, which was refused by the Department upon the ground that the Department had no right to allow a credit for the same, inasmuch as there was no proof of the actual destruction of the contents of the packages Nos. 10 and 15.

The evidence shows to the satisfaction of your committee that these two packages were traced to the possession of one A. P. Hatcher, who was arrested and indicted for stealing said packages.

The contents of these packages were changed into other packages, which had paid no taxes, and were seized by the Government officers and sold for taxes, and the taxes upon the same are also paid from the proceeds of said sales, so that the Government has received the taxes twice. The claimant has lost his whisky and then is forced to pay the taxes which were assessed against him in February and March.

The passage of this bill is recommended by C. A. Cooke, attorney for the eastern district of North Carolina; also by the collector of customs for the fourth North Carolina district, in which district this distillery is situated, and by the collector of internal revenue.

Your committee has not reported the evidence because of its great volume, but for the information of all who desire to examine it they have caused it to be filed in the files room of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to ask him a question, and I will ask him to yield to me, or else I want to take the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Texas until the gentleman from North Carolina yields the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I will wait until he gets through with his hour, and then I will ask recognition. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very much pleased to answer any question the gentleman desires to ask.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand from the report of the committee that the proof of the destruction of two of the packages lost was not sufficient to warrant the Department making the allowance to this collector. Now, can this House afford to act on less legal proof than would be sufficient to satisfy the Department?

Mr. BUNN. I think I can answer that question to the satisfaction of the gentleman—I am sure I can to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. KILGORE. I am the man that wants to be satisfied. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUNN. Well, I have some doubts as to satisfying the gentleman from Texas, but as to satisfying the House I have none. [Laughter.] The law does not allow the Department, under the circumstances stated in this case, to make the allowance. I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner showing that he has no authority under existing law to make such an allowance. The law allows these taxes to be remitted upon proof of the actual destruction of the spirits, but in this case they were not destroyed. That is the point. After these packages were listed for taxation and when the books show that they were in the distillery, the distillery was robbed. They were taken away and these identical packages were found not destroyed, but the goods were removed and put in other packages, and those other packages were seized by the Government and that identical whisky and brandy was stored by the Government and the tax again covered into the Treasury.

Mr. KILGORE. Suppose this property had been stolen and never had been recovered, that collector would have been liable.

Mr. BUNN. Undoubtedly; and the money would have been paid, and this bill would not be here.

Mr. KILGORE. Then the whole question depends upon the fact that the people who recovered this whisky were able to determine—I suppose by the taste—that some of the whisky taken from that collector had been mingled with other whisky. I understand the gentleman to say that it had been mingled with other goods.

Mr. BUNN. I did not say that. I said it had been put with other packages.

A MEMBER. How did they identify it?

Mr. BUNN. I do not know. But it was identified to the satisfaction of the district attorney, the collector, and of the jury who tried the man for stealing it and sent him to the penitentiary.

Mr. KILGORE. Do you know anything about the packages that were stolen?

Mr. BUNN. They are fully described in this mass of testimony. I did not have it printed, because the sum involved was only $79, and it would have cost perhaps twice as much to print the evidence.

Mr. KILGORE. If I had the money, I would rather pay the bill myself than waste so much time upon it.

Mr. STOCKDALE (to Mr. KILGORE). Why not borrow the money?

Mr. BUNN. I have some doubt about the sincerity of declarations of this kind; they come too often from the gentleman.

Mr. KILGORE. The trouble is I have not the money.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Then why not let the Government pay this claim, if you can not?

Mr. MOSES. In whose charge was this whisky?

Mr. BUNN. It was in charge of this man Alford. His house was broken into and his property stolen. The revenue officers there took the matter in hand and with the assistance of this man, these identical packages were found at the house of a man who was arrested and convicted. The letter of the district attorney, Mr. C. A. Cook, of North Carolina, and the letter of the collector of internal revenue are among the papers in the case, as is also a letter from the Department stating that this is a case in which under the law the Department can not grant relief. I have in my hand the letter of the Acting Commissioner, Mr. Wilson, recommending the passage of this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman send to the desk to be read the communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. BUNN. With very great pleasure. Before the letter is read let me say that the committee based their report upon these circumstances: Here was this whisky in the original packages, on which this man had paid tax. It was seized in the possession of another man, an illicit distiller, and it was taxed a second time. This claimant lost his property, for which he asks no return from the Government; he simply asks that the taxes which were assessed upon him be refunded. The Government loses nothing to which it is entitled, because these taxes were paid twice on the same packages of goods. The Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the Department has not authority to grant relief because the whisky was not destroyed. Section 3221 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the refund of taxes in certain cases, does not apply to a case like this, where the goods were not destroyed.

Mr. KILGORE. About what time did this transaction take place?

Mr. BUNN. During last year. I do not remember the exact time. I think it was in the spring of 1893—less than a year ago. I ask the Clerk to read in my time the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., August 29, 1893.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry relative to the claim of Mr. Benjamin Alford, for the abatement of $79.20 stamp tax on spirits, I have to say that the assessment claimed was based upon spirits alleged to have been stolen from the distillery bonded warehouse of Mr. Alford. If any relief were given in a case of this kind, it would be by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, under the provisions of section 3221, Revised Statutes.

That section provides that relief may be afforded "on proof of the actual destruction (of distilled spirits) by accidental fire or other casualty. * * * while the same remained * * * in any distillery warehouse," etc.

The spirits in question were stolen from the warehouse—removed for consumption or sale—and it is not alleged or pretended that they were destroyed, even after they were taken from the warehouse.

The claim has been rejected and the collector advised accordingly. The assessment appears to be a proper one, and should be paid unless Congress should see fit to afford relief.

Respectfully, yours,

G. W. WILSON,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. B. H. BUNN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BUNN. I now yield to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX] as much time as he may want.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment, before the gentleman from Tennessee proceeds. I do not understand that the letter just read embraces any recommendation of the Commissioner for the passage of such a bill as this. He simply states what the facts were.

Mr. BUNN. But he says this is a proper case for relief.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does he say that Congress ought to grant relief?

Mr. COX. There can be no question about the merits of this case when gentlemen understand it. This whisky was made in a perfectly lawful way, and the tax was assessed upon it and paid. Then the whisky was stolen and carried away. Afterwards it was found and seized, was sold, and the tax collected again. In other words, this whisky was made to pay double tax; and this man lost his whisky besides. The claim involves the tremendous sum of $79.

Mr. BUNN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

J. M. BILLINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 995) for the relief of J. M. Billings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $850 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay the claims of J. M. Billings, of Santa Clara, Santa Clara County, State of California, for money, money orders, and stamps, and other property stolen from the post-office while he was postmaster in the town of Santa Clara, Santa Clara County, State of California, on the night of September 11, 1877.

The Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to draw his warrant in favor of J. M. Billings in said sum, and is hereby directed to pay the same upon the passage of this act.

Mr. BUNN. The report in this case was made by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]. I yield to him such time as he may desire.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Billings, for whose relief this bill has been reported, was postmaster of the town of Santa Clara, Cal. The evidence which is on file and which is cited in the report shows conclusively that the post-office from which this Government property was stolen was a perfectly secure brick building; and that it contained a good safe. The affidavits of several citizens of the town go to show that robbers who at the time infested that vicinity, cut through the roof of the building, went down into the post-office, robbed the safe, and then made their escape through the back door. These affidavits of some of the best citizens of Santa Clara County who are personally well known to me, leave no doubt that every proper care was exercised by this postmaster, and that he suffered loss by robbery to the amount stated in the bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How much?

Mr. LOUD. Eight hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. BYNUM. Why has not the Post-Office Department allowed this claim?

Mr. LOUD. This case occurred before the passage of the law allowing the Department to settle claims of this kind. This case has been before Congress a number of years.

I will state that among the papers here there is also an affidavit of the postmistress, the assistant of Mr. Billings, who certifies to the amount of Government property that was in the post-office at the time. Here are the items: Money order funds, $320; post-office funds, $290, together with stamps amounting to $245.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How is the amount of the loss computed—from the books of the Department?

Mr. LOUD. It could not be computed from the books of the Department. It is computed from the books and accounts of the postmaster and from the affidavits in the case. The books of the Department could not show what the loss was.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is the evidence conclusive that the amount stated was actually stolen?

Mr. LOUD. Conclusive evidence is furnished in the affidavits of this man himself and also of the postmistress who was his assistant—now Mrs. Gertrude Starr. Mr. Billings is well known as a reputable citizen; and there is no doubt in the mind of any one acquainted with the circumstances that there was stolen at that time property amounting to $900 or $1,000. The postmistress says the amount was about $900. She does not know the exact amount, although she ran the office herself. Mr. Billings makes the amount $855. The bill names $850.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How old is this claim?

Mr. LOUD. The robbery occurred in 1876. The claim has been before Congress for ten years, but it has never been reached before.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to put a few interrogatories to the gentleman. This, I understand, is a case of loss at a post-office through theft?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. There is now on the statute book a law authorizing the Post-Office Department to make allowance to postmasters sustaining losses of this kind where the officer has not been guilty of negligence, the amount being limited to $2,000 in any one case.

Mr. LOUD. But that law does not cover this case: it was not enacted until 1881.

Mr. KILGORE. That was after this claim accrued?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir. This allowance can not be made under any rule of the Department or any existing statute.

Mr. KILGORE. The law does not permit the Department to make any allowance of this kind if the postmaster or his employés have been guilty of negligence.

Mr. LOUD. No; but when there has been no negligence an allowance can be made to the amount of $2,000.

Mr. KILGORE. The rule established by that law ought to apply to this case. If this postmaster or his deputies were guilty of any negligence, this allowance ought not to be made.

Mr. LOUD. This case is so fully presented in the affidavits of parties who were acquainted with the circumstances as they occurred at the time that their evidence is much better than any that could be obtained upon an investigation which might take place now, some seventeen years after the occurrence.

Mr. KILGORE. But there is one other point. That law does not apply to the case of theft.

Mr. LOUD, Oh, yes.

Mr. KILGORE. The law, as I understand, does not name theft as one of the cases in which relief shall be given by the Department.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KILGORE. It specifies, I believe, burglary or fire.

Mr. LOUD. This was burglary.

Mr. KILGORE. If this was a case of burglary, there could not have been negligence on the part of the postmaster.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is this case.

Mr. KILGORE. No; this is theft.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No; it is a case of burglary. The robbers broke into the house, and then broke into the safe.

Mr. KILGORE. I understood the gentleman from California to say it was a case of theft.

Mr. LOUD. I assented to the gentleman's question, not supposing he would make such a distinction as this. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD HURLEY.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 903) for relief of Edward Hurley.

Mr. BUNN. I ask that this bill be informally passed over, for the same reason that the other case was passed over a few minutes ago. It is a bill of the same character.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

PENNSYLVANIA WAR DAMAGES.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 286) to authorize the payment of damages sustained by citizens of the State of Pennsylvania from Union and Confederate troops during the late war, as adjudicated and liquidated by the State of Pennsylvania under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the said State of Pennsylvania, approved the 22d day of May, A. D. 1871.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER], chairman of the Committee on War Claims, who reported this bill, is absent, sick, and I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House that it be passed over informally for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, that this bill be passed over informally?

There was no objection.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money as hereinafter provided, to the respective persons named herein, or to their heirs or legal representatives, to wit:

To R. Johnson, $659.86.
To Stephen M. Johnson, $659.86.
To D. J. Franklin, $130.48.
To Josiah Franklin, $156.60.
To Nat Buckley, $261.20.
To John Tull, $313.49.
To Elias Bray, $391.92.
To Dr. G. Johnson, $156.60.
To Harrison Trice, $261.20.
To Jeremiah Crook, sr., $522.41.
To Willis Arnold, $5,213.89.
To Arch McCorkle, $391.92.
To G. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To S. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To John M. Hart, $522.41.
To William A. Brummer, $801.60.
To John D. Smith, $261.20.
To A. B. Crook, $261.20.
To Daniel McCollum, $261.20.
To Jeff Jones, $130.48.
To Thomas McGill, $156.61.
To James Ledbetter, $156.61
To William Ozier, $522.41.
To Elijah Bond, $261.20.
To John L. Cawthon, $522.41]
To William Hall, $522.41.
To Carroll Beaver, $522.41.
To John West, $659.86.
To James Clifford, $261.30.
To O. F. Hendrix, $784.04.
To Frank Cawthon, $313.49.
To James Cawthon, $130.49.
To S. E. Grider, $130.49.
To Silas Grider, $130.49.
To John Robinson, $240.34.
To Hugh McKnight, $200.25.
To John G. Smith, $79.96.
To Caleb McKnight, $200.25.
To James Thomas, $200.25.
To William P. Walker, $120.06.
To A. S. Rogers, $341.55.
To Tyson G. Maness, $561.02.
To William H. Bond, $120.03.
To F. M. Ballard, $240.04.
To Stephen Massengill, $120.06.
To William Swink, $440.80.
To Keton M. Jones, $361.15. In all $22,271.23.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, is there a report accompanying this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is a report.

Mr. HULL. I think we should have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has been recognized.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this bill carries an appropriation of about $22,000, I think the report of the committee had better be read, as it will afford an explanation to the House of the character of the bill.

The report (by Mr. ENLOE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 724) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, reports as follows:

This claim was presented in the Fifty-second Congress and was favorably reported upon by the Committee on War Claims, to whom it was referred. After a careful investigation of the facts involved, your committee adopt the report of the committee of the Fifty-second Congress, a copy thereof being hereto attached and made a part of this report, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 19, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1219) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, submit the following report:

The facts of this claim are fully set forth in a report made by this committee to the House in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee therefore adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[House Report No. 14, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises and the reasons of the committee for recommending the passage of the bill will be found stated in the report of the Committee on War Claims, submitted to the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress by Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin, who was then chairman of said committee, which report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1345, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram Johnson and others for relief, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in House Report of the Committee on Military Affairs, No. 184, second session, Forty-fourth Congress, and in reports from the Secretary of War, with correspondence attached, on file with the papers in the case, and are in substance as follows:

On the 25th day of November, 1862, a party of rebels made a raid upon a small force of Union troops stationed at Henderson, in the State of Tennessee, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The raiding party captured the Union troops, with their arms and camp equipage, burned a quantity of cotton belonging to the United States and to private individuals, and also destroyed the depot buildings and water tank belonging to the railway corporation.

Thereupon, on the 2d day of December following, the commandment of the Union forces at the post of Bethel, Tenn. (Col. J. N. Haynie, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers), appointed a board of officers to investigate the losses sustained and appraise the damages suffered from the raid, with a view to an assessment by way of reprisal upon rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson.

The board so appointed assessed the value of the property captured and destroyed as follows:

Cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900.00
Arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States	3,180.00
Total belonging to the United States	5,080.00
Cotton belonging to private persons	18,171.36
Railway property	3,500.00
Grand total	26,751.36

Upon this report being made, Col. Haynie ordered an assessment of this amount to be levied upon the rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson, which action was approved at the headquarters of the district of Jackson, in the Department of Tennessee, Brig. Gen. Sullivan commanding, on the 12th day of December, 1862; and an order bearing date on that day was issued from said last-named headquarters directing the collection of the tax.

Col. Haynie proceeded in the execution of the order, and collected of the said assessment the sum of $23,325.16, leaving a deficit of $3,426.20 not collected, by reason of the absence of the persons against whom the same was assessed. And thereafter, but at what precise date does not appear, Col. W. W. Sanford, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commanding post at Bethel, made an additional and supplemental assessment for $4,326.20, to make up such deficit; and of this amount there was collected $4,026.20, making the total amount collected to repair losses and damages sustained by said raid $27,351.36; all of which sum was paid by the persons now asking relief by this petition.

The right of the military commandant, in time of war, to order and enforce assessments upon hostile communities by way of reprisal, and to prevent the giving information and encouragement to enemies outside of his lines by enemy sympathizers within his lines, is well settled and affirmed by all writers upon the laws of war, and is a most salutary check upon predatory incursions, by making the friends of those who commit the damage bear the brunt of the injury suffered.

At the time of the appraisal of the damages and of the levying and collecting these assessments it was supposed to be under and in execution of an order of Gen. Grant, then commanding the troops in that department. But it appears from the papers filed that Gen. Grant disavowed the construction put upon his general orders by the local officers, and declared the purpose and intent of his general order to be that reprisal should be made by way of levy and assessment in case of raids within our lines, like the one at Henderson, only to repay such losses as the Government might sustain in its property thereby, and he refused to recognize the right of private claimants to reimbursement by such levy and assessment; and on the 23d day of January, 1863, ordered the proceeds of such assessment and collection to be turned over to the provost marshal-general; and it appears by the papers filed that his action in denying the right of private claimants to reimbursement for losses sustained by the raid out of this fund was approved by the Secretary of War, on the report made thereon by Gen. M. C. Meigs, which report maintains the law to be that the power existed to levy and collect an assessment to pay private losses in the discretion of the general commanding; but as against such general's construction of his own order and purpose no right whatever could accrue to a private claimant for reimbursement.

The logical sequence from these facts, and this declaration and construction by Gen. Grant of his orders, seems to be that the subordinates, in the execution of the orders of the commanding general, should have made an assessment only for the losses sustained by the Government, viz:

For cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900
Arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States	3,180
	5,080

Had the Government rebuilt or repaired the injury to the railway property, as an essential for their use of it, that also should be included as a proper item for assessment; but the evidence shows that the railway company repaired their injuries at their own expense

Deducting this amount, for which the assessment was authorized, from the total amount collected, there remains a balance of $22,271.26 taken from the petitioners under a misconstruction of the order of the commanding general, as certified to by his own action and the evidence of an officer of his staff.

This committee have maintained, and still adhere to the doctrine, that no nation is liable for the willful torts of its soldiery.

But was this assessment a tort, within the meaning of such well-established doctrine? It is submitted that this wrong is clearly without the rule, because this assessment was collected by an officer of high rank, commanding a military district, in the execution of an office giving him colorable authority, to say the least, to do the act he did; and that act was ratified by the general commanding, impliedly at least, by not ordering restitution when the excessive assessment came to his knowledge.

But if the reasoning on this point may be deemed questionable, there is upon the facts another and complete answer to the application of this principle. The proof shows to an absolute certainty that of the money so collected $23,325.16 was applied by the United States to its use, knowing the source from whence it was derived, and the remainder of the sum, $4,026, by all reasonable presumption, was likewise applied to the use of the Government. And the committee is so constrained to hold, as a contrary conclusion would compel us to impeach the integrity of a gallant officer who fell before Vicksburg without a stain upon his citizen or soldier life.

The law of the case, then, may be stated to be, that if the officers, agents of the Government, committed a tort originally, it was approved by the principal, the Government, when it knowingly accepted the benefits of the tortious acts. And no proceedings by way of confiscation or condemnation have ever been had to divest the persons so assessed of their right in the surplus fund.

Hence your committee are constrained to hold that the claims of the petitioners to the amount collected of them ($22,271.26) in excess of the requirements of Gen. Grant are valid, and that the Government ought in right refund the same; and report herewith a bill, redistributing the same to the persons who paid the same ratably, in proportion to the sums originally paid by each of them, respectively, and recommend its passage.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report herewith a substitute for the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, the report just read sets forth fully and clearly the origin of this claim. It has been reported I think now some seven times in the House in seven different Congresses favorably from the Committee on War Claims, and has once passed this House. It has been reported four times favorably in the Senate and twice passed that body. I hope the House will allow it to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. I make that motion.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not understand the motion that the gentleman from Tennessee has submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. That the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no. I think we ought to agree on some time for the discussion of this bill. Suppose we say we will take a vote some time about half past 4 o'clock to-day. A very important question is involved in it.

Mr. ENLOE. Is the gentleman from Texas serious in his statement?

Mr. KILGORE. I am.

Mr. ENLOE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. KILGORE. An hour.

Mr. ENLOE. I will reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to occupy the floor?

Mr. KILGORE. I think that there ought to be some explanation of this bill. It has been before Congress, the gentleman from Tennessee says, seven or eight different times. It has passed this body once or twice, I believe, and passed the Senate once or twice, as he tells us. Now, I think that is a positive disadvantage to it in this Congress; and I would not be willing to see this bill laid aside with favorable recommendation without the House having an opportunity to fully discuss and understand the questions involved and how it first arose, and what rights these people would have over and above other people in the South who lost all of their property by the war. These are all important questions, and I think ought to be discussed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. What is the amount involved?

Mr. KILGORE. It carries about $20,000, I understand.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Something over $22,000.

Mr. KILGORE. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have some further explanation of the matter before voting upon it. This is a claim, I suppose, of loyal citizens?

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir. That is not the nature of the claim. The gentleman from Michigan probably knows the character of the claim, which has been pending here, I suspect, ever since he has been a member of this body.

Mr. BURROWS. Were they disloyal people these claimants?

Mr. ENLOE. That is a question that is not raised in connection with it.

Mr. BURROWS. And do you think that question should not be considered?

Mr. ENLOE. It has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. BURROWS. And that it makes no difference whether they were loyal or disloyal?

Mr. ENLOE. Not at all.

The nature of the case I will state to the gentleman is just this. There was a Federal post at the town of Henderson, in the State of Tennessee, occupied by a detachment of troops from Illinois. Col. Haynie, the colonel of the regiment, was stationed at Bethel, Tenn. A detachment of Confederate troops under the command of my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. COX], crossed the river and went to Henderson and attacked the post and captured it, and during the fight, or immediately following it, burnt the depot. In the destruction of the depot building they destroyed some Government property and some cotton that belonged to private parties.

Col. Haynie appointed a board to estimate the losses and ordered an assessment to be levied upon the people of the community to the amount of the value of all the property destroyed of the United States for losses sustained by the destruction, including railroad, Government, and individual property. In the execution of that order these persons, whose names are mentioned in the bill, were assessed for various sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to $26,757.36. Gen. Sullivan, the superior of Col. Haynie, was stationed at Jackson, Tenn.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You mean the Federal general, Sullivan?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir. Col. Haynie, after ascertaining the losses and levying the assessment called on Gen. Sullivan to issue an order "directing the collection and disbursement of amount assessed." Gen. Sullivan ordered it to be paid over to Col. J. D. Webster, superintendent of United States military railroads at Jackson, Tenn. Gen. Grant ordered that the hands be paid over to Col. William S. Hillyer, the provost-marshal-general at Memphis, Tenn. It finally was placed in the hands of the quartermaster, Col. C. A. Reynolds, who turned it over to the Treasury.

These facts, Mr. Chairman, are all matters of record. They show that the money, after reimbursing the Government for its losses, instead of being paid back to the parties from whom it was taken, was paid into the Treasury of the United States, and has been there all this time, and is there to-day. All this bill proposes to do is to take the excess of the money and return it to these people in the same proportion in which they paid it into the Treasury.

A question was raised, and I want to deal fairly with the House upon the subject—a question was raised by the claimants who had cotton destroyed by the fire, for damage resulting from it. They claim that they should be paid out of that fund, and the Forty-third Congress paid two of the claimants over $9,000 of it. The question was first referred to Gen. Grant, and Gen. Grant stated that the levy was not made for the purpose of reimbursing cotton speculators for any losses they might have sustained. Gen. Sullivan stated that it was levied in the nature of an indemnity, and as a notice to the people of that section of the State that in the event of similar raids a like course would be adopted; that it would operate as a notice to the Confederate forces who might attempt such raids in the future not to come in, because these people would be made to suffer the consequences of it.

The main purpose was for the reimbursement of the Government and for indemnity, as was stated at that time. Gen. Sullivan gave notice to those assessed that after reimbursing the Government the balance of this fund should be held as an indemnity against future raids or incursions from guerrillas or regular Confederate troops; but it was his intention to return the balance to those assessed in case no further disturbances occurred in that vicinity. There were no further raids, and according to Gen. Sullivan's intentions when he made the levy, the money should have been refunded, but unfortunately for the claimants Gen. Sullivan was ordered elsewhere, and he left the funds in other hands, to find their way into the Treasury, which, like the sea, never gives up what it has swallowed except to a storm.

Some of these cotton claimants came here and asked the Government to pay them out of this fund. They applied to the Quartermaster-General, Gen. Meigs, and he held that the fund was not collected for that purpose, and refused to pay them. Then two of the claimants came to Congress, as I before stated, and asked Congress to pass a bill appropriating money to pay them for cotton that was burned at Henderson in that fire, and there was a bill passed through Congress paying two of these men over $9,000. It was insisted that this ought to come out of that particular fund, but the construction placed by Gen. Grant upon the order issued by the commanding officer and the construction placed upon it by Gen. Sullivan and by the Quartermaster-General shows that no part of this money belonged to anybody or could equitably or legally belong to anybody except the persons who paid it into this fund.

Mr. AITKEN. Does this bill contain the names of those who were assessed?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes.

Mr. AITKEN. How did you get the list?

Mr. ENLOE. From the military order making the assessment; which is of record in the War Department. The only question that ever confused the case was the question as to whether or not the private citizens who were cotton speculators in that country at that time were entitled, as a matter of equity, to be paid out of this fund, rather than the people who had paid it into the Treasury.

That question was ably discussed in a report submitted to the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress, by the Hon. Howell E. Jackson, who was then a member of the Senate from Tennessee, and who is now an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Judge Jackson held that, as a matter of equity and as a matter of law, the balance of this fund ought to be paid to these people.

The view of the question taken by the committees of this House in several different Congresses is presented in the able report on this bill, which was written by Gen. Bragg of Wisconsin, the famous commander of the "Iron Brigade," when he was chairman of the Committee on War Claims in the Forty-sixth Congress. That report has been readopted in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses. The claim is just, and I hope the committee will lay it aside with a favorable recommendation. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, this claim has been before Congress for several years, but has never passed both Houses in the same Congress, and has always heretofore met with very serious opposition. My only purpose is to call the attention of the committee to the character of the claim. Of course, the majority have the power to pass it, if they so desire; but I want the facts laid before the committee and before the country.

First, the amount carried by this bill aggregates something over $22,000. The first party named in the bill is H. Johnson, $659.86.

The next is Stephen M. Johnson, $659.86.

I find upon examining a report from the War Department in relation to this bill, which report I hold in my hand, a very interesting history. From that report of the War Department it appears with relation to this Mr. H. Johnson, who seeks now to be paid $659.86, as follows:

There are on file in this office two vouchers signed S. M. & H. Johnson, at Henderson Station, and at Jackson, Tenn., for lumber and hauling.

One H. Johnson, of Meigs, McMinn or Roane County, Tenn., petitioned that a disloyal citizen be not released.

That is, disloyal to the Confederate States, I suppose.

There are on file in this office four vouchers signed S. M. Johnson, at McMinnville, Tenn., for niter and saltpeter, and two signed S. M. & H. Johnson, at Henderson Station, and at Jackson, Tenn., for lumber and hauling.

One Stephen M. Johnson was a member of Company E, Sixteenth-Twenty-first Tennessee Cavalry, enlisted at Jackson, Tenn.

Passing to line 12, on the first page of the bill, I find the claim of—

D. J. Franklin, $130.48.

This report shows the history of that gentleman as follows:

There are on file in this office two vouchers signed D. J. Franklin, at Henderson Station, Tenn., for beef and hire of teams.

On the second page of the bill, in line 28, is the claim of—

Willis Arnold, $5,213.89.

The report from the Confederate archives show that—

There is on file in this office one voucher signed W. Arnold, at Murfreesboro, Tenn., for corn; also one signed Willis Arnold for corn and paid by A. B. Crook, assistant quartermaster Confederate States army, in Henderson County, Tenn.

There are various other references to this gentleman.

Mr. STALLINGS. Are these names which you are mentioning the ones found in this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes. On page 2 of the bill, line 32, is the claim of—

G. L. Ross, $1,306.91.

This report reads, in relation to this gentleman, as follows:

One G. L. Ross was captain Company I, Thirteenth Tennessee Infantry, enlisted at Jackson, Tenn.

On the same page of the bill, line 36, is the claim of—

John M. Hart, $522.41.

It is said of this party:

There are on file in this office two vouchers signed J. M. Hart, at Jackson, Tenn., for forage.

One John M. Hart was a member of Company I, Thirteenth Tennessee Infantry, enlisted at Jackson, Tenn.

There are various other references found to persons of this name.

On page 3 of the bill, line 38, is the claim of—

William A. Brummer, $801.69.

I find from the same source the following information:

One person by the name of W. A. Brummer signed for pay for services of slaves at Knoxville, Tenn.

Mr. HULL. Services to the Confederacy?

Mr. BURROWS. Services to the Confederacy, I suppose. I call attention to another claim, in line 46 of the bill:

Jeff Jones, $130.48.

This report says:

There is on file in this office one voucher signed J. Jones, at Morgantown, Tenn., for forage.

One Jefferson Jones was first lieutenant, Company H, Third Tennessee Infantry, P. A., enlisted in Monroe County, Tenn.

One J. Jones, of Blountville, Tenn., petitioned for the detail of a doctor.

One J. Jones, as post adjutant at Knoxville, Tenn., reports certain Federal prisoners being put in jail.

One J. Jones signed for pay for services as deck hand on steamer Holston, running between Knoxville and Chattanooga, Tenn.

One J. Jones is mentioned as a prisoner (civil) who took the oath to the Confederate States before he was captured (in Tennessee).

The next claim is that of—

A. B. Crook, $261.20.

This report says of him:

There are on file in this office eight vouchers signed A. B. Crook, at various places in Tennessee and Mississippi, for forage and drugs for use of Confederate States army.

One A. B. Crook was a member of Company D, 16-21 Tennessee Cavalry, enlisted in Madison County, Tenn.; afterwards assistant quartermaster Eighteenth Tennessee Cavalry.

Another claim is that of—

John D. Smith, $261.20.

The War Department report shows:

There are on file in this office five vouchers signed J. D. Smith and one signed Jno. D. Smith, at various places in Tennessee.

The next item to which I wish to call attention is in line 54 on page 3, the claim of—

Elijah Bond, $261.20.

This report shows the following:

There is on file in this office one voucher signed E. Bond, at Shelbyville, Tenn., for hay.

In line 58 is the claim of—

William Hall, $522.41.

It is reported of this claim:

There are on file in this office twenty-three vouchers signed Wm. Hall; three signed Wm. Hall, sr., and three signed W. Hall, at various places in Tennessee, for bacon, beef, wheat, mules, wagons, and for services.

A paper in reference to a suspicious person (no name given) is indorsed "Wm. Hall."

One W. Hall received a passport in East Tennessee.

The next claim to which I call attention is that of—

Carroll Beaver, $522.41.

The report shows in relation to Carroll Beaver, as follows:

There is on file in this office one voucher signed C. Beaver (in favor of Carroll Beaver), at Beavers Mill, Tenn., for meal, paid by A. B. Crook, assistant quartermaster, Confederate States army.

At the top of page 4 of the bill, in line 62, is the claim of—

John West, $659.86.

The report from the War Department discloses in regard to this gentleman, as follows:

There are on file in this office five vouchers signed John West, two of them dated at Lexington, Tenn., for bacon; two at Bulls Gap, Tenn., and one "In the field" (Tennessee), for forage.

Mr. ENLOE. I suppose the gentleman does not doubt that these all refer to the same man.

Mr. BURROWS. There may be doubt about their being the same individuals, but I have no question about their identity. I am reading, however, from the War Department report.

In line 72, page 4 of the bill, is the claim of—

S. E. Grider, $120.49.

The report from the War Department shows as follows:

One S. E. Grider was a member of Company H, Sixteenth-Twenty-first Tennessee Cavalry; enlisted at Center Point, Tenn.

Mr. COX. What was the name of the man who was stated to belong to a cavalry command in Tennessee?

Mr. BURROWS. S. E. Grider.

Mr. COX. What command was that?

Mr. BURROWS. This report says:

One S. E. Grider was a member of Company H, Sixteenth-Twenty-first Tennessee Cavalry; enlisted at Center Point, Tenn.

This may mean that he was a member of both. I do not know.

Mr. COX. There never was any such regiment.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know anything about that. I am quoting from this report from the Confederate archives.

The next claim to which I wish to call attention is in line 76 of the bill:

John Robinson, $240.31.

It is stated in this report:

There are on file in this office seven vouchers signed John Robinson and two signed John Robinson "by his mark" at various places in Tennessee, for beef, hospital supplies, and forage.

One John Robinson received a passport in East Tennessee.

The next claim to which I ask the attention of the committee is in line 80 of the bill:

John G. Smith, $79.96.

The War Department report says:

There are on file in this office two vouchers dated at Knoxville, Tenn., one signed John G. Smith and the other John G. Smith & Co., for miter; also one signed J. G. Smith, at Kingston, Tenn., for services as teamster.

The next claim to which I desire to call attention is in line 82, and it is that of—

Caleb McKnight, $200.25.

It is said of him in this report:

There is on file in this office one voucher signed Caleb McKnight, "in the field" for forage; also one signed C. McKnight, at Columbus, Ky., for beef. One Caleb McKnight was captain Company B, Thirty-first Tennessee Infantry, enlisted at Trenton, Tenn.

The next claim to which I wish to call attention is in line 84 of the bill, and it is that of—

James Thomas, $200.25.

In this report it is said:

There are on file in this office two vouchers signed J. Thomas and two signed James Thomas, at various places in Tennessee, for horse and forage. One James Thomas was a member of Company F, Sixteenth-Twenty-first Tennessee Cavalry, enlisted at Jack's Creek, Tenn.

At the top of page 5, line 86, is the claim of—

William P. Walker, $120.06.

The report from the War Department shows:

One W. P. Walker was second lieutenant Company H, Thirty-sixth Tennessee Infantry.

The claim of F. M. Ballard for $240.04, to which I desire to call attention, is found on line 94 of the bill.

It is said of him:

One F. M. Ballard was second lieutenant Company I, Twenty-fourth Tennessee Infantry; enlisted at Camp Trousdale, Tennessee.

The last item in line 100 of the bill is the claim of—

Keton M. Jones, $361.15.

It seems that this claim, presented in this bill now for favorable action by this House, has been before the Court of Claims for adjudication, and I hold in my hand the report from the Court of Claims:

Keton M. Jones vs. The United States.—This case being a claim for supplies and stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that upon the evidence it does not appear that the claimant, being the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom they are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, and the case is dismissed for want of further jurisdiction.

That case was rejected solely on the ground of disloyalty. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning, I have no other desire than to lay the facts before the committee. The report of the Secretary of War as to what the Confederate archives disclosed in regard to these people, I suppose, will be taken as conclusive; and, for the purpose of testing the sense of the committee, I move to strike out on page 5, line 100, the claim of Keton M. Jones, the one last mentioned—the one which the Court of Claims rejected because of the disloyalty of the claimant.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard before that motion is put.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that we are still in general debate, and that no amendment is in order at this stage.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that general debate has not yet closed, but I give notice that I shall offer that amendment when in order. The gentleman from Tennessee has moved that the committee rise and report this bill to the House. Pending that motion I shall move to amend the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is one of the most agreeable gentlemen I ever saw in a controversy [laughter], and his manner of addressing the House is such that it carries with it very nearly the force of an affidavit. But the gentleman has some other peculiar characteristics, and, with all his suavity of manner and speech and all his apparent disposition to discuss this question fairly upon its merits, I am afraid that he has been led a little out of the true line in the course he has taken this morning in bringing up from the Confederate archives a record which he has read to this committee and which he argues has some bearing upon this case, when, as a matter of fact, it has none. The great majority of the people who are interested in this claim are in no way identified with the people mentioned in the record which the gentleman has been quoting. Some of them have the same names and perhaps there may be some of them named in that record. A great many of the persons referred to in that record as residing in that part of Tennessee near Henderson live two or three hundred miles away and are in no way identified with these claimants.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the gentleman deny that the party named here as Keton M. Jones is the same person concerned in this report of the Court of Claims?

Mr. ENLOE. I do not know. I would like to see the reference made to that case in order to answer the gentleman. I do not know what the nature of the claim of Keton M. Jones was. I would ask the gentleman from Michigan whether he investigated closely enough to find out that Keton M. Jones preferred a claim against the Government in the Court of Claims on account of this assessment?

Mr. BURROWS. I know nothing of the nature of the claim. I simply know that this is the report of the Court of Claims of its action in the case of Keton M. Jones.

Mr. ENLOE. That action was taken on a claim for stores and supplies. The paper read by the gentleman shows that fact, I discover. This report shows on its face that Keton M. Jones came to the Court of Claims and applied for payment for stores and supplies furnished to the Government, and not (even if this is the same man) for a reimbursement of this excessive military assessment; and it is hardly fair, in the discussion of this case, to raise a question which, as I stated in the beginning, can not have any proper bearing upon the case, the question of the loyalty or disloyalty of these persons. Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan and of this Committee to what is stated in the report submitted to the Senate by the Hon. Howell E. Jackson at the time this bill passed that body. Judge Jackson in his report said:

It is distinctly shown that they had no connection whatever with the rebel raid of the 25th of November, 1862, which came across the Tennessee River from Middle Tennessee at night. They gave no aid, sanction, or support to this raid, and were in no way responsible for the losses it occasioned. Fielding Hurst (late colonel of the Sixth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, United States Army), an intensely loyal man, who raised his regiment in that locality and devoted himself to the cause of the Union with a zeal and energy unsurpassed by any soldier of the war, states that for the last forty-seven years he has lived among this people and knows them and their antecedents well and intimately. He says, further:

"I know them [the claimants] to be honorable, just, and good men, who were at home in the peaceful pursuits of life when the assessment and collections were made. I know of no gentleman whose character for goodness is better than that of the claimants. I think they are as justly entitled to that money as I am to reap the reward of my daily labor."

That is the sworn testimony of Col. Hurst. This Col. Hurst, as the report says, was very active in his support of the Federal Government. He burned the county seat of the county in which he lived. His command destroyed the town of Purdy, in the county on the borders of which this raid occurred. He was a man who was uncompromising in his loyalty, who was regarded at that time as a persecutor of the people down there, yet that man comes up and testifies that these people were not in any way connected with the rebellion, but were at home engaged in their peaceful occupations when this raid occurred. But some gentleman says, "Why, these were all rebel sympathizers!" Now, does the gentleman from Michigan insist, or will this House insist, that the Government of the United States at this time ought to refuse to pay back this money, ought to confiscate private property without any legal proceedings and convert it to Government use, on the ground that these claimants were rebel sympathizers? I should say, commit a robbery by Congressional inaction, because no legal proceedings were ever taken to convert this private property to public use.

The Government to-day is simply a trustee for the people from whom the commanding general collected this money. No doubt these people, some of them at least, had kinsmen in the Confederate army, and perhaps they were in sympathy with those kinsmen; I have no doubt they were, and they ought to have been. They were peaceable, law-abiding citizens, under the complete jurisdiction and control of the Federal Government, not a transitory, illusory, or incomplete control, but full and absolute control, and under those circumstances they were entitled to the protection of the Government according to all the rules and usages of civilized warfare.

This money does not belong to the Government; there has been no legal proceeding by which it could become the property of the Government. Then why should it not be paid to these people? The gentleman from Michigan goes into the Confederate archives and brings up here every man he can find having a surname the same as the claimants in this bill. Why, I can take that list and point out persons bearing duplicates of many of these names in my own Congressional district. There are Johnsons and Smiths and Joneses and Arnolds all over Tennessee. Perhaps every name in this bill is duplicated over and over again in the State, to say nothing of other States in the South. S. M. Johnson may have been hired or forced to haul lumber for the Confederate government and may have been paid for it, but is that any reason why he should not have returned to him the money which rightfully belongs to him. Hiram Johnson was a citizen who remained at home during the war. He is now dead.

A considerable number of the original claimants are dead. Their families need this money to-day worse than they ever needed it before in their lives, and even if the fathers were disloyal to the Government at that time that, I say, is no reason why the Government should now refuse to do justice to their widows and children. Hiram Johnson waited and hoped for twenty-five years, and he was as good a citizen as ever lived. H died believing in the honesty of this Government. You recognize the rights of gentlemen who come here from that section, who sit as representatives in Congress, although they served in the Confederate army; you do not propose now to punish them because they served the Confederacy. Does this Congress propose, then, to refuse to adjudicate and pay the just claims of private citizens, and to punish noncombatants by legislative robbery because they happen to live in a Southern State. That is the only offense of which they are guilty. They were in a State which furnished many soldiers to the Confederate army and thirty-seven regiments to the Federal Army. Troops were raised for both armies in that section.

These claimants were at home, following their peaceful pursuits, obeying the laws of the land, and subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and you have the testimony of Col. Hurst, before quoted, who commanded the Federal forces in that country at that time, that they were good citizens. It seems to me that it would be very unjust, and I do not believe the gentleman from Michigan can find it in the promptings of his heart to contend that it would be right to refuse to let these people have the money which the Government took from them for a specific purpose, to which it was not applied, and has improperly withheld it all this time.

It may be cheap and unworthy politics to make such an argument as that, and refer to claimants as rebels. I believe the day has passed when any considerable number of people, in any part of this country are going to say that because the Government has this property in its possession, acquired in the manner it was, that it is right to hold and refuse to return it to the rightful and legal owners simply because they lived in Tennessee and were peaceable, law-abiding citizens of that State, even though they may have sympathized with the Confederacy.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Do I understand my friend from Tennessee to deny that the persons whose names have been read by the gentleman from Michigan are the same people referred to in this bill?

Mr. ENLOE. I deny that a very large part of those whose names have been referred to are the same people. Some of them may be the same. When the gentleman gets in the neighborhood of Henderson or Henderson County, it may be that some of the persons were those who hauled lumber or sold supplies to the Confederate forces at the time they were occupying the country.

Mr. BURROWS. I referred this bill to the War Department with a request to be advised as to what information the Department had on file in the Confederate archives (I did not say "rebel" archives; I believe I never use that expression) in relation to the claimants mentioned in the bill; and the Department returned my request with this report. I have no doubt in my own mind that these are the same persons.

Mr. ENLOE. That is parallel with the case that we had in the Fifty-first Congress. In that Congress—a Republican Congress—after eighteen weeks of filibustering, which I led on every Friday and Friday night until the bill was voted on, a bill was passed appropriating over half a million dollars to pay loyal claimants for property taken and used by the Federal Government during the war, in cases where judgment had been obtained in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Thomas, of Wisconsin, who was at that time chairman of the Committee on War Claims, called on the War Department to furnish from the Confederate archives all the information that could be supplied as to parties bearing those names. He sent the bill to the Department, just as the gentleman from Michigan has sent this bill. The Secretary of War furnished from those archives the history of every man bearing the same name as any person named in the bill or having a similar name. Yet the Court of Claims had investigated those very cases, had inquired into the loyalty of those individuals, and they had established their loyalty by a judicial proceeding. Notwithstanding that the attempt was made by testimony, in the same form as that presented here to-day, to impeach the findings of the Court of Claims. But the Fifty-first Congress, a Republican Congress, passed that bill in this House with not more than 6 or 7 votes against it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will permit, I would like to ask him a question. I wish to know whether this claim is, as I understand him to state, a claim purely to recover money which was deposited as an indemnity for the good behavior of the people in that neighborhood. I would like to know what the testimony is on that subject. I do not think it makes any difference whether these persons are the same persons or not, unless it be shown that the claims are the same claims. These claims, as I understand, are very different claims. The application in this case is, as I understand, simply for the recovery of money deposited with Gen. Sullivan or somebody else as indemnity for the good behavior of the people of that neighborhood and of the Confederate forces.

Mr. ENLOE. I have here the affidavit of Gen. Sullivan——

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I happen to know Gen. Sullivan, and I know him to be an honest man. I know that during the war he made a brother-in-law of mine, living in Tennessee, deposit $500 in gold as security for his good behavior. When the war was over my brother-in-law undertook to recover that money, but not knowing how to go about it, he wrote to me to see whether I could not do something for him. He supposed the money had been taken by this Union general and converted to his own use. But I found that the money had been deposited in the subtreasury at St. Louis; and it was recovered. I am satisfied that Gen. Sullivan is an honest man. If he compelled these people to pay more money than would cover the damages which had been sustained by the burning of Government property, or the burning of the depot or anything of that kind—by way of indemnity against acts which were not committed—it seems to me that the parties are clearly entitled to recover the indemnity money paid by them, and that the question of loyalty does not arise in the case, and ought not to arise. But whether these are the same claims I do not know.

Mr. ENLOE. In connection with what the gentleman from Illinois has said, I wish to quote from the affidavit of Gen. Sullivan as published in the Senate report from which I have already been quoting—a report prepared by Associate Justice Jackson of the Supreme Court when he was a Senator from the State of Tennessee:

But we are not left to conjecture—

This is the language of the report—

But we are not left to conjecture as to the intention and purpose of Gen. Sullivan in making and collecting the assessment in question. He testifies under oath upon the subject, as follows:

"Order No. 15 was not directed against parties who had been tried and convicted of complicity in the raid, but as against those whom I believe could control and discourage future raids. Such parties as I believed to be influential and were interested in keeping the department quiet were selected and made to put up a money security, the amount based upon their ability in proportion to the loss sustained.

"(It was not intended that such money so collected should be used in any way to reimburse any person or individual who claimed a loss by such raid. That would have been insuring cotton-buyers against war risks.)

"What I was trying to do was to preserve quiet in my department, using as few troops as possible. I did not believe that the parties from whom I collected this money participated in the raid. I issued Order No. 15 to prevent further raids by compelling the coöperation of these parties with me in my endeavor to do so. My order was a perfect success. In my opinion the relief asked for should be granted, as this money was simply a bond for good behavior and compulsory assistance in helping me maintain order and quiet.

"Cotton purchasers were not looked upon with favor in Gen. Grant's command, and no officer would have dared make innocent parties pay their claims.

"I most positively state that it was in no manner intended by me to pay or adjust any such claims.

"JEREMIAH C. SULLIVAN.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3d day of March, 1884.

[L. S.] "JOHN E. HARVILL,

"Notary Public."

This affidavit was made while Gen. Sullivan was living in St. Louis.

Now, I want to yield to my colleague [Mr. COX]. As he led the Confederate raid on the occasion referred to, I wish him to make a statement in regard to his participation in it and what he knows about it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, when I was making that raid I never expected that I should be called upon to make a statement about it in the Congress of the United States. I do not know a single one of these claimants; but the facts in regard to that raid are about these: When that raid occurred (as will be remembered by any of the old soldiers on either side) Gen. Grant was approaching or attempting to approach Vicksburg by what was known as the land route—down the Illinois Central Railroad. He had already commenced, or soon afterwards commenced, that effort.

The Tennessee River was at that time regarded as the dividing line between the forces on the two sides. The Federal forces were west of the Tennessee River; the main army of the Confederate forces were east of the river, stationed at or near Murfreesboro, where a short time afterward the battle of Stone River was fought. I was then in the command of Gen. Forrest, and was watching the Tennessee River for two or three purposes: First, to see whether or not any of the Federal forces crossed the river and started eastward for the purpose of striking our forces at Murfreesboro, just before the battle was fought to which I have referred. Another object was to prevent any trading in cotton—to prevent the United States forces from getting our cotton—which I always thought was a very serious mistake; and to watch the gunboats which were going up and down the Tennessee River.

A gentleman named Lewis, whom I remember well—he was quite an aged man to be in the military service—was a member of my command. I sent him to Henderson Station, where this raid occurred, upon the pretext of purchasing salt, which was a very desirable commodity with us. He clothed himself in citizen's dress and went to Henderson Station, where he ascertained the extent of the forces collected there, and returned to me with his report in person. We crossed the Tennessee River (swimming it) about dusk one evening, and made the march that night (something like 40 miles) to Henderson Station, where there was a company of Illinois infantry.

Let me say in passing that I would be very glad to meet again the captain of that company, for he was a most excellent gentleman. We arrived there about daylight. The troops there were taken by surprise; they knew nothing of our approach. No citizen of that country ever spoke to me about the matter. The trouble I had with the citizens there was to keep them quiet. I found around the depot building a temporary kind of fortification made of cotton bales. The Illinois company stationed there (except four or five men who were up on the railroad) were inside the depot building asleep. A detachment of my command got in between the cotton bales and the building, and pulled out the telegraph wire that connected with Jackson, where Gen. Sullivan's forces were, for I knew all the time that they would be too much for me. I then came down with the rest of my command and demanded the surrender of those Federal forces. At first that gallant captain refused to surrender. When I used means to force him to do so he did surrender. But one man was lost; and that was through a very careless piece of work—which generally happens when we are fighting each other.

Mr. HULICK. Was that on account of your careless shooting?

Mr. COX. Yes, some of my men shot carelessly and killed one man in the depot building. For fear that there might be some misunderstanding on that point, I will state the circumstances. That man carelessly and foolishly pulled open the doors of the depot building fronting the railroad and fired at us when we were standing almost right at the door. One of our men fired in at the opening and killed him.

When that company had surrendered I mounted the men behind my own, and taking them across the Tennessee River sent them to Gen. Forrest, by whom they were paroled. Just as I got across the river, upon our side of the line, the forces from Jackson rode up on the opposite bank in pursuit of us.

I found at the depot building cotton lying around there for fortifications. I found what I knew were Government supplies inside the building. I had no means to take them away, though I would have been glad to do so; so I set fire to the building and destroyed the whole. At that time there was a cotton speculator there (though I did not know it) buying cotton. I met him dressed in citizen's clothes, and with his courteous manner he imposed upon me; and I turned him loose. If I had known at the time that he was a cotton speculator he would not have had much trouble afterward with the money which he had with him for the purchase of cotton. [Laughter.]

That is the history of that raid. We crossed the Tennessee River and joined our command under Gen. Forrest. We had the misfortune shortly afterward to meet the general spoken of by my colleague—Gen. Sullivan—and that fact cost me about six months' imprisonment at Camp Chase. I bear testimony to the fact that I found Gen. Sullivan a most genial and courteous gentleman.

That is the history of the transaction. If I may be permitted a remark in regard to the merits of this question I will only say this: We understood (for we were back on that line afterward) that so far as Gen. Grant's orders were concerned, when property belonging to the Government was seized and destroyed by the Confederate forces they could very well make this assessment upon citizens.

I knew Col. Haney, who made this assessment. But of the men presenting this claim I did not know a single one. I say most emphatically to the House that not one of them had any more connection with my making that raid than any gentleman sitting on this floor. I made the raid upon the report of one of my own men. And I trust that any gentleman who may hereafter meet the captain of that company will give him my regards. After we had crossed the river he came to me and told me that some of my men had taken from him the pictures of members of his family. I asked him if he would know the man who did it. He said he thought he would. I went with him, we found the man, and the pictures were returned to him. He was very grateful for what I did.

Afterward, when Gen. Sullivan captured us at Parkers Cross Roads in West Tennessee, not a great distance from the scene of the occurrence I have related, I was taken prisoner and sent to Camp Chase, at Cairo. One day while we were there my men sent me under guard to get some provisions a little better than the army supplies. I had a market basket on my arm. A gentleman came up to me and said, "I want your basket."

I very naturally protested against such treatment. I did not understand it. But he took the basket from me and carried it off. Of course when a bayonet is behind such a request you are not so likely to refuse it.

A MEMBER. Very easily persuaded, in other words. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Yes; you are persuaded without very much trouble. So I gave up the basket. After a short time, however this party who had taken it came back to me with the basket full of provisions and said, "I am the captain that you captured at Henderson, Tenn." He was a gallant man. [Applause.]

Mr. STORER. Mr. Chairman, nothing that occurred during the sessions of the Fifty-second Congress gave me more real pleasure than to hear the speech made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] similar to that which has just now been made by him upon the subject now attracting the attention of this committee. To find a man on the floor of this House participating in its proceedings as a Representative of the people of this country who twenty-five years ago was in command of a force hostile to this Government telling the story of the conflict that occurred and out of which the proposed legislation is asked in plain, effective, and on that account more eloquent language telling this House just exactly what was done on such an occasion, is certainly an incident that I think the whole country should be proud of.

I have told that story, or attempted to tell it, in Europe, in broken foreign languages, on different occasions, to friends of mine, and it was absolutely impossible to make them believe the fact that this Congress, governing this great country, was composed in part of men who twenty-five years ago had fought against the Government; that it was composed of men who had fought on different sides in the great conflict that then took place, and were able to tell the incidents of the exact hostile transactions on which legislation was asked. I repeat, I consider it something that the country should be proud to remember.

But, Mr. Chairman, my objection to this bill is not that the question on which the claim is based arises in the State of Tennessee, nor is it that some of these people whose names are mentioned in the bill may not have been loyal to the Government of the United States during that war. But it is a plain question of dollars and cents that confronts us; a question of figures which the history of legislation of this country in the last few years has written upon its statute-books.

It appears that there were $27,000 assessed upon and raised from the residents of this county in Tennessee in which the town of Henderson was situated. That money was paid into the Treasury under its proper fund, and remained there. No sooner had the war ceased, however, and the Representatives from the State of Tennessee taken their seats upon this floor, than there began to be a race of diligence from all sides as to who was entitled to a share of that fund of $27,000 remaining of the assessment upon the people of that county.

We find that back in the Forty-third Congress a part of this money was appropriated and paid over to certain claimants. Now, remember what I say. A part of this fund of $27,000 which we are asked to pay back to-day to certain claimants in Tennessee was paid to other claimants in the Forty-third Congress. Look at this very bill just now pending before us, and the report accompanying it, and you will find that the claim of these gentlemen, represented now by Mr. ENLOE of Tennessee, was reported in the Forty-sixth Congress. According to our knowledge of the length of time it takes bills to come up here and be considered in this manner it probably was introduced as early as the Forty-third Congress. There is no way, I admit, to verify the statement; but it is reasonable to assume that a bill which was considered and reported in the Forty-sixth Congress might well have been introduced for consideration as early as the Forty-third Congress. But in the Forty-third Congress we find that there was an act written upon the statute book in connection with this very matter.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. STORER. Certainly.

Mr. ENLOE. I think the gentleman from Ohio is mistaken as to the date of the first introduction of this bill into Congress. It was the Forty-fourth Congress in which it was first introduced.

Mr. STORER. I accept the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, for I only spoke of the Forty-third Congress on account of the general knowledge we all have of the time it takes these bills to come up. But in the Forty-sixth Congress, on the 31st day of March, 1875, nineteen years ago, it was enacted by the House and the Senate, and approved by the President, that $9,606 of this identical money that is now supposed to be in the Treasury of the United States was paid to a claimant by the name of John Aldredge. Let me read the entire act:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, to pay to John Aldredge, of McNairy County, Tenn., such sum not exceeding $9,606, as the Secretary may deem reasonable, for money paid into the Treasury of the United States by virtue of an assessment made upon the disloyal citizens of and around Henderson Station, Tenn., to make repayment for the destruction of cotton, the property of said Aldredge; the sum so to be paid to be charged to the account of captured and abandoned property.

Now, when this bill was adopted in the Fifty-second Congress it was admitted that this $27,000 was paid into the captured and abandoned property fund, and from that sum of $27,000, $9,606 was paid out in 1875, and you are now asking to appropriate and pay out of the Treasury of the United States $9,000 more than now remains in the Treasury of this fund, and that is my objection to the bill.

It is a race of diligence on the part of the claimants deeming themselves entitled to share in this money. That money was in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, exactly as a fund arising from the sale of property is in the hands of a marshal of the United States under the orders of the court.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Were there other similar acts of Congress passed?

Mr. STORER. I can not say. It has of course been impossible for me to trace up the history of each claimant. It was admitted on all sides, however, that this was one and the same fund, and the name of this Mr. Aldredge does not appear in the bill before the House.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a moment—we are all trying to get at the facts in this case—I will answer the inquiry which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has just asked. I will state that there have been no other bills passed, refunding any portion of this money, or paying any portion to anybody. I stated twice in my remarks a few moments ago that two of the claimants did come here.

These two cotton speculators, after they had applied to the Quartermaster-General, after they had applied to Gen. Grant and Gen. Sullivan, after they had applied to them all and been refused, came to Congress, as I stated, and got an appropriation of over $9,000, and got the money out of this fund; but the question that has been presented to every committee and to every Congress that has passed upon the case, the question which came up in the Forty-fourth Congress—but not in the Forty-third, for that Congress did not have these claimants before it—the question which has been decided every time has been this, that that money should not have been paid to those two men.

Seven times committees of this House have decided that. Two or three times committees of the Senate have decided that. Once the House has passed the bill, and once the Senate has passed the bill, and the question now is—and that is the only question in my mind—whether or not this $9,000, as a matter of law and right, should have been paid to these two men, and whether it should be deducted from the face of this bill. If that is the judgment of the House I am willing that it should be deducted; but I should want the judgment of the House upon it, because I do not think it should be deducted.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me to allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes.

Mr. COOMBS. What evidence have we that this money belongs to these various individuals named in the bill?

Mr. ENLOE. The evidence is in the records of the War Department, where, I understand, all the original papers are filed, showing the order levying the assessment, the name of each person assessed, the amount assessed in each case, and everything set out in detail; and I want to state further, while I am answering that, in order to show that Gen. Sullivan testifies correctly in regard to it, that when the claimants paid this money to the officer, after the assessment had been levied, three receipts were executed. One receipt was given to the man who paid the assessment, one receipt was turned over to the provost-marshal, and one receipt was sent to the War Department, so that these three receipts show that it was the intention to settle with these people, after having reimbursed the Government.

Mr. COOMBS. How does it happen that $9,000 was paid to these two men with that same evidence before Congress?

Mr. ENLOE. I suppose that must have happened in this way: that about the time the Forty-third Congress assembled and was in session here, those people down in that section of country scarcely knew whether the Government was friendly or hostile to them. They were in some doubt as to what was to be the policy toward the South. They were not here presenting their claims. A good part of the South was laboring under political disabilities at that time, and it never occurred to them that the Government would do them justice then; but subsequently, when the country went Democratic, and elected a Democratic Congress, they brought this bill here and presented their claim. If it had been presented in the Forty-third Congress, why then the Forty-third Congress could have passed on the whole question, and decided between these claimants, but I think it was not presented at that time, and did not come up until the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. COOMBS. Then it seems that not only did they do justice to these men, but they paid two of them money that did not belong to them.

Mr. ENLOE. Congress paid the two men who were cotton speculators, money which did not belong to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] seems to think that these parties who were paid were among the number who paid this assessment.

Mr. ENLOE. These two men who were paid this $9,000 never paid any part of this assessment, and they did not lose cotton of that value at Henderson, if they lost any.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Did my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] hear the speech of Gen. HENDERSON of Illinois a few moments ago?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes; I heard it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] to say that his brother-in-law was in this levy, and that he had to pay $500.

Mr. ENLOE. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HULL. He was in another similar levy.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. He was arrested by Gen. Sullivan and compelled to deposit $500 in gold for his good behavior, and that money was deposited in the subtreasury in St. Louis. Afterward an order on the treasurer at St. Louis was obtained by me from Gen. Sullivan for the money, and it was paid back.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I wanted to inquire whether the rest of these victims have pulled their money out by any such process?

Mr. ENLOE. No. Gen. Sullivan did not pay them. The fund passed out of his control when he was relieved of his position at Jackson, Tenn., as commanding officer. If that had not happened, Gen. Sullivan would no doubt have refunded the money to the others, just as he did to Gen. HENDERSON'S brother-in-law. That was his intention.

Mr. HUDSON. What is to prevent these parties from going to the Court of Claims and getting an adjudication there?

Mr. ENLOE. I suppose the Court of Claims could not take jurisdiction of this. There is no authority of Congress conferring that jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims.

Mr. HUDSON. Does not the Court of Claims have general jurisdiction over such matters?

Mr. BURROWS. The Court of Claims must first inquire into the loyalty of these claimants, and they have had one of these claims before them.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman is not stating it fairly in saying that the Court of Claims passed upon one of these claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] does not yield the floor. But one question can be asked and answered at a time. It is impossible to understand such a debate as is going on now. To whom does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] yield the floor?

Mr. STORER. I do not yield to anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STORER. I congratulate myself that my recollection of this matter and of the former debate has been verified by the gentleman from Tennessee. My knowledge, of course, is derived only from the records of Congress. The gentleman from Tennessee has some personal knowledge of the matter. I only wish to emphasize the fact, as a fact, that, in my judgment, it is a very dangerous thing for one Congress to proceed on the theory that a Congress nineteen years ago did not have the proper persons before it to adjudicate upon the rights of claimants. That would open the door, of course, to more fraud than the conscience of the chancellor would care to face. But there is no evidence before the House, and nothing can be gathered, but that all these people who were entitled to this money had made their rights known to this Committee on Claims in the Forty-third Congress.

Certainly the construction of the bill then passed is perfectly clear, that $9,000 was paid to some one that they considered had a right to it, out of this very fund which we are now asked to regard as intact. In taking the opposite view we should be violating the simplest principles of arithmetic and of common sense. I do not know anything about the persons to whom this money was paid. I do not know but what the Statutes at Large may be full of similar private acts paying people for this identical transaction. I have to take the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee on that subject. But when we do find that in a time comparatively fresh after this transaction a bill of this kind was approved by a committee of either House and was passed by both Houses of Congress and received the assent of the then Executive, it seems proper that it should be given the credence to which the judgment of a court would be entitled. It is perfectly clear that if there was a fund in the hands of any sheriff or marshal in a proceeding where anybody might make himself a party, like a proceeding in rem, after the distribution of that fund no new claimants could be allowed to come in and claim that fund had been improperly distributed, provided it had been paid out under the direction of the proper tribunal.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Suppose that in that case a part of the claimants were before the court and later the other claimants came in, who had not been served with notice, and showed that those who had had the distribution were fraudulent claimants and really had no title, would not the court review that judgment?

Mr. STORER. The court would review the judgment and get the money back from the people to whom it had been paid if it could; but it certainly would not attempt to pay the other parties out of a county fund or a State fund, or out of a contingent fund of the court, as we are asked to do here.

Mr. STOCKDALE. In this instance these people come to the very parties who paid out the money improperly, and who are able to refund it. This Congress paid it out, did it not?

Mr. STORER. I do not quite understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STOCKDALE. This Congress paid out that money, did it not?

Mr. STORER. The gentleman means the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes; but that is the same thing. Congress considered the question between those two claimants without notifying the others, and took a part of the money that belonged to these people and gave it to those people. Now, if these real owners had no notice of that proceeding and if the proceeding was wrongly taken—I do not know whether it was or not—but I say if it was, then these other people who really did own the fund ought not to suffer by it.

Mr. STORER. Of course, in one sense, they ought not. But let me answer the gentleman by a broader statement. I perhaps was unfortunate in seeming to limit the parellel I tried to draw between a court of law and the proceedings here in Congress. I take it for granted that a fund in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be distributed by Congress, carries with it notice to the world. Nobody can claim, with the slightest conscience, that he has not been notified of the distribution of that fund, and that is particularly true in this case, because we find that this money was distributed on the last day of a Congress, and in the very next Congress a bill was introduced to pay these people now before us that same money. So it would seem that they not only had notice, but that they sat back and allowed the money to be paid out, and after it was paid came in and demanded to participate in the same fund and have the money paid again.

Now, I tell the gentleman who presses this bill exactly what I told him in the last Congress, that I personally will not actively oppose this bill provided he gives credit to the United States Government for $9,600. But if he refuses to do that I shall oppose the bill in every way possible, and he will have to get a quorum and do whatever else may be necessary under the rules to pass the bill through this House.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the House I feel very much disturbed by the fact that neither in the report of the committee nor anywhere else up to the time it was brought out in debate was any mention made of the payment of this nine thousand dollars and odd. It seems to me that the committee in a proper performance of its duty should have mentioned that fact in its report. It is a part of the history of this case of which the House was kept in ignorance until it came out in debate, and I must say, sir, that after that revelation I want that committee to examine the whole question again as to the parties who are really entitled to this money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SAYERS. Before that motion is put I wish to say a word. I shall occupy the attention of the committee only a very few minutes. It is admitted that this claim, if it can be considered a claim at all, originates from acts done during the war. I hold in my hand the report of the committee that reported this claim, which was presented, I believe, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], and if I can have the attention of members I will refer to one paragraph in the report which determines my action in regard to this case. The committee say in discussing this claim:

> The right of the military commandant in time of war to order and enforce assessments upon hostile communities by way of reprisal, and to prevent the giving information and encouragement to enemies outside of his lines by enemy sympathizers within his lines, is well settled and affirmed by all writers upon the laws of war, and is a most salutary check upon predatory incursions by making the friends of those who commit the damage bear the brunt of the injury suffered.

The committee who reported this claim declare that to be the law of war, and if, under such law, the military commander had a right to make this assessment, then it does seem to me that the claimants in this case have no ground to stand upon in appealing to Congress for relief.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman understand that order of Gen. Grant to mean, and is it not the essence of the law, that where the Confederate troops destroyed property which belonged to the Government of the United States the officers had a right to assess the damage upon sympathizers with the forces that destroyed the property? But the gentleman will nowhere find in any kind of law, military or nonmilitary, any case where an assessment has been made upon citizens as sympathizers with either side for the payment of private claims on either side.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, it does not occur to me that the order of Gen. Grant has anything to do with this case at all. Here is a subordinate officer who makes an assessment——

Mr. COX. And Gen. Grant repudiates it afterwards.

Mr. SAYERS. Suppose Gen. Grant had forbidden his officers to make any assessment at all; or suppose he had forbidden his officers to destroy any property at all, you would have the order of the general. Now, would the gentleman from Mississippi contend that if, in violation of such order, the subordinates of Gen. Grant did cause property to be destroyed in time of war, or did levy and collect assessments, such circumstances would give these claimants any standing before Congress?

Mr. STOCKDALE. If I understand the proposition upon which I desire to interrogate the gentleman from Texas, that suggestion does not touch it at all.

Mr. SAYERS. I am taking the proposition of law as laid down by the committee that reported this case.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Gen. Sullivan does not pretend to say that this money was taken from sympathizers to pay anybody else, or to make up any loss. It was simply taken to put on a pressure so that these people might go out and prevent Confederate raids; and he never intended it to compensate anybody.

Mr. SAYERS. Those who advocate this claim, in order to bring the case within the rule laid down by the gentleman from Mississippi, must show affirmatively that this community was not in hostility to the Federal Government.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The community—oh, that is not the law.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I am taking the law as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, who presented this report, and I leave that question to be settled between him and the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COX. The assessment was made under the order of Gen. Sullivan, not for the purpose of compensating private individuals, but for the purpose of preventing the sympathizers with our side of the fight from assisting us in connection with these raids. He held that money, as he says himself, for the purpose of restraining those citizens from assisting us.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. What became of that money?

Mr. COX. It was paid into the Treasury of the United States. Now, here is a question of law—who is entitled to that money? It must belong either to the United States or to somebody else. Now, to whom shall it be paid? If you decide that it belongs to the United States, then you decide that Gen. Sullivan's order was not in compliance with law.

Mr. SAYERS. All I know about this case is what I find in the report made by the gentleman from Tennessee; and I find that instead of this money being collected and held as a guarantee against the unlawful action of these people, a portion of it was for cotton belonging to the United States which had been burned, and went to make compensation for the cotton.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman will examine that report (which he evidently has not done), he will find that there was no appropriation of any portion of this money to pay the Government of the United States for cotton destroyed.

Mr. SAYERS. I have not said that there was.

Mr. ENLOE. What was the gentleman's statement?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will listen to me, he will find that I am not misquoting his report. I have read the report——

Mr. ENLOE. You are quoting a report of Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin.

Mr. SAYERS. Which you indorse and make a part of your report.

Mr. ENLOE. I do. Now, what was the gentleman's statement?

Mr. SAYERS. A board was appointed on the 2d day of December; and the board so appointed assessed the value of the property captured and destroyed at a grand total of $26,751.36, of which $5,080 was for the destruction of property belonging to the United States. That is what this report states, and that is just what I have said. So that the sole purpose of this assessment was not to prevent the people interested in giving aid and comfort to the Confederate government from doing so.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, let me call the gentleman's attention right there to the fact that this board was constituted by a subordinate officer under the command of Gen. Sullivan, and executed an order issued by Gen. Sullivan; but the board had no authority to estimate any damages to private parties under that order. It was never the intention of the commanding officer issuing the order that any inquiry should be made as to what individuals might have lost; the purpose was to inquire what the Government had lost. But the board exceeded its authority in the execution of the order.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly; and if they exceeded their authority it became a tort; and under the principle of law laid down by the gentleman in his report these claimants have no right to demand payment of the Government.

Mr. ENLOE. Let me ask the gentleman this question: How can the Government of the United States become the beneficiary of a tort? How can the Government of the United States take this money and appropriate it, when the assessment was levied in violation of the order and the money was paid in the Treasury, not in pursuance of the purpose of the commanding officer who issued the order?

Mr. SAYERS. Now, I will call the gentleman's attention to two other paragraphs in this report:

This committee have maintained and still adhere to the doctrine that no nation is liable for the willful torts of its soldiery.

But was this assessment a tort within the meaning of such well-established doctrine?

This case, Mr. Chairman, must rest either upon a contract, express or implied, or a tort. Gentlemen will not contend that there was a contract. Hence this claim must be based upon a tort. The very fact of a levy and a collection by force, without the consent of the party affected and who paid the money illegally assessed, as claimed by gentlemen representing these claimants, constitutes a tort—nothing but a tort.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. If my friend from Texas will allow me a moment, I wish to say that I do not know whether I am in favor of this bill; but it does seem to me that the question involved is not so much a question of law as a question of fact; and for the purpose of getting at the facts I will read the language of Gen. Sullivan, the man who ordered this assessment to be made. This is the statement he has sworn to, if the paper before me, which purports to be his affidavit, is really such. He says:

Owing to the fact that all my books and papers relating to my military transactions are now in the East, and to the lapse of time, it is impossible for me to give a statement in detail of the result of Order No. 15. I can only say, in a general way, that I sent for a number of the leading and substantial citizens of the surrounding country, and having inquired into the standing and circumstances of each, I levied assessments upon a large number of such persons in proportion to the standing and ability of each and gave them the option either to pay the respective amounts or go to Alton, with the distinct understanding between those persons and myself that the money so collected was to be held as security for the peaceful conduct of their neighborhood, and that if no more raids occurred the money was to be returned to them.

Mr. HULL. Why was not the $27,000 returned?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Here is what Gen. Sullivan says further:

Cotton purchasers were not looked upon with favor in Gen. Grant's command, and no officer would have dared make innocent parties pay their claims. I most positively state that it was in no manner intended by me to pay or adjust any such claims.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course I do not know Gen. Sullivan——

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I do.

Mr. SAYERS. But I take it that he is an honorable gentleman and has stated the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so far as his recollection goes. But unfortunately we have the admissions of the committee in their report upon this bill. Let us see what they say about this matter:

A portion of this money was used for the indemnification of the Federal Government for the destruction of property belonging to it.

Now, I understand my friend from Illinois to say that the gentleman whose communication he has just read——

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. It is his affidavit.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, his affidavit. The gentleman was in command, as I understand, at that time. Is that so?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Oh, yes; he was in command.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I will ask my friend from Illinois this question: If the assessment was made for the purpose indicated in that affidavit, why was it that this same officer used that money for the indemnification of the loss of the Government in consequence of the raid?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. The assessment was levied for that purpose, but there was in excess of that, as I understand it, the amount that was levied for the purpose of maintaining good order in that community.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Gen. Sullivan does not say so.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not so understand from his affidavit or from the report.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I would like to read a little further. And here is the trouble with me in regard to it. Gen. Sullivan says:

After so great a lapse of time, and in the absence of my books and papers, I can not from memory give the names of the persons who paid the assessments, nor the amount paid by any of them. I know, however, that many thousands of dollars were collected, a careful and accurate record of which was made and preserved, and all the money so paid was then, to the best of my recollection, sent by me to the United States subtreasury at St. Louis and placed on deposit under such circumstances, to the best of my recollection as would have enabled me to withdraw it and refund it to the parties at the proper time, but in the spring of 1863 I was relieved of the command of the Department of West Tennessee and was placed on Gen. Grant's staff.

Now, that record, it seems to me, ought to be produced, for possibly it would show from whom the money was actually collected.

Mr. SAYERS. It occurs to me that the affidavit the gentleman from Illinois has been reading from refers to another transaction.

Mr. HULL. Manifestly a different transaction.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think there can be no doubt of that.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I think not. He is referring to what occurred at Henderson Station. The language of the affidavit clearly points that out.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the statement in the report is very different from the statement in the affidavit.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Let me say that I have been reading only what Gen. Sullivan says.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. ENLOE. I ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to give as much light on this as possible, so as to enable members to know exactly how the case stands.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I ask the Chair to have the rule enforced in regard to smoking on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House, no member shall walk out of or across the Hall; nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the Sergeant-at-Arms, if there is one on the floor, or the representative of the Doorkeeper, to see that this order is strictly enforced.

To whom does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SAYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, in order to get as much light as possible on this subject, I wish to read two extracts from the record of the case here, which will throw light upon this question, because they bear directly upon the issue presented.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the authority from which the gentleman reads?

Mr. ENLOE. I am reading now from the report of the Quartermaster-General. Gen. Meigs, in a letter on this subject, says:

Gen. Grant, then commanding, ordered a war levy upon neighboring rebels, and the full value of the United States property and of the cotton (private property) destroyed appears to have been collected. Col. Hillyer states that the money thus collected exceeded the amount which Gen. Grant had intended to have collected, and that Gen. Grant refused to permit it to be applied to the payment of private losses and damages.

And that confirms Gen. Sullivan's statement.

Mr. SAYERS. But is this the particular transaction to which Gen. Sullivan alludes in that letter?

Mr. ENLOE. Exactly this particular case. In the testimony of Col. Hillyer we find this language:

Gen. Sullivan collected a much larger sum than was required for these purposes, and reported the excess to Gen. Grant, with a statement that parties who had had cotton destroyed by guerrillas—claimed that he (Gen. Grant) intended their losses should be made good to them out of this fund. Gen. Grant in reply stated that it was not true that he so intended; that the Army was not an insurance company to indemnify cotton speculators for losses in their operations, and that no part of this money rightfully belonged to them, nor should be paid to them; that he did not intend that any assessment should be made in excess of an amount sufficient to indemnify the Government, etc.

That was Col. Cox's command. [Laughter.]

Now, there is the testimony of Col. Hillyer; there is the testimony of Gen. Sullivan, the officer in command; and these are facts to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas that this fund, after indemnifying the Government, was paid over to the provost-marshal at Jackson, Tenn., and when Gen. Sullivan was removed under Gen. Grant's order it was paid to the officer in command at Memphis, and from him went into the Treasury of the United States at Washington. These are the facts.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to read a little further from the report of the gentleman from Tennessee. He says:

The committee have maintained and still adhere to the doctrine that no nation is liable for the willful torts of its soldiery. But was this assessment a tort within the meaning of such well-established doctrine? It is submitted that this wrong is clearly without the rule, because this assessment was collected—

And here is his reason for it—

By an officer of high rank commanding a military district in the execution of an office giving him colorable authority, to say the least, to do the act he did; and that act was ratified by the general commanding, impliedly at least, by not ordering restitution where the excessive assessment came to his knowledge.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. STOCKDALE. This fund, I understand from what has just been read, Gen. Sullivan stated was not intended to be kept; and if raids did not occur in that community it would be returned to these individuals. The raids did not occur. Now, this money was turned into the Treasury of the United States, and if the Government of the United States will not pay for the tort of its soldiery it ought not to be benefited by the torts of the soldiery and keep this identical money.

Mr. SAYERS. I am inclined to believe that the statement read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] was applicable to another matter entirely, different from the levy which is set forth in the report of the committee.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman from Texas mean to state that I would misrepresent to this House the facts of the case?

Mr. SAYERS. I am not referring to the gentleman at all in this connection. I refer now to what was read by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ENLOE. You have been referring to the report of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I am now referring to the statement of Gen. Sullivan.

Mr. ENLOE. It was made with direct reference to this case.

Mr. SAYERS. I refer to a statement read by the gentleman from Illinois, which I say I am inclined to think refers not to this case.

Mr. ENLOE. Gen. Sullivan distinctly refers to this case and no other.

Mr. SAYERS. He says he can not recall the facts after this lapse of time.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman question the truth of the affidavit?

Mr. SAYERS. No; but it is not improbable, notwithstanding that he intended to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that he may have been mistaken and referred to another transaction.

Mr. HULL. Does he not refer to his entire military district? Is not that the affidavit?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so.

Mr. HULL. And not to a specific case,

Mr. ENLOE. It is not necessary to misrepresent the records of the case.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no such intention.

Mr. ENLOE. He refers to this particular case and made an affidavit about it.

Mr. SAYERS. Was this money sent directly by Gen. Sullivan to the Treasurer?

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Where did he send it?

Mr. ENLOE. To Memphis, Tenn. He was relieved of the command at Jackson under the order of Gen. Grant. Part of it was sent to Col. Hillyer at Memphis, and part to Col. Reynolds, the Quartermaster, who accounted for it to the Treasury.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire the committee to thoroughly understand the nature of this claim. I believe it is a claim growing out of a trespass during the war; and though the General Government has possession of the money, and though it may be in the Treasury, this is like any other act, whether legal or illegal, done in the midst of war.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, I will state to the gentleman from Texas right at that point——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Has the gentleman from Texas made any inquiries whatsoever as to the propriety or impropriety of the payment of $9,000 to two of these claimants.

Mr. SAYERS. I know nothing about this matter except what has transpired here.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman from Texas has with a good deal of ingenuity and considerable exhibition of the capacity of a lawyer to confuse a case that is pefectly clear, tangled this up just as much as he was able to do, not with any great force of argument against the case, I must say to him, and not with any clear conception of the law, if he has stated correctly his conception of the law. But I understand, of course, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is very anxious that the record of this Congress shall surpass that of all others for economy; and he must necessarily, as I have seen other chairmen of Committees on Appropriations do, make some very fine legal arguments to this House in order to prevent it from doing justice, and in that way attempt to prevent the increase of appropriations.

But to come right to what we are discussing, Quartermaster-General Meigs accounts for this fund, and I will quote from his statement in a letter addressed to the Secretary of War on the 2d of December, 1871. The portion of the letter which I read before to the gentleman from Texas, I will not repeat.

Mr. SAYERS. Before the gentleman proceeds farther I should like to call his attention to just one point involved in this case. I do not desire to do any injustice to the facts, nor to misrepresent the case; but some questions have arisen as to whether the affidavit made by Gen. Sullivan includes this particular occurrence or not.

Mr. ENLOE. That question is only in the mind of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to see if the report made by yourself has not tended to arouse the same apprehension in the minds of others as well as of myself. Now, I understand that Gen. Sullivan in his affidavit refers only to moneys that were collected under his order and by his order. Is not that so?

Mr. ENLOE. He has referred to this particular money. That is what he has testified about.

Mr. SAYERS. I am speaking of his affidavit.

Mr. ENLOE. That affidavit was made upon the application of the parties who are claimants here. They had Gen. Sullivan furnish this affidavit in regard to this transaction. They applied to him for it.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, according to the statement in the report of the committee, this levy was not made by Gen. Sullivan at all.

Mr. ENLOE. It was collected under his order. Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. SAYERS. I will read it to the gentleman and let him state.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well; let the gentleman read it.

Mr. SAYERS (reading)—

Thereupon, on the 2d day of December following, the commandant of the Union forces at the post of Bethel, Tenn. (Col. J. N. Haynie, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers), appointed a board of officers to investigate the losses sustained and appraise the damages suffered from the raid, with a view to an assessment by way of reprisal upon rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson.

Then the report goes on to detail the action of the board, and continues—

Upon this report being made, Col. Haynie ordered an assessment of this amount to be levied upon the rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed with my remarks, I will do so. I was going to account for the disposition made of this money, but probably it would be better to take up the argument right where the gentleman left it. In the Senate report, to which I have before referred, which report was made by Mr. Jackson, now justice of the Supreme Court, this recital of facts is made:

On the 25th of November, 1862, a battalion of rebel soldiers, under command of Col. Cox, made a raid upon a small force of Union troops stationed at Henderson, a depot station on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, in the State of Tennessee. The raiding party captured the Union troops with their arms and camp equipage, destroyed the depot building and water tank belonging to the railway company, and burned a quantity of cotton belonging to private individuals, together with a small quantity supposed to be the property of the Government, but which in fact also belonged to private parties as shown by the proof. Most of the cotton so destroyed had been previously seized by the Federal forces while in transit to Memphis, and used for the purpose of breastworks or barricades at said station.

On the 2d December following the raid, the commandant of the Union forces at the post of Bethel, Tenn. (another station on said railroad 8 or 10 miles south of Henderson), Col. I. N. Haynie, Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, appointed a board of officers to investigate the losses sustained and damage done by the raid with a view to an assessment by way of reprisal upon the inhabitants in and about Henderson. The board so appointed reported to Col. Haynie that the damage done amounted to $26,751.36, as follows:

Cotton burned of John Aldridge and Smith I. Patterson	$9,606.36
Cotton burned of W. D. Silva	2,565.00
Cotton burned of Willis N. Arnold	6,000.00
Cotton burned of United States	1,900.00
Water tank Mobile and Ohio Railroad	1,500.00
Depot house property of Mobile and Ohio Railroad	2,000.00
Enfield rifles, Company B, Forty-ninth Illinois Volunteers	680.00
Camp equipage	2,500.00
Total	26,751.36

Upon this report being submitted Col. Haynie caused an assessment of this amount to be made upon certain citizens (the claimants) residing in and about the village of Henderson, and on the 9th December, 1862, he reported his action in the premises to his immediate superior, Brig. Gen. J. C. Sullivan, commanding the district, with headquarters at Jackson, Tenn., about 15 miles north of Henderson, and requested that "an order be issued directing the collection and disbursement of the amount assessed."

On the 12th December, 1862, Gen. Sullivan, by Special Order No. 15, directed Col. Haynie to collect said sum of $26,751.36 from the parties assessed, but instead of directing its disbursement, as requested by Col. Haynie, Gen. Sullivan ordered him to "pay over the amount to Col. J. D. Webster, superintendent United States military railroads."

The first installment collected, amounting to $5,411.60, was paid over to Col. J. D. Webster. The second installment of $8,388.20 was paid over January 15, 1863, to Gen. Sullivan, who referred the matter to Maj. Gen. Grant, then at Memphis, Tenn., for orders as to what disposition he should make of the funds. Gen. Grant replied to Gen. Sullivan by telegram under date of January 21, 1863, ordering him to turn the money over to the provost-marshal at Jackson, Tenn., Maj. M. Smith. This was done at once, and Maj. Smith gave to Gen. Sullivan a receipt, as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS, DISTRICT OF JACKSON,
"SIXTEENTH ARMY CORPS, DEPARTMENT OF TENNESSEE,
"Jackson, Tenn., January 21, 1863.

"Received of Brig. Gen. Jere. C. Sullivan, commanding district of Jackson, $8,388.20, being collection made by the commanding officer at post of Bethel, Tenn., from certain disloyal persons, under Special Order No. 15, section 4, from these headquarters, dated Debember 12, 1862, and which is now under order, by telegraph of this date from Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant, at Memphis, Tenn., ordered to be turned over to the district provost-marshal

"M. SMITH,
"Major, and District Provost-Marshal, District of Jackson,
"Department of Tennessee."

On January 23, 1863, Gen. Grant, by telegram from Memphis, Tenn., ordered Maj. Smith to turn over the funds received from Gen. Sullivan to the provost-marshal-general, Col. William S. Hillyer, which was done.

The Quartermaster-General, Meigs, testifying as to this same fund, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of War on the 2d of December, 1871, says:

Gen. Grant, then commanding, ordered a war levy upon neighboring rebels, and the full value of the United States property and of the cotton (private property) destroyed, appears to have been collected. Col. Hillyer states that the money thus collected exceeded the amount which Gen. Grant had intended to have collected, and that Gen. Grant refused to permit it to be applied to the payment of private losses and damages.

Part of the contribution or levy appears to have gone into the military railroad department, being that which represents the value of public property destroyed.

Part of the remainder, viz, $30,000, went into the hands of the quartermaster, Col. C. A. Reynolds, as appears from his accounts on file at the Treasury.

Col. Reynolds, it appears, turned in more than the amount of this assessment, probably including some money derived from other sources.

Now, it seems to me this is plain enough. I do not see how it can be made any plainer that this money was collected from these people, that it was collected under an order from Gen. Sullivan for a specific purpose, and that a portion of it was applied for that purpose, and the remainder held and turned into the Treasury, where it has been for nearly thirty years. These people are honestly and legally entitled to it, and if not strictly entitled to it as a matter of law they are entitled to it as a matter of equity, and no gentleman who is actuated by a sense of justice would be willing because the Government has the power to refuse to authorize the payment of this money to those claimants. I do not think any consideration as to how much it will swell the appropriations of this Congress ought to cut any figure in it. I do not think that ought to weigh a feather's weight. I believe that every debt the Government owes ought to be adjudicated and paid, and the Government is amply able to pay everything that it owes. I hope the House will now consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, is it in order——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] yield?

Mr. ENLOE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi in a moment.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that of this fund of $27,000 there has been paid out already, by act of Congress, about $9,000, leaving thereby about $18,000.

Mr. ENLOE. About $15,000 or $16,000.

Mr. HULICK. If this appropriation should be made, what evidence have we that in this Congress or some other Congress some other claimants may not come up to claim this very fund, the former act having been passed in favor of persons who were not legally entitled to the money? What evidence have the committee that these persons mentioned in this bill are the proper owners, and the only proper owners.

Mr. ENLOE. We have the records from the War Department showing the parties from whom this money was collected; and I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK] that not one cent of this assessment was paid by the persons who received the $9,000. They came to Congress when these other claimants were not here, and presented their claims and asked for a portion of this fund. The Forty-third Congress allowed them the money, and I will say to the gentleman that the theory upon which every committee has proceeded since then in the consideration of this question in both Houses, and the theory upon which both Houses of Congress have proceeded, is that these persons were not entitled to that $9,000.

Mr. BYNUM. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to admit that so far as the levying and collection of this assessment went to remunerate losses sustained by the Government it was valid. Now, why should not that five thousand and odd dollars be taken out?

Mr. ENLOE. That has already been taken out.

Mr. BYNUM. You do not propose to appropriate that?

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know why the committee did not state the fact that $9,300 of this money had been paid under a former appropriation by Congress, and why that fact was left out, to be brought out in debate?

Mr. ENLOE. Because the committee did not think that the persons to whom that money was paid had any claim whatever upon this fund.

A MEMBER. But that money is not in the Treasury now.

Mr. ENLOE. What difference does that make? It ought to be there. The Government of the United States became a trustee for these parties when it assumed control of this fund. If it took the money as a matter of law and is legally entitled to keep it, then it does not owe these parties a single cent, but if it is going to deal equitably with them, then it ought to pay this money to the people to whom it belongs.

Mr. COOMBS. I am speaking as to the committee's fairness in dealing with the House. Is not the fact of the payment of that $9,000 a part of the history of this case, and should it not have come out in the report of the committee?

Mr. ENLOE. I will state to the gentleman that some eight or ten committees of the House and of the Senate have passed on this claim, and the report now before the House was written by Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin, as honorable a gentleman as any member of this House, and as good a Democrat.

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, his being a Democrat has nothing to do with it.

Mr. ENLOE. And neither Gen. Bragg nor any other person who has considered the matter in committee has ever thought that the fact that those two parties came here and got $9,000 had any connection whatever with this claim, and it has not any connection with it.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] to yield the floor, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to stand here as a target and answer all these questions, but——

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair is not disposed to let the gentleman overrun his time. [Laughter.] The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] that he may offer a substitute, and I reserve the balance of my time for the purpose of making a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio desires to offer a substitute at this time for the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will send up his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I consent that it shall be read in my time.

The amendment of Mr. STORER was read, as follows:

That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims with instructions to deduct from the sum now carried thereby the sum of $9,606 heretofore, to wit, March 3, 1875, appropriated therefrom and ordered to be paid to James Aldredge, and with further instructions to investigate what, if any, further and other sums have been appropriated and paid, either by Congress or otherwise, therefrom, and to deduct the same, if any be ascertained, from the amount sought to be carried by this bill, and re-report this bill, thus amended, to the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, several things appear to me to be plain in this case. One is that the United States Government obtained possession of $22,221.26 which it would be wrong for the Government to retain because the money does not belong to the Government, whomsoever else it may belong to. Then it seems to me that another thing is plain, namely, that the Government of the United States ought not to pay out of the Treasury anything more than the fund which it has obtained; and, it appearing from the evidence that the United States Government has already paid $9,000 and over, I have consented that this substitute might be offered by the gentleman from Ohio in my time, in order to obtain an opportunity to bring up the question of modifying the bill. I shall, however, present later an amendment involving the same idea, with the view of having the matter settled here and now, for fear that if the bill goes back to the committee it will not be reported again to this Congress, and these people will not get the money to which they are entitled.

Now, it appears that out of this $22,221.26 a special fund which the United States Government holds as a trustee for somebody, a previous Congress considered it proper to pay $9,000 to certain persons who had lost $9,000 worth of property by this raid. Had I been a member of that Congress I would have voted against that bill because I do not think it was a right appropriation of the money. So far as these parties are concerned they ought to have had part of it. But there is the right of the Government to be considered on the other side, and it is a right of the Government that it shall not be required to pay back more than it received. I am not in favor of going to the extent of voting out of the general funds in the Treasury $9,000 to make good to these people a loss which has accrued, perhaps, by their own laches in holding back and allowing someone else to come in ahead of them. I shall later offer an amendment reducing the total amount carried by the bill from $22,271.26 to $13,271.26 and reducing the items proportionally.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, something has been said in debating this question about the right of an army to levy contributions upon citizens as an indemnity, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] has given us an illustration of that. It has been attempted to make it appear here that a portion of this fund of $26,000 was an indemnity to protect the community. Now, the report read by the gentleman from Tennessee shows that the whole of this amount was levied to reimburse certain individuals who are named with the exact sums of money that they had lost, including the United States, and the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, making a total of $26,751.36.

This shows that not one dollar of it was levied as an indemnity fund to protect the army or to guard against the raids of guerrillas or anybody else. At the time the levy was made and intended, as I suppose, to pay for property destroyed belonging to the individuals named in the report of the commissioners who made the assessment, and it would have been paid to those individuals had not the colonel who received the money become, as he says himself, somewhat nervous in holding the money and asked Gen. Grant's instructions. Gen. Grant would not permit the money to be paid to those individuals but ordered it turned over to the Government. Now, I would like to know why this money should be returned as an indemnity fund when every dollar of it was levied for the specific purpose of reimbursing certain parties for the destruction of property, and when a portion of it has been paid for that purpose and all of it would have been so paid had not Gen. Grant interfered and ordered it to be turned over to another department of the Government.

Mr. HERMANN. I understand that the report which is here before us states distinctly that this assessment was made upon the express condition that it should be a guaranty against further raids, and also states that there were no further raids. Consequently, this money having been paid upon that condition, it having been held upon that condition, and there having been no further raids, the money is now justly due and payable to the parties who were assessed.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That I understood to be the claim made by the brother-in-law of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] in the case to which that gentleman referred.

Mr. HERMANN. But it was a part of this same money.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, no; it had nothing at all to do with this case. The report says that every dollar of this money was collected for the purpose of paying the individuals named.

Mr. BYNUM. But the reason that money was turned over to the Government was because Gen. Grant held that the assessment made to indemnity for private losses was improperly and illegally made, and that the money was never intended to be used for that purpose. While it was assessed for that purpose by the colonel and by the commissioners, the assessment for that purpose was held by Gen. Grant to be unlawful, and it should have been returned to the parties, but instead it was turned over to the Government.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But the report of the committee seems to show that if it had been levied for the purpose of indemnifying individual losses, that was proper under the laws of war.

Mr. BYNUM. No; I think the gentleman misconstrues the report. The law, according to Gen. Grant's construction of it, was that the authority to levy an indemnity only extended to reimbursing the Government, but the board went further and illegally levied a sum sufficient to reimburse every person who had suffered, and to that extent Gen. Grant held the assessment to be illegal.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The report of Gen. Grant was not put upon that ground at all, as it was read here by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], while the report of the committee favoring the passage of this bill as it was read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] upholds the doctrine of the right to levy an assessment to reimburse parties for loss of property as set out in this bill.

Mr. BYNUM. Not private losses at all.

Mr. NORTHWAY. So that the claim made by the gentleman from Tennessee in response to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] that all of this money, except something over $5,000, was levied as an indemnity fund in the expectation that it would be returned, is not correct. The gentleman from Tennessee read here a portion of the statement of Gen. Sullivan to show that this assessment was levied as an indemnity fund, but he afterward reads a statement that every dollar was collected to repay the losses of individuals—not a cent of it as an indemnity fund or with any agreement that the money should be returned. The case mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] is entirely different. In that case a sum of $500 was collected as an indemnity fund and turned over to the subtreasury, with an agreement that it should be returned in case there should be no more raids; and subsequently the money was returned.

Mr. HULL. Was not the case referred to by the gentleman from Illinois a personal guarantee of the individual that he himself would not misbehave, the agreement being that if he conducted himself properly the money would be returned?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly. It was a guarantee fund, accompanied with an agreement that it should be returned on certain conditions; and those conditions being fulfilled, it was returned. But in the case now before us, not a dollar of the money was collected for any such purpose or with any such understanding.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true, also, that the general levying the assessment in this case levied it for the purpose of paying for property destroyed?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. And it would have been paid over if Gen. Grant had not decided against that course?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. And the Congress of the United States, which met immediately afterward, had the right to say what parties should have the money?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Of course.

Mr. HULL. And is not that conclusive, so far as the $9,000 is concerned?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, more than thirty-one years after the levying of an assessment in time of war we are asked to pay money to men who sympathized with the rebellion. I for one object to this as a most dangerous precedent. If the levy was proper, not one dollar of the fund collected should be repaid to any claimant.

It is admitted in the report now before the Committee of the Whole that this levy was made by way of reprisal; that is the language used two or three times in this report. Now, if such was the fact, no trust relation could arise in reference to this fund.

The gentleman from Tennessee talks about a debt. There is no question of debt here. This occurrence was in time of war. It was within the legal power and right of the United States officer to levy this assessment. That is conceded. It is admitted that Col. Haynie, who made the levy, made it properly, and that the money was collected. All that Brig. Gen. Sullivan could do was to approve the order and the proceedings of Col. Haynie and of the board of officers appointed by him. Gen. Sullivan had no power to make any reservation or to have any secret understanding as to the conditions under which the United States should hold this fund thereafter. I say that no trust relation of any sort could arise under such circumstances, and that not one dollar of this money should be repaid; because it is conceded that these men upon whom the levy was made were at the time rebel sympathizers. No claim is made here that they sympathized with the Union cause. If this money was collected from them, it was rightfully collected, and should remain in the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER].

Mr. BURROWS. A while ago I offered an amendment which, in view of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, I will now withdraw.

The substitute offered by Mr. STORER was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. This is offered as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] that he withdraw at the close of his substitute the words "and re-report the bill thus amended to the House." That language might be construed as making this a privileged matter.

Mr. STORER. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, and modify my substitute by withdrawing the last clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not understand that general debate has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman rose to address the committee, and the Chair was about to put the question. The Chair does not think this motion is debatable.

Mr. ENLOE. Is not an amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has made a motion, which would close the debate and lay the bill aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass; and the gentleman from Ohio moves as a substitute for that motion to lay the bill aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation which has just been read.

Mr. ENLOE. That is not my understanding of the gentleman's motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it again.

The Clerk again read the substitute of Mr. STORER.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is that instead of laying the bill aside with the recommendation that it be reported favorably, it be reported to the House with a recommendation as read.

Mr. ENLOE. I certainly did not understand that the effect of allowing the gentleman from Ohio to offer that amendment was to prevent any further discussion of the matter. I do not desire further time for the discussion of the bill except that I would like time enough to get from the Senate a bill which in a former session of Congress was modeled exactly upon the proposition of the gentleman. I have sent for that bill; if it were here it might, if the House so desired, be voted upon without recommitting the bill to the Committee on War Claims.

If it should be recommitted it would, when returned to the House, take its place at the foot of the Calendar, which would be equivalent to defeating it for the remainder of this Congress. I would be glad to have an opportunity to obtain from the Senate a bill covering exactly the gentleman's proposition—a bill which was offered in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. STORER. My proposition, I will state to the gentleman, consists of two branches—one to deduct the $9,606; the other, to ascertain whether any other sums have been paid to anybody out of this fund. There are two distinct propositions.

Mr. ENLOE. I know that nothing of that sort has in fact taken place; and the proposition if adopted means simply the defeat of this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ENLOE) there were—ayes 67, noes 18.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. BUNN. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, in making the point of no quorum, that I wish to ask unanimous consent when the committee reports this bill back, that it may take its place on the Calendar where it is now. If so, I will make no further objection; otherwise I will be compelled to contest the matter as far as I can.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point of order that that can not be done in committee. It can only be done in the House.

Mr. BLAND. But the committee can make their report in such shape as to recommend to the House that such action be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to state that it thinks the control of the bill to that extent would be in the committee, because if the words had not been stricken out that were embodied in the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER]—his first motion—the Chair thinks it would have carried the right to report at any time for immediate consideration.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SCRANTON. I object.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Private Calendar had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with the recommendation that they pass.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time and passed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 522) for the relief of Benjamin Alford;

A bill (H. R. 509) for the relief of F. Y. Ramsey, the heir at law and distributee of Joseph Ramsey; and

A bill (H. R. 995) for the relief of J. M. Billings.

On motion of Mr. BUNN, a motion to reconsider the several votes taken was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted to Mr. TUCKER for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARKE of Alabama, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENDRIX, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHEELER of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, for ten days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SICKLES, for three days, on account of ill health.

To Mr. CUMMINGS, for two days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. HICKS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

PRESERVATION OF FUR SEALS.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill S. 1928.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will make a brief statement to the members of the House so that they may understand the reason for making this request. A mistake in one word was made at the Government Printing Office in printing the bill "to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris." The word "exclusive" was printed in the bill when it should have been "inclusive." The bill as printed provides for the protection of fur seals in the waters surrounding the Pribilof Islands, within a zone of 60 geographical miles around said islands, exclusive of the territorial waters. It should have been "inclusive of the territorial waters," meaning 60 miles from the shore.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals," approved April 6, 1894, be amended by striking out the word "exclusive" where it occurs in said section 1 and inserting the word "inclusive," so that said section will read:

"That no citizen of the United States, or person owing the duty of obedience to the laws or the treaties of the United States, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or pursue, at any time, or in any manner whatever, outside of territorial waters, any fur seal in the waters surrounding the Pribilov Islands within a zone of 60 geographical miles (60 to a degree of latitude) around said islands, inclusive of the territorial waters."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand this simply changes one word which was inaccurately printed.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. That is all.

Mr. HITT. The word is quite important because it violates the award if it be printed "exclusive." It should be made to conform to the language of the award, using the word "inclusive."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. It makes the legislation conform strictly to the award.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement and completion of said bridge authorized by said act, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot passenger bridge at Burlington, Iowa," approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890, be, and are hereby, each extended two years from the passage of this act.

There being no objection the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GEAR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KILGORE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know what the regular order is.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of private business today.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before that question is submitted, I rise to what I believe to be a privileged matter. The House gave the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] unanimous consent to print in the RECORD remarks which it was agreed this morning should be omitted. The gentleman made the request himself, but states that he intended it to be a permission to print them in the permanent RECORD, and not in the daily RECORD, inasmuch as they have already been printed in that. His request is, therefore, to apply to the permanent RECORD only.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It will be understood, I presume, that I am permitted to make the usual revision of them if I should regard it as proper.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to state that on a call of the House yesterday I was absent because of the fact that I was ill and confined to my room. I sent to one of my colleagues to ask him to make that excuse to the House for my absence, but in the press of business the matter was overlooked. I make this explanation to the House now so that it will go into the RECORD and explain my absence.

Mr. KILGORE. Regular order.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Speaker has just stated that the regular order is the consideration of private business. The very next bill on the Private Calendar is one that makes no appropriation, and I ask unanimous consent to take it up.

The SPEAKER. It must be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the reason why I made the suggestion that the House now take a recess, was because I knew the regular order was demanded, and I knew also that there was a bill before the committee which it had been unable to finish, and which would be reached before the bill referred to by the gentleman from Alabama could be considered. I did not see that anything could be done this evening, with so many members absent from the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock, instead of waiting until 5 o'clock under the rule. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session, and if there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session pursuant to clause 3 of Rule XX, for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule referred to.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. Let us have a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 21, noes 3.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, Mr. Speaker, we have not got a quorum here to-night. [After a pause.] I will let it go along awhile and see how it works. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2106) to perfect the military record of Warren Alonzo Alden.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, that is not the first bill, I understand. In the Committee of the Whole at the last session, two weeks ago to-night, we had under consideration the bill H. R. 3156.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that the bills shall be taken up in their order on the Calendar. The Chair supposed the bill referred to had been passed over.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No, sir; the bill has never been passed over. The House finding itself without a quorum, the Committee rose and the House adjourned.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Two weeks ago to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not make it the first bill in order. The practice at evening sessions is to call up bills in the order they appear on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I know; but I do not know how that bill could have lost its place.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not lost its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HULL. What is the Calendar number?

The Clerk read as follows:

Calendar number 153.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was directed by the Chair, in accordance with the universal practice of the House, to report the first bill. The Chair has no knowledge as to which is the first bill, and the Clerk has reported the title of the bill which is first on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Of course, I only wish that this bill shall have its rights. That is all I want.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, there are several bills that have been considered without final action being taken, and in the spirit of fairness I ask unanimous consent that we go on and consider the bills that have not been considered, and then go back to those bills which have been considered, for I am satisfied you will not make any progress to-night.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I can not consent to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to inquire whether the bill the Clerk now reads precedes on the Calendar the bill called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] upon which the point of no quorum was raised two weeks ago?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

The bill was read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the bill following that is one which I know we have already considered. It is marked with an asterisk. I want to inquire if that bill has not been laid aside with a favorable report?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the asterisk indicates that the bills are pension bills. This bill was laid aside without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Chairman, the bill which was under consideration a moment ago is a bill I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. It was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW]. I do not see him here, and I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until he appears.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that order will be made. (After a pause.) The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CORNELIA DE PEYSTER BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3156) granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of the United States Army, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of the United States Army, and to pay the said Cornelia de Peyster Black a pension of $100 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommends that the bill be amended by striking out the words "one hundred," in line 8, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "fifty," to which an amendment has been made striking out the word "fifty," and inserting the words "twenty-five," which was adopted at a previous session.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, there is a minority report. I would like to have the majority and the minority reports read.

The report and the views of the minority were read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3156) granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, have considered the same, and the majority respectfully submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of the late Colonel Henry M. Black, United States Army, whose military record, as reported by the War Department, is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.
Washington, December 20, 1893.

Statement of the military service of Henry M. Black, of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from July 1, 1842, to July 1, 1847, when he was graduated, and appointed brevet second lieutenant, Fourth Infantry, July 1, 1847; second lieutenant, Seventh Infantry, August 20, 1847; first lieutenant, Ninth Infantry, March 3, 1855; captain, September 10, 1856; colonel, Sixth California Infantry, February 1, 1863; honorably mustered out October 27, 1865; major, Seventh Infantry, July 28, 1866; lieutenant-colonel, Fourth Infantry, October 7, 1868; unassigned March 15, 1869; assigned to Eighteenth Infantry July 1, 1870; colonel, Twenty-third Infantry, February 6, 1882.

He received the brevet of lieutenant-colonel and colonel March 13, 1865, for faithful and meritorious services during the war.

SERVICE.

He joined his regiment December, 1847, and served with it in Mexico to July 7, 1848; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to August 31, 1849; in Florida to June 15, 1850; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to August 14, 1850; at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to September 15, 1850; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to April 17, 1851; at Fort Gibson, Ind. T., to May, 1855; at Fort Monroe, Va., to July, 1855; on recruiting service to April, 1856; with regiment in Washington Territory to May, 1856; on recruiting service to May, 1857; with regiment in Washington Territory to May, 1859; in Oregon to June, 1861; at Fort Vancouver to November, 1861; in California to January 1, 1863; organizing and commanding Sixth California Volunteers, in California, to August, 1864; commandant of cadets at the Military Academy, West Point, N. Y. (mustered out of volunteer service October 27, 1865), to July 1, 1870; on delay to November 1, 1870; with regiment at Atlanta, Ga., to January 9, 1871; at Charleston, S. C., to April 10, 1871; at Columbia, S. C., to January 1, 1876; member of board at Philadelphia, Pa., to June 7, 1876; with regiment at Columbia, S. C., to July 24, 1877; at Grafton, W. Va., and Allegheny arsenal, Pa., during labor strikes, to November 1, 1877; at Atlanta, Ga., to April 12, 1879; at Fort Assiniboine, Mont., to October 1, 1879; and in command of regiment and that post to June 2, 1881; commanding depot at Davids Island, N. Y., to June 14, 1882; on delay and on leave to October 16, 1882; commanding regiment and post of Fort Union, N. Mex., to June 2, 1884; and at Fort Wayne, Mich., to November 10, 1884; on court-martial duty at Washington, D. C., to February 24, 1885; commanding regiment and post of Fort Wayne, Mich. (being a member of court of inquiry at Fort Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, March 7 to April 19, 1887, and president of board of judges at national drill encampment, Washington, D. C., May 15 to June 4, 1887; also in command of international encampment at Chicago, Ill., September 27 to Oct. 21, 1887), to May 8, 1890, and post of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., to January 15, 1891, when he was retired. Unemployed to August 5, 1893, on which date he died at Chicago, Ill.

GEO. D. RUGGLES,
Adjutant-General.

As will be seen from the foregoing official report the active service of Col. Black covered a period of nearly half a century. The distinguished character of this long service is fully attested by the record and also by Gen. D. S. Stanley, United States Army (retired), and others who appeared personally before your committee.

Mrs. Black is now well advanced in years, and without sufficient property or income to provide her with a comfortable support. She has an unmarried daughter dependent upon her, and there is no one upon whom she can legally rely for a maintenance. In addition to being the widow of a distinguished officer, Mrs. Black is the daughter of the late Col. Joseph Plympton, United States Army, who entered the service in 1812, and who, after serving in the war of 1812, the Seminole and Black Hawk Indian wars and the Mexican war, died in 1860.

It may be said that Mrs. Black is in all respects a military woman; she was born in a military post, and two of her three daughters are the wives of officers of the Army.

There are many precedents for the granting of relief in cases of this character, and in the light of all the facts and circumstances your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the words "one hundred" in line 8, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

[To accompany H. R. 3156.]

The views of the majority of the Committee on Pensions, respecting the propriety of the passage of the bill granting a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, are, for the following reasons, respectfully dissented from:

There are several general acts of Congress under which Mrs. Black can make application to the Pension Bureau and be allowed a pension. She would probably have no difficulty in substantiating a claim under the Mexican war pension act of January 29, 1887, or, if for any reason she could not meet the requirements of that act, she could still (if her circumstances are as represented) have recourse to an application under the late war act of June 27, 1890. The only reason given why this method of securing relief has not been followed is that the rating allowed by these acts is not large enough; but if this reason is to be accepted as sufficient to warrant the allowance of an original pension by special act in this case there is no just ground upon which similar action can be denied in thousands of other cases.

It is neither shown nor claimed that Col. Black's death was due to wounds or disease originating in the service, yet the bill as reported grants the widow a higher rate of pension than is allowed by law to the widows of officers of similar or higher rank who die in the service and line of duty.

The distinguished character of the service of the soldier is fully understood, but no especially urgent necessity or unusual circumstance is advanced as good ground upon which to base the proposed action in the case of the widow. She has no young children to support, and she has some $1,000 from which to derive an income; and this income can be materially increased through an application to the Pension Bureau under one of the acts above cited.

If there is any justice in the granting of these large pensions to the widows of regular Army and Navy officers, to the exclusion of the widows of the volunteer soldiers who lost their lives in defense of the Union, the allowance should be made by general enactment, and thus relieve Congress of the necessity for giving time and labor to the consideration of bills framed in the interest of a favored class.

ARTHUR H. TAYLOR.
CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that my feeble efforts here on several Friday nights would have been productive of some good results. I had hoped some fruits might have been brought forth in the attendance of these Friday night sessions, but I have been disappointed. The small crowd in attendance here to-night still shows that the members of this body are unwilling to turn out here one night in the week to discuss these pension matters. It seems that they are not ready, a great many of them at least, to give up claw-hammer coats, entertainments, euchre parties, theaters, and other enjoyments, while at the same time professing to have a great love for the old soldiers and a great desire that this Congress should do business. I had hoped the new rule which has been adopted would also have been productive of some good results at the night sessions as I see it has had in the attendance upon the day sessions. I am sorry, too, that my appeal here——

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to ask the gentleman if anybody has indicated the purpose of making the point of no quorum?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. MALLORY. Has anybody indicated the purpose of raising the point of no quorum to-night?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Not that I know of.

Mr. MALLORY. That is what I wanted to know. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I hope the gentleman will not be interrupted.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Let gentlemen interrupt me if they desire. I do not object to it. I can not see exactly the relevancy of the gentleman's question. If he wants to raise the point of no quorum I will yield to him right now.

I was just going to say, though, that I had hoped that my appeal in behalf of the Constitution had done some good. I had hoped that members of this body would have begun to give some consideration to the Constitution of the United States, which requires that there shall be a quorum here to pass any kind of legislation; but I regret to see that my efforts have been all in vain. I am sorry further to have to say that my calling attention to the oath which members of this body have taken to support that Constitution, and my calling attention to the necessity of adhering to the rules, have also proved ineffectual. Mr. Chairman, four or five years ago, two or three years ago, it seems to me I heard a great deal about the Constitution of the United States. The fact is, the members of this body have used the Constitution as a very convenient sort of instrument, taking it up and hugging it to their bosoms when it served their purpose, and at other times casting it aside.

Two or three years ago, when the Farmers' Alliance and the other industrial organizations of this country were sending up their respectful, pitiful appeals to this august body to have enacted into law some of the measures which they believed would give relief to the great mass of the people, all over this Hall members could be seen taking down the old Constitution of the United States, covered over with dust so thickly that you could have written your name upon it, brushing off the dust, brandishing aloft and using it as a weapon against the demands of the people. Gentlemen would take a long breath, fill their lungs with air, draw themselves up and exclaim: "Why, this is unconstitutional! It can not be done!" If the Constitution was a good thing to be obeyed then, why is it that we can not obey it now, and require that a quorum shall come here when we undertake to do business at these evening sessions.

It seems to me that a rule which will work only one way is not a good rule. To be a good rule it must work both ways. [Laughter.] It is perfectly constitutional, we are told, to appropriate money for any other purpose. It is perfectly constitutional to appropriate millions to build navies to rot on the seas. It is perfectly constitutional to appropriate money for World's Fairs and Centennial Expositions. It is perfectly constitutional to appropriate money to build railroads and to lend to national banks and Wall street gamblers and all that sort of thing, but whenever an attempt is made to do anything in the interest of the great mass of the people in this great country of ours, that is "unconstitutional!" It seems to me that the voice of this Congress has been to the laboring people of this country: "If you will quit producing, quit being laboring people, and go to manufacturing, we will do something for you; if you will quit raising produce and go to hauling it we will do something for you; but so long as you are producers, so long as you are laborers, there is nothing for you here. You are shut out, and the Constitution stands in the way whenever you want anything."

Now, I want to ask gentlemen why they can not stand by the Constitution in two cases as well as in one. Why can not you stand by the Constitution, gentlemen, in these Friday night sessions and require a quorum to be present before you undertake to transact business, before you undertake to fritter away the money of the people by voting pensions in hundreds of cases to people who do not deserve them. You say "these little things are trifling and do not amount to much," but let me remind you that many little things taken together make a great big sum.

Now, I want to say a word in connection with something that occurred here in one of these Friday evening sessions. I had read here, by permission of the House, an anonymous communication which I had received in relation to pensions. The question was asked whether there was any name signed to it, and I said there was not, but I asked permission to have it read and printed in the RECORD and unanimous consent was given. The same gentleman who wrote me that communication has written another giving me some reasons why he did not sign his name. His name is not signed to this communication either, but I ask consent to have it read, in order that his reasons for not signing his name may be put on record. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Is it from Coxey? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am not corresponding with your kind.

Another MEMBER. Is it poetry?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes, sir; it is poetry.

Mr. TATE. I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether this constitutional argument of his this evening is suggested by the recent constitutional decision of the supreme court of South Carolina? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Oh, not at all; not a bit. Let me say to the gentleman that neither that decision nor any other decision of the supreme court can trouble me. I am not so easily troubled. It may trouble the gentleman from Georgia, but not me. I am a Carolinian, not a Georgian. Now, with the permission of the House, I will ask the Clerk to read this communication.

A MEMBER. Is that a farmer's production?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, let me tell my friend from Georgia that the farmers have some right to be heard in this House. That is just the trouble here; you seem to think they have no right.

A MEMBER. Then this is a farmer's article?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I suppose so; it sounds honest and not lawyer-like.

A MEMBER. Ah!

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. And you have denied the farmers the right to be heard here. My friend here from Georgia [Mr. BLACK] got up a few days ago and read an instrument full of technical terms, and some one intimated that the farmers of this country did not have sense enough to understand what a technical term was. Now, let me tell you, my friend, that the farmers have a great deal more sense than you think.

Mr. TATE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he understood the technical terms used by the gentleman from Georgia, to whom he referred just now?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, now, I am not on examination here. I think I do. But I doubt very much whether the gentleman who is addressing me understood them.

Mr. TATE. Well, I did not. I will admit it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Well, you come around to my room and I will tell you what they mean.

Mr. TATE. Life is too short to submit to such training. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The gentlemen needs training.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the communication sent up by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Something else for your reference file, if you please:

It's not vapid gossip, but warp and woof, all wool and a yard wide;
What, not long ago, the poet from Marion, Ind., to you did write,
Referring to the pensioner, it's quite true that his neighbors stick to him like glue;
Of whom there are many, not only a few, so the poet concluded that it wouldn't do
For to sign his name, as otherwise his chances would have been good indeed;
For that pensioner's neighbors, to pitch into him, with vehemence, with both feet.
It's none of your biz, to him they would have said, it's no skin off your back—
We'll give you a thrashing, then make you leave the neighborhood, you story-telling smack.
Without a question, a dose of hickory tea they would have administered to him;
And his nearest kin would not have been allowed to open the mouth to save his skin.
He scorns the idea to partake of a stew which is offensive and very hard to chew;
No, not by a jugful, unless in his upper story there becomes detached a screw.
Especially that tea, he does disdain; almost everybody else would say the same.
Now, honor bright, would you him blame for having refrained from signing his name.
There is that ex-Columbian guardsman, who was sent to jail the other day;
In the labyrinthine mazes of his anatomy the doctors must have gone astray.
On blindness and paralysis, they pronounced him disabled, in a pensionable degree,
A man possessed of the eyes of an eagle and the agility of a flea.
Or can it be possible that those medicated stoolpigeons did betray this fraudulent claimant
For noncompliance on his part to whack up with them his first pension payment?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that it is not unconstitutional, although, indeed, when the subtreasury bill was sent here years ago it was decided to be unconstitutional and impracticable, crude, and possessed of every other fault that could be applied to it. If it was unconstitutional, then whose duty was it to change it and bring it within the purview of the Constitution? If it was impracticable, whose duty was it to make it a practical measure, and try to make it a thing of beauty instead of the great ugly thing you claimed it to be? But no matter whose duty it was, it was not performed. It was simply ignored. It was smothered in the committee room and not allowed to be discussed on the floor of the House, and it never has been and never will be. It was taken out here and buried, and that was the last of it. Unconstitutional! You love the Constitution sometimes, why do you not love it at all times? Why do you not treat all men fairly under it?

Now, as I read or had read, and asked to have printed as a part of my remarks some articles from the New York Weekly Times a few days ago, I have here a second edition of the same paper bearing upon the same subject, which is long, and will probably take some time to read it. I will simply ask leave now to print this in the RECORD without reading it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. PICKLER and others objected.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Very well, then, I will ask the Clerk please to read it, as gentlemen have seen fit to object. I ask him to read the first page of this paper that I send to the desk.

Mr. PICKLER. We had just as well take up the time in that way as in listening to the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. It would have been better for the gentleman to have allowed it to be printed, as it would not have taken so much time as to address the gentleman from Borneo——

Mr. MEREDITH. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, what is the question pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the bill (H. R. 3156) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia de Peyster Black.

Mr. MEREDITH. I understand that this is the bill that is under consideration?

A MEMBER. The Constitution seems to be under consideration.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. This proposition that I have made is perfectly constitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is the bill the title of which the Chair has just stated.

Mr. KRIBBS. Does this paper the gentleman asks to have read relate to the subject under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to inform the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I ask that the first page be read, as it relates to the subject of private pensions.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to inquire if it relates to the pending bill?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. It does relate to all pending bills.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point of order that it has no reference to the question under consideration.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The question is, does it relate to the pending bill?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Possibly it does; I have not examined.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Most certainly it does not, I assume. It has no relevancy whatever to this question.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It has no relation, of course, to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read Rule XIV, section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The CHAIRMAN. That rule is applicable to proceedings in the House. Clause 8 of Rule XXIII provides that the rule of proceedings in the House shall be observed in Committee of the Whole so far as applicable. That is the rule under which the committee is operating.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Do I understand the Chair to decide that this is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so decide. The article has not been read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I make the point of order against the reading of that paper.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing has yet been read. The Chair simply announced that it would be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is the Chair bound to have it read at the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had the rule read for the benefit of the committee. The Clerk will read the document with which the Chair is not familiar; and if any member desires to submit a point of order after it is read, or while the reading is progressing, it can be done.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question, whether this is not an article published in the New York Times, occupying eight or nine columns——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I have asked only that the first page be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. How many columns?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I have asked to have read only the part bearing on this subject. I have not asked the Clerk to read the whole of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. How many columns are there?

Mr. KILGORE. It does not make any difference; the gentleman has the right to have it read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. You had better appeal to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER]. He made the objection to my request.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I am addressing the gentleman respectfully; and I wish to appeal to his sense of fairness whether it is a proper thing to occupy the time of the House this evening with eight or nine columns of this matter?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. It is not my fault. I asked to have the matter spread upon the record, and the gentleman from South Dakota objected. He is the gentleman to whom my friend from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] should appeal.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I raise the point of order that the reading of this paper is not within the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing has yet been read; and the Chair has no notice of what is contained in this paper.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It purports on its face to be the result of investigations by the New York Times into a series of pension claims already granted. It has no reference to this case at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] should be correct, the article will not be in order.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. This is entirely a different case from that presented when a member rises to speak. In that case the Chair must wait until the statement of a member is made before he can ascertain whether it is germane. But here the matter is in print; and it is the duty of the Chair to look at it, and if it be not germane, to rule it out.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I submit that the Chair has looked at it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I insist that we have not yet come to a point where the Chair is justified in deciding whether this matter bears on the question or not. I have asked that this paper be read in my own time; and I demand that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the document.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE NATION'S GREAT SCANDAL—DESERTERS WHO ARE NOW ON THE "ROLL OF HONOR"——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know if the Chair holds that in order to determine whether this point of order is well made, the Chair must permit this whole article to be read to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so hold.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that as nothing has yet been read, there is as yet nothing for the Chair to rule upon.

Several MEMBERS. Let the headlines be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to reserve a point of order on the article.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I must insist that all this maneuvering must not come out of my time.

A MEMBER. It will, all the same.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

THE LAW HAS CLEARED THE RECORDS AND THE HUNGRY PENSION AGENT HAS THEREBY EARNED HIS FEE—HONEST SOLDIERS PROTEST AT IT—IN ITS INVESTIGATIONS OF PENSION ABUSES THE NEW YORK TIMES HAS FOUND MEN WHO WERE IN CANADA DURING THE WAR, BUT ARE NOW DRAWING PENSIONS—IN OGDENSBURG A DESERTER AND THE WIDOW OF A SOLDIER, LIVING TOGETHER, EACH HAVE DRAWN PENSIONS FOR MANY YEARS—FRANK JOHNSON, WHO ASSISTS A WASHINGTON PENSION ATTORNEY, A CUSTOM-HOUSE OFFICIAL, AND AN ACTIVE POLITICIAN—THE LAW RELATING TO OFFICIALS WHO HELP PROSECUTE CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

II.

In the last issue of the Weekly Times there was printed the first of a series of articles giving the results of investigations made by reporters for the New York Times——

Mr. HULL (interrupting the reading). I make the point of order that these headlines as read clearly demonstrate that this article has nothing to do with legislation before Congress. It relates simply to what is alleged to have transpired in the Pension Office. The bill before the House proposes action by Congress, and can not in any way be affected by anything that has taken place heretofore in the Pension Office. The headlines of this article from the New York Times show that it refers simply to past action of the Pension Department. I raise the point of order that the whole article is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that under the rule this article, so far as read, is not in order. The Chair refers to the rule which requires that members addressing the House or the Committee of the Whole shall confine themselves to the subject under debate.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does not this article concern pensions, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not relate to the bill under consideration, which is a private bill to grant a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Anything that concerns pensions, concerns the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that not even under the most liberal construction of the rule, could the article be held to be in order, if the point of order be made against it.

Mr. KILGORE. I should like to submit a word before the Chair concludes his ruling on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. KILGORE. I submit that the uniform practice of this House has been, in Committee of the Whole, to allow a much wider range in the discussion than when we are considering a matter in the House. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering private pension legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is not in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that, and I merely misspoke. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering private pension legislation, and any observations which any gentlemen may conclude to make upon the subject of private pension legislation, or public pension legislation, as far as that goes, would be in order in this discussion to-night. Now, there is no escape from that, and if that article relates to that subject, it does not make any difference whether it relates to the conduct of the Pension Office heretofore or to the conduct of Congress in vesting the Pension Office with particular authority.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The name of the applicant to-night may possibly be reached in that very article.

Mr. HULL. The name of this applicant is not in the Pension Bureau at all, and this is an article relating to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me finish what I am saying. If that relates to the improper conduct of the Pension Office, or if it relates to the improper administration of the law, then it would be entirely competent for any man to make a speech of that kind in this House to-night upon that subject; and if it be competent for him to make an oral argument of that kind, it is entirely competent for him to have read from a newspaper an argument upon the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If a member was making a speech, you could not tell what the speech contained until it was delivered, but where it is in a newspaper, you can see in advance that it does not bear upon the question.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the patriotic preliminary remarks which a member would make, which would correspond to the headlines of the article, would admonish the House as to the character of the argument which he proposed to submit. Now, the objection to that article is made upon the headlines, and I say that is not competent. The practice of the Committee of the Whole has been the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas—because the Chair desires to administer the rules in a spirit of absolute fairness—that the gentleman is correct in the statement that very great latitude is allowed in debate in Committee of the Whole; but if the point of order is submitted by any gentleman on the floor, the Chair is constrained to decide that gentlemen must confine themselves to the question under debate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] himself is not deficient in parliamentary skill, and he will recognize at once, the Chair feels assured, that that is the correct interpretation of the rules.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that that is the correct interpretation; but my contention is that he is discussing the question legitimately before this committee, whether they will increase this roll or not. That is the main question, whether the House or this Committee of the Whole shall countenance the abuses which that article is intended to attack, in the Pension Office. I think that is legitimate. I recognize the rule to be as stated by the Chairman, but I say this article comes within that rule. That is the contention I make.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Chairman, just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MOSES. We have a bill here proposing to pension the widow of a soldier whom the war records show to have served fifty years. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will hear what I say.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. We have a bill here proposing to give a pension to the widow of a soldier who served in the wars of the United States for nearly fifty years, as shown by the war records. The gentleman says perhaps this widow's husband's name may be found in that list; and yet I understand it is a list of deserters who are drawing pensions.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Not that alone.

Mr. MOSES. That is what I understand.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. It is a general article on the whole pension business.

Mr. MOSES. The gentleman certainly does not bring this in to prove that this woman's husband was a deserter and would come under that category; and it is therefore as clearly out of order as anything can be in this case. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] if he desires to hear it read?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. This is for information on the pension business; and the intention of having it read is not to prove that Mr. Black or anybody else was a deserter, but just for the general information of this body. I am astonished that this House does not want light, but I find that it does not want it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that is that the Chair has ruled on this point; and if these gentlemen are not satisfied let them appeal. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled on the point, and the Clerk will read the rule which governs the committee under such circumstances.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. If any member, in speaking, or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order. In which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted on motion of another member to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rule the article is not in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. It seems to me that the rule has nothing to do with the point. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I do not understand that it is out of order. It seems to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa made the point of order that the article was not in order.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I understood the Chair to decide, under the rule, that it was in order and ordered its reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so decide.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. The Clerk commenced to read by somebody's order.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; because no point could properly be raised until something was read; but after the reading had proceeded awhile the point of order was raised.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does the Chair decide that it is not in order to read that article?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so decides.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WEADOCK. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to lay an appeal on the table is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 3.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN]. Tellers will please take their places.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 4.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, under the rule, the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the gentleman from California, Mr. CAMINETTI, is sick, and therefore I ask that he be excused.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done in the House. Under the rule the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. BROOKSHIRE resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole finding itself without a quorum, I caused the roll to be called, and herewith report the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, be excused on account of his inability to attend the evening session because of his wounds.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, be excused. He is indisposed to-day, and is absent for that reason.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, be excused on account of ill health.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. STEPHENSON, is sick at his hotel this evening, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused, as he is not able to be here.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LINTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. AVERY, be excused on account of ill health.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BARTHOLDT, be excused. He is sick, and has been for several days.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that I be granted one moment to make a remark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSES. Before we leave excuses, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CAMINETTI, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this evening, on account of sickness.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania was granted leave of absence, on account of sickness.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I feel very deeply the absence of a quorum on this occasion, after so many efforts at these evening sessions to pass the private bills which have received consideration in Committee of the Whole. It is a fact that there are less than a hundred members present, probably not more than seventy-five, and it is now but one hour and twenty-five minutes until the hour of adjournment. In view of these facts it seems quite improbable that, even by having a call of the House, we can obtain a quorum this evening; but, nevertheless, I have made the motion for a call, and I ask gentlemen who are present here to cast their votes on that motion advisedly with reference to the future, so that hereafter at these pension sessions if the point of "no quorum" is to be made it may be made and passed in time to bring in the absentees.

Without assuming to censure those who are absent, it does seem to me to be a great hardship upon the gentlemen who come here night after night and are prevented from doing business, on the one hand by the point of "no quorum," and on the other hand by the absence of a quorum when far more than enough members to make a quorum are in the city.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following-named members failed to respond:

Abbott,	Cousins,	Hines,	Randall,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will now be closed and the Clerk will call the names of members who have failed to respond on the first call. Upon this call excuses will be in order.

Mr. TATE (when the name of Mr. CABANISS was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. CABANISS] be excused, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COOMBS, when his name was called, was excused on account of sickness.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF (when the name of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] be excused, on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BAILEY (when the name of Mr. CULBERSON was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] be excused, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (when the name of Mr. DALZELL was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. DALZELL] be excused, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCRAE (when the name of Mr. TERRY was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. TERRY] be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (when the name of Mr. SCRANTON was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague [Mr. SCRANTON] be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this call 82 members have answered to their names; no quorum.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to introduce a resolution to send for absentees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker be directed to issue a warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms for the arrest of members who have failed to respond to their names, and who are absent without the leave of the House.

Mr. CONN. Mr. Speaker, it is evident from the lateness of the hour that it will be impossible for us to obtain a quorum here this evening. Therefore I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CONN, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 27.

Mr. TATE. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, as bearing upon the question whether we shall adjourn or whether we shall continue to try to get a quorum. Is it not a fact that even if we had a quorum here any member who could get the floor could consume an hour in debate, and, that being so, is it not true that any three men could occupy the entire time of the session, so that we could do no business anyhow?

Mr. HULL. If that is any argument, it is an argument against having Friday night sessions at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HULL. Let us vote it down.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 21; so the motion was agreed to, and the House accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 21, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1928) to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration, at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting letters of Anthony Comstock, post-office inspector of New York, and of the assistant attorney-general for the Post-Office Department, relating to a change in the rule of evidence in regard to the comparison of handwriting in trial of cases in the courts of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of Cigar Makers' Local Union, No. 90, of New York City, N. Y., and a memorial of the American Agents' Association, of Columbus, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Chinese treaty; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. I present a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress "to enact a law to issue five hundred millions of Treasury notes, to be full legal tender of all debts, both public and private, such money to be set apart exclusively for public roads, and to go to each State pro rata with the number of miles of road in the State, and to be appropriated and issued at the rate of $20,000,000 per month." The petition is in the usual form and properly indorsed. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the memorial of E. W. Breem and H. C. King, of Oscoda, Mich., remonstrating against the imposition of an income tax upon national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Robert Cartwright and sundry other members of the American Association of Civil Engineers, of Rochester, N. Y., and the petition of W. M. Lerch and sundry other citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCMILLAN (for Mr. STOCKBRIDGE) presented a petition of the Retail Clerks' Union, of Detroit, Mich., and a petition of the Barbers' Union, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Board of Trade and Transportation, of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the abrogation of any treaty for reciprocal relations between the United States and foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. QUAY. I present a "petition and protest of American workingmen," and a memorial in the form of an address "to the right honorable body of United States Senators," being the action of the convention of workingmen of the United States in session in this city, and I ask unanimous consent to read the contents of the memorials. I do not desire to comment upon them at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. QUAY. These gentlemen met in this city yesterday and continued in session until within the past hour. They adopted a "petition and protest" to the Fifty-third Congress of the United States in connection with a memorial which they addressed to the United States Senate. After stating that the preamble and resolution were adopted at a mass meeting of representative wage-earners of the United States assembled in Washington, D. C., the 20th day of April, 1894, they set forth the same as follows:

Whereas for nearly ten months the business of this country has been paralyzed, the promises of improvement in consequence of certain financial legislation not having been realized; and

Whereas we see ourselves and others deprived of the means of livelihood by reason of threatened revision of tariff laws, under which we had been so prosperous, and by the continuance of which, without prospect of change, we feel assured that all business would be restored to its former prosperous condition; and

Whereas the wages of labor in this country under unassailed protective custom laws have been fully twice that of the highest in any other country; and

Whereas any reduction in the customs duty on any article manufactured or produced in this country means a corresponding reduction in the wages of labor employed in its manufacture or production; and

Whereas in our free country the interests of one class of workmen are the interests of all; and

Whereas we believe that all laws framed by our representatives should be for the benefit of their constituents, the people of the United States, and not the people of other countries: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, the authorized representatives of millions of American workmen, without distinction of party, hereby respectfully demand of our representatives in the Congress of the United States that no change shall be made in existing laws that shall in any way deprive us of the capacity to earn the full amount of wages to which we were accustomed during the years in which there were no prospective or threatened changes in tariff laws to prevent us from providing for our families better homes, better education, and more comforts than in any other country on the face of the globe.

GEO. WALSH, President.
EPHRAIM RIGG, Vice-President.
M. J. KELLEY, Secretary.

The memorial to this body is as follows:

We as part of the toiling masses of these United States of America, on this day of our Lord, April 21, 1894, do offer to your noble sirs, in memorial, our supplications for your kind consideration, believing that the sense of right which is inert in all individual character, will receive from your honorable selves that true spirit of fairness which has ever been (and is, we believe, at this day) a constitutional characteristic of your honorable body of United States Senators, and in view of such a preposition we present for your consideration our sincere objections to making the measure known as the Wilson tariff bill a law of our land, in the following paragraphs of grievances:

First. Should this measure (known as the Wilson tariff bill) become a law its effect will be the depreciation of all values in the United States of 40 per cent or more.

The object of tariff reduction is to get an article that has cost less than the normal cost of production in the United States by getting an article that has been made in other countries at a less labor cost than in the United States. Hence the depreciation of value.

Now, the depreciation of values means a loss somewhere; where that loss is will be found after the Wilson tariff bill becomes a law.

Second. The census of the United States of America in 1880 showed 50,000,000 of population and the census of the United States in 1890 was 63,000,000, showing a gain of 13,000,000. Allowing 10,000,000 of the 13,000,000 as wage-earners, making compulsory on the part of the United States to create 10,000,000 of original situations during the intervening years of 1880 to 1890 in addition to keeping in force the situations that were in 1880 to allow the country to provide for its people as well as in 1890 as it did provide for its people in 1880.

Again, the effects of the Wilson tariff bill, should it become a law, will be greater importations of other countries' manufactured products and if it is true that during the full force of the McKinley act, which prohibited in a great measure the importations of manufactured goods from other countries into the United States, it was unable to provide employment for all its people (which was told us by those who are opposed to our tariff system), we are voluntarily impressed to believe that the United States will be still further embarrassed by a law in fact that would allow greater freedom to the importations of the products of other lands; hence our second grievance.

Now, while we are emphatically opposed to the Wilson tariff bill as a whole, we can not refrain from drawing your honorable and particular attention to the system of collecting duties on all imported textile goods into this country on an ad valorem basis, as is intended in and by the Wilson tariff bill. Ad valorem duties, without specific safeguards, open the flood-gates of fraud and undervaluation to the foreign manufacturers and importers of foreign-made textile goods into this country, and it goes without saying that this system of ad valorem collecting of customs on imported textile goods, if once adopted, means destruction and ruin to almost every textile industry in our land and the reducing of our workingmen's wages to a free-trade standard, and brings their wages down to the pauper-paid wages of the textile workers of Europe, and of which we are in fear and dread, and we again asseverate that every branch of industry in this country that comes under the ban of this pernicious system of ad valorem duties will and must continue to suffer untold misery and want. We therefore pray that every industry possible in this country shall be protected by specific and ad valorem duties both.

In the Wilson measure will be found discriminating inequalities; first, particularly that part relating to the tin schedule, as follows: The importation of tin annually amounts to 1,500,000,000 pounds; the duty at present is 2.2 per pound, thereby giving thirty million duties collected. The duty proposed by the Wilson tariff bill will be 1.2 per pound, allowing a collection of only fifteen millions tariff duties. Tin has not been enhanced in cost to the consumer under the McKinley act, and will not, in our opinion, be reduced in cost to us as consumers should the Wilson bill be allowed to go into effect. Therefore the United States will be deprived annually of $15,000,000, and at the same time giving no benefit to the country or its people; consequently the $15,000,000 will go into the possession of the tin manufacturers of other countries as profits. This is an illustrative objective lesson to us, showing the discriminating inequalities that can be found all through the Wilson tariff bill.

Now, your most honorable body are perfectly aware, as well as we are, that for ten long months business of every kind and description has been completely depressed by the prospective tariff reduction and is still present with us; ruin and desolation has confronted us and still confronts hundreds of thousands of workingmen and business men, and we, as workingmen, are fully convinced of the fact that if the Wilson bill becomes a law of this country it will be an utter impossibility for trade to revive or to flourish again in our midst. This in itself indicates the density of the dark cloud of depression that has been overhanging the country and its people for ten months and more, and whilst not disposed toward egotism, we are desirous that the people of our country shall have one more opportunity to bring back the prosperous condition that was in the years 1891 and 1892. We most earnestly supplicate your honorable body to defeat in toto the Wilson bill. We ask this favor not alone for ourselves who are present here to-day, but for the people in all parts of our country; and with care for our country and the best welfare of its people, we respectfully consign our case to your wise consideration and counsels.

GEORGE WALSH, President.
EPHRAIM RIGG, Vice-President.
M. J. KELLY, Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorials will lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a resolution and memorial of the workingmen of Pennsylvania, being the same as those just presented by my colleague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorials will lie on the table.

ADDITIONAL FORCE IN CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. MILLS. If there are no further petitions to be presented, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 66) providing additional clerical force for the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was reported from the Committee on the Library?

Mr. MILLS. It was.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to appropriate $10,000 to be used for the employment of additional clerical force, under the direction of the Librarian of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Thy preamble was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Librarian of Congress, Mr. Spofford, in connection with this measure, for the information of the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS, Washington, April 5, 1894.

SIR: I present, as requested, a statement of the existing necessity for additional clerical force in the Congressional Library.

By reason of the enactment of international copyright in July, 1891, the copyright business has heavily increased, far beyond the normal annual increase growing out of the development of the country and its publishing interests. The number of copyrights entered in my office in 1890 was 42,758. In 1893 the aggregate was over 56,000, or an increase of 33 per cent. During all this time only one additional clerk has been allowed, while the labor thrown upon the office has been enormously increased. That labor involves the receipt and reply to about 70,000 applications for copyright yearly; the record and deposit of fees received; the return of fees in a large number of rejected applications; the recording of all copyrights, and the issue, under seal of my office, of certificates; the decision of many thousands of doubtful claims to copyright record; the indexing of all the records of copyright by name and subject-matter; the preparation, every week, of a complete catalogue of copyright publications received for publication, as an aid to customs officers; the receipt and care of over 100,000 publications of all kinds in every year; the stamping, numbering, labeling, and cataloguing of their great mass of copyright accessions; the production of many publications to be examined, in suits for copyright infringement constantly arising, and the furnishing of certified copies of all records wanted immediately in such litigation.

All these varied and responsible labors, it is to be borne in mind, are in addition to the work of the library proper, already twice as large as any American library, and involving in the care and arrangement of its vast collections, the selection of works to be added, the cataloguing of additions, the service of books and information to Congress, to the courts, to the Departments, to the foreign legations, and to the public, and the constant recording of books given out and returned.

Add to this the notoriously deficient space in which the multifarious business of the great library and copyright department has to be carried on, fearfully overcrowded as it is in every part, by which all the difficulties of administration are incalculably increased, and it becomes a case of distress, calling for as prompt and efficient relief as the supply of an adequate working force can furnish.

The whole number of assistants allowed the Librarian is but thirty-one, while the British Museum library, with no copyright business, and no circulation of books, has over one hundred, and the Boston Public Library, with half the number of books, and no copyright business, employs from seventy to eighty assistants. Unlike these libraries, the Congressional Library pays into the Treasury annually about $15,000, being the whole receipts from copyright fees, while the entire appropriation for salaries is but $43,800.

As less than half the clerical force is employed in the copyright department of the library business, it is obvious that this department is far more than self-sustaining. Congress, therefore, is not asked for a deficiency, but for a reappropriation of so much of the funds paid in by copyright as will place that department in a state of business efficiency, such as it maintained before the enormously increased labor thrown upon it in the last three years.

It has resulted, from the grossly inadequate clerical force provided, that the current work of the copyright records has fallen into arrears which are discreditable to the Government, and the subject of just complaint on the part of authors and publishers. The undersigned holds that every applicant for copyright should receive his certificate within a week, instead of waiting months as now compelled; and to reach this universally desired result he confidently appeals, in the interest of the public service, to the sense of justice of this committee and of Congress.

Very respectfully,

A. R. SPOFFORD,
Librarian of Congress.

Hon. R. Q. MILLS,
Chairman of Joint Committee on the Library.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1937) for the relief of James Phelan, internal-revenue collector at Detroit, Mich., which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TURPIE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1938) to grant pensions for service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 1939) granting a pension to Conrad McClean; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1940) granting a pension to Henry C. Graham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1941) to authorize Rear-Admiral John G. Walker and Surg. Gen. J. Rufus Tryon, of the United States Navy, to accept the decorations of the "Busto del Libortador" of the third class from the President of Venezuela; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY HALTEMAN.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the morning business is concluded, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put on its passage the bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Halteman.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge from the United States service to Henry Halteman, late of Company F, Second United States Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State covering a dispatch from the United States minister at Honolulu, and reply thereto.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, April 21, 1894.

SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr DOLPH. Some days ago I asked unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 67) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands." There was objection. I gave notice that immediately after the pending business was disposed of, which was Senate bill 341, to provide a site for the Printing Office, I should move to take up the bill. The bill referred to, which was then the pending business, appears to have been shelved. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 67.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the morning business been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. DOLPH. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. A similar bill passed the Senate during the last Congress, but entirely by votes on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the question, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill? the Senator from Oregon demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. What is the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the bill were read at length probably we would all vote to take it up. Let it be read.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not sure whether the question is debatable, but if the Senate will permit me, I will state in a moment what the bill is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the Senator from Oregon proceed by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has been called for. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber-culture or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases where parties, as preëmptors or homestead claimants, have paid double minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid, but only to the original entryman thereof, or to his heirs or personal representatives: Provided, That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of two years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has just been read.

Mr. BERRY. I should like unanimous consent to make a remark or two in regard to the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. If leave is granted I hope the same consent will be given me. I shall not talk longer than the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CAREY. The bill will be debatable after the vote, will it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Wyoming to object. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and for the present withhold my vote.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], but I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). Then, under that arrangement, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired upon all questions with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. STOCKBRIDGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] is detained from the Chamber by illness, and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I understand he has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DIXON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. As he is absent, and as my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is absent unpaired, I transfer my pair to my colleague, and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague [Mr. WILSON] is detained from the Chamber by illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I take it for granted that if my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired upon political questions with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. When I voted upon this motion I did not understand it to be a political question. It seems to have taken that turn, and under my pair I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. The Senator from Massachusetts is absent from the city.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allen,	Dixon,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Frye,	Morrill,	Teller.

Carey,	Gray,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Hale,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	White.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest to the Senator that his pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] be transferred to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], with whom I am paired, and that will enable the Senator from Iowa and myself to vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin to the Senator from Nebraska, and I vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], and I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is unpaired, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). Upon the last roll call I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] and did not then observe that he was absent. I now withhold my vote.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair upon all questions with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote, and announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. HIGGINS. As I have announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. The Senator from Maryland and I have arranged to transfer our pairs so as to enable us to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GIBSON. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allen,	Dixon,	Hawley,	Proctor,
Allison,	Dolph,	Higgins,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Frye,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Teller.
Davis,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,

NAYS—25.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Vest,
Berry,	Coke,	Lindsay,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	George,	Martin,	Walsh,

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 509) for the relief of F. Y. Ramsey, the heir at law and distributee of Joseph Ramsey;

A bill (H. R. 522) for the relief of Benjamin Alvord;

A bill (H. R. 995) for the relief of J. M. Billings; and

A bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1928) to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals;" and

A bill (H. R. 5978) to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CAREY. I ask at this time for the consideration of House bill 6442, and I should like, with the indulgence of the Senate, to make a brief explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4642) to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAREY. Within a few days——

Mr. BERRY. Debate is not in order, I take it, on the pending motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to debate.

Mr. CAREY. I do not propose to debate the motion, but I simply desire to give my reasons——

Mr. BERRY. I do not make any objection to that, but I wanted to remind the Senator from Wyoming that he objected a while ago to my making a few remarks. I shall not, however, object to his doing so.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill the title of which has been read, and I think, if the Senate will allow me to make a statement, there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that the bill will first be read.

Mr. CAREY. As the Committee on Territories has reported an amendment to the bill in the nature of a substitute, I suggest that the substitute be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories; but before concluding was interrupted by

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is evident that the reading of this bill will occupy the remainder of the morning hour, and I wish to inquire, if that be true, whether the resolution which has been pending before the Senate and was passed over will retain its position for the morning hour on Monday as of to-day?

Mr. CAREY. I appeal to the Senator from Nebraska not to object to the bill for this reason: I got out of his way a few days ago, when I had asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, and three different bills were passed by unanimous consent immediately afterwards, and by the consent of the Senator. The bill, the consideration of which I have asked, is of much importance, for $10,000 worth of game has been destroyed in the Yellowstone National Park during the last month.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Wyoming misapprehends me. I have made no objection to the consideration of the bill. I simply inquired of the Chair whether—if the bill should consume all the morning hour, as plainly it will, for there are only ten minutes left—resolutions which have been lying on the table for several days will retain their position and pass over until the next legislative day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the resolutions referred to have had their day, and have gone to the Calendar. There is no resolution pending now.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert:

That the Yellowstone National Park, in the State of Wyoming, as now defined, or as may be hereafter defined or extended, shall be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; and that all the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall be in lawful force and effect in said park: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as to forbid the service in the park of any civil or criminal process of any court having jurisdiction in the State of Wyoming. All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subjected to the same laws as refugees from justice found in the State of Wyoming.

SEC. 2. That said park, for all the purposes of this act, shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Wyoming, and the district and circuit courts of the United States in and for said district shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within said park.

SEC. 3. That if any offense shall be committed in said Yellowstone National Park, which offense is not prohibited or the punishment is not specially provided for by any law of the United States or by any regulation of the Secretary of the Interior, the offender shall be liable to receive the same punishment as the laws of the State of Wyoming in force at the time of the commission of the offense may provide for a like offense in the said State; and no subsequent repeal of any such law of the State of Wyoming shall affect any prosecution for said offense committed within said park.

SEC. 4. That all hunting, or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any bird or wild animal, except dangerous animals, when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human life or inflicting an injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of the waters of the park by means of seines, nets, traps, or by the use of drugs or any explosive substances or compounds, or in any other way than by hook and line, and then only at such seasons and in such times and manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park; and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park, to prevent their capture or destruction, or to prevent their being frightened or driven from the park; and he shall make rules and regulations governing the taking of fish from the streams or lakes in the park. Possession within the said park of the dead bodies, or any part thereof, or of any wild bird or animal shall be prima facie evidence that the person or persons having the same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, or stage or express company or railway company, receiving for transportation any of the said animals, birds, or fish killed, taken, or caught shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall forfeit or pay for every such offense the sum of $100. Any person found guilty of violating any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park, or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals and birds and fish in the said park, for which no punishment is specifically provided by the laws of the United States or of said State, such person shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $1,000 and imprisonment not exceeding two years, either or both, together with the costs of the proceedings.

That all guns, traps, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description used by any person or persons within said park limits engaged in or guilty of killing, trapping, ensnaring, or capturing such wild beasts, birds, or wild animals shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by the officers in charge of said park and held pending the prosecution of any person or persons arrested under the charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, teams, horses, or other means of transportation said forfeiture shall be adjudicated and ordered by the court as a penalty in addition to the punishment provided in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the United States circuit court in said district shall appoint a commissioner, who shall reside in the park, who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made, of any and all violations of the law, or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park, and for the protection of the game and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes authorized by this act. Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with the violation of the rules and regulations, or with the violation of any provision of this act prescribed for the government of said park, and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to fix the punishment prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States district court for the district of Wyoming, said appeal to be governed by the laws of the State of Wyoming providing for appeals in cases of misdemeanor from justices of the peace to the district court of said State; but the United States circuit court in said district may prescribe rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for their appeal to said United States district court. Said commissioner shall also have power to issue process as hereinbefore provided for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any felony within the park, and to summarily hear the evidence introduced, and, if he shall determine that proper cause is shown for holding the person so charged for trial, shall cause such person to be safely conveyed to a secure place for confinement, within the jurisdiction of the United States district court in said State, and shall certify the record of his proceedings and a transcript of the testimony in the case to the said court, which court shall have jurisdiction of the case: Provided, That the said commissioner shall grant bail in all offenses bailable under the laws of the United States and said State. All process issued by the commissioner shall be directed to the marshal of the United States for the district of Wyoming; but nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the arrest by any officer of the Government or employé of the United States in the park, without process, of any person taken in the act of violating the law or any regulation of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the said commissioner shall only exercise such authority and powers as are conferred by this act.

SEC. 6. That the marshal of the United States for the State of Wyoming, with the approval of the judge of the district court of the United States for the said State, may appoint a deputy marshal for said park, who shall reside in said park, and the said United States district and circuit courts shall hold one session of said courts annually at the town of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, at such date as the said courts may order.

SEC. 7. That the commissioner provided for in this act, and the marshal of the United States and his deputies, and the attorney of the United States and his assistants in said State, shall be paid the same compensation and fees as are now provided by law for like services in said State.

SEC. 8. That all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act, and properly chargeable to the United States, shall be certified, approved, and paid as like costs and expenses in the courts of the United States are certified, approved, and paid under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be erected in the park a suitable building to be used as a jail, and also an office for the use of the commissioner, the cost of such building not to exceed $5,000, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the certificate of the Secretary as a voucher therefor.

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to repeal existing laws conferring upon the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War certain powers with reference to the protection, improvement, and control of the said Yellowstone National Park.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories, which has been read.

Mr. VEST. I am very anxious to secure the passage of this or a similar measure; but there are some amendments which I think ought to be made to the bill. It is hardly possible to make them now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that amendment, but I want to amend it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. In line 4, of section 1, of the amendment of the committee, between the words "as" and "now," I move to insert "its boundaries;" after the word "now," to insert the word "are;" and before the word "may," to insert "they;" so as to read:

That the Yellowstone National Park, in the State of Wyoming, as its boundaries are now defined or as they may be hereafter defined or extended, etc.

Mr. CAREY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 8 of the same section, after the word "shall," I move to strike out the words "be in lawful," and insert the word "have;" so as to read:

And that all the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall have force and effect in said park.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 9 of the same section, after the word "construed," I move to strike out the word "as;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid the service in the park of any civil or criminal process, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 4, line 17, after the word "park," I move to strike out the words "to prevent their," and insert the word "from;" so as to read:

And for the protection of the animals and birds in the park from capture or destruction.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 22, after the word "thereof," I move to strike out the word "or;" so as to read:

Possession within the said park of the dead bodies or any part thereof of any wild bird or animal.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 36, after the word "animals," I move to strike out the word "and;" so as to read:

For the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in the said park, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 38, after the word "State," I move to strike out "such person," and insert "of Wyoming;" so as to read:

For which no punishment is specifically provided by the laws of the United States or of said State of Wyoming, shall be deemed guilty, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 39, after the word "guilty," I move to strike out "of an offense," and insert "of a misdemeanor;" so as to read:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 40, before the word "imprisonment," I move to strike out "and" and insert "or;" so as to read:

And shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. First, however, he lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 995) for the relief of J. M. Billings was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 509) for the relief of F. Y. Ramsey, the heir at law and distributee of Joseph Ramsey; and

A bill (H. R. 522) for the relief of Benjamin Alvord.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH resumed the floor in continuation of the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken with interruptions for nearly four hours,

Mr. CHANDLER (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.). As the Senator from Oregon has been interrupted so much, I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to go on after 5 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. Is there any law to prevent him from going on?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want the Senator to feel that I have cut short his speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. QUAY. There is objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Oregon having the floor, has a right to go on as long as he pleases, and there is no rule which can stop him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I certainly understood the Senator from Tennessee to insist that the discussion on this bill should be limited to the hours between 1 and 5 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. On the contrary, the Senator from Tennessee insisted that the discussion should begin at 1 o'clock and continue at least until 5, and as long after as any Senator chose to continue it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not remember any such statement.

Mr. HARRIS. There was no such statement made, but there is no limitation. If the Senator from Oregon, having the floor, chooses to go on he has a perfect right to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I knew the Senator from Oregon was not feeling well to-day——

Mr. GRAY. He can do as he pleases.

Mr. CHANDLER. My object is to let the Senator do as he pleases.

Mr. DOLPH. I am sorry I have not got very far with my speech to-day because I have been interrupted so much. The remainder of it will keep, and I shall give it to the Senate in serial form. I suppose on Monday I shall be asked to give way to Senators who have given notice of their intention to speak on that day, or the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] may then want to resume his speech. I shall be very glad to accommodate Senators; and I shall renew my speech when I can do so at the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly the Senator ought not to yield and let others into the discussion when questions have arisen where they want to be fully heard, and then cut them off. I do not think the Senator wants to do that.

Mr. DOLPH. I am in no hurry. I shall allow everybody to interrupt me and discuss the question who pleases, if he will only quote me fairly, and not put into the RECORD things which I think I have not said or draw unjust conclusions from my remarks. I do not want to be arraigned in the Senate Chamber as a slanderer of the American people.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator did not want the misstatement of my position by the Senator from Colorado to go uncontradicted.

Mr. QUAY. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. TELLER. I have not misrepresented either the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Oregon. I have simply stated what was the logic of their position.

[Mr. DOLPH'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. QUAY. I suggest there is no quorum present, and the hour of 5 o'clock has arrived.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Quay,
Allison,	Coke,	Harris,	Shoup,
Bate,	Dixon,	Martin,	Stewart,
Berry,	Dolph,	Pasco,	Teller,
Blanchard,	George,	Peffer,	Vest,
Call,	Gibson,	Perkins,	Walsh.
Chandler,	Gorman,	Platt,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is no quorum present.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 23, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 21, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which may be of some importance in connection with the Journal. I am not able to say how it will affect the Journal.

When the House was in Committee of the Whole on yesterday, it had under consideration certain bills which it reported favorably to the House, and pending the consideration of another bill, on a motion made with regard to it, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], as appears of record, made the point that no quorum had voted. Immediately thereupon a motion was made that the committee rise; which was agreed to.

It seems to me that the report of the Committee of the Whole, and the subsequent proceedings of the House in passing the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole with that record of no quorum pending, must be a nullity. This proceeding will be found on page 3928 of the RECORD, in the second column. The Chair will observe this language:

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ENLOE) there were—ayes 67, noes 18.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. BUNN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose, and the Chairman of the committee reported to the House that the committee had had under consideration certain bills, which were then taken up and passed; whereas I think the chairman of the Committee of the Whole should have reported that the committee found itself without a quorum.

Mr. COX. But the question of a quorum was not raised on these bills.

Mr. BYNUM. I know; but the committee could not have reported them without a quorum.

Mr. BURROWS. The point of order, I think, should be made against the recognition by the Chair of the motion that the committee rise, when the point was made that there was no quorum, instead of causing the roll to be called. It was the duty of the Chair, when the point of no quorum was made, to immediately cause the roll to be called.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. That is the rule.

Mr. BURROWS. Instead of entertaining the motion that the committee rise, the roll should have been called.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that in Committee of the Whole, when the absence of a quorum is developed, the Chair shall direct the roll to be called; the committee shall then rise and report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered upon the Journal. Then, if a quorum appears, the House shall immediately after go back into Committee of the Whole without motion. That is the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the intention of the House was to construe the condition as if the point of no quorum had been withdrawn. When the point of no quorum was made and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN] immediately afterward moved that the committee rise, it is usual to consider the point of no quorum as being withdrawn and the committee then rises.

Afterwards, when the House convenes, the point of no quorum in committee would not prevent the House from acting on the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, it being assumed that a quorum of the House is present, unless the fact to the contrary is developed by a count in some manner of the members present.

Mr. BYNUM. As a matter of fact, the point of no quorum was not withdrawn.

Mr. ENLOE. That is correct. The point of no quorum was not withdrawn, and it was simply an oversight or an error on the part of the Chair in permitting the committee to rise without a call of the roll.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how that could affect the action taken subsequently by the House on the passage of the bills which had been considered and passed in Committee of the Whole when there was a quorum. And, in addition to that, there is nothing to show that there was not a quorum in the House at the time the bills were passed. There was no test and it was not determined in any way by a vote that there was no quorum present. That condition, therefore, to which the gentleman from Indiana refers does not affect the subsequent action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Journal correctly records what took place, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, there was a rising vote taken on a motion with reference to a pending bill made in the Committee of the Whole, and on that vote a quorum did not appear. As the Chair announced that there were ayes so many and noes so many, without concluding the announcement that the ayes had it, some gentleman made the point that no quorum had voted; and immediately thereupon, and before the announcement of the vote, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BUNN] moved that the committee rise. It does not require a quorum for the committee to rise any more than it does for the House to adjourn, and the Chair can entertain a motion that the committee shall rise at any time, although a quorum did not vote on the question immediately preceding. It is precisely analogous to a motion to adjourn in the House. A vote is taken in the House and no quorum is found, and the point is made that no quorum voted, whereupon a motion may be made and entertained that the House adjourn. That motion is always in order pending the suggestion of any member that a quorum has not voted. Of course, no other motion would be in order in the committee when it finds itself without a quorum except the motion that the committee rise, or for the call of the roll under the rule. But no point of order was made against the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the committee rise, and the Chair entertained the motion because, as I have stated, this motion that the committee rise must be in order at any time, and does not require the presence of a quorum; being precisely similar to the motion, which is always in order in the House in the absence of a quorum, that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the Journal contains a correct recital of the facts. So that, as the Chair understands, there is no suggestion in relation to that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It seems to me that the difficulty arising here, and the only one involved, is that when the Committee of the Whole rose the suggestion had been made that there was no quorum, and the rising of the committee was on account of that suggestion. If before that time the Committee of the Whole had reported to the House the bills which had been considered, no difficulty could have arisen. But there was still something for the Committee of the Whole to do; and the question involved here is whether that something could be done in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. A question of that kind may or may not arise; but the Journal at any rate is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Allow me to say, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], that my position must be correct for this reason: Suppose the roll had been called and a quorum had not responded. If a motion that the committee rise was not in order when the Chair entertained it, it could never have been in order as long as the point was made that a quorum had not voted or had not appeared upon the roll call; and the Committee of the Whole would have been in session yet.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no. The rule provides that immediately on the completion of the roll call in Committee of the Whole, when no quorum has appeared, the Committee of the Whole shall rise, the Speaker resume the chair, and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole report the absentees.

Mr. HATCH. But if the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum there are two modes of getting back into the House. One is upon a roll call, the other upon a motion that the committee rise—just as there are two methods in the House of getting out of the dilemma of no quorum—one is to send for absentees, and the other is to adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS. But as my friend must remember, it has been repeatedly held that when a quorum does not appear in Committee of the Whole, there is but one thing to be done, and that is to call the roll; it has been directly held over and over again that under such circumstances a motion to rise is not in order. The roll must be called; on that point the rule is imperative.

Mr. HATCH. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that in every case cited in the Digest he will find a point of order was made against the motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BURROWS. Possibly that is so.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point that there is nothing before the House.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands. The Journal has been approved in the absence of objection.

EVIDENCE OF HANDWRITING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, transmitting copies of letters from the post-office inspector of New York and the Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department relating to a change in the rule of evidence in regard to the comparison of handwriting in the trial of cases in the United States courts; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF INDEPENDENT TREASURY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for "contingent expenses, independent Treasury," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHEELER of Illinois, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER.

Mr. DUNPHY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 6448) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey.

Mr. DUNPHY (before the reading of the bill was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for unanimous consent, as a gentleman has just intimated to me that he will object.

INDIAN LANDS ON RED LAKE RESERVATION.

Mr. BALDWIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 5103) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota was read.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This bill must be explained before I can consent to its passage in this way.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill is in the interest of the Indians of Red Lake Reservation, and its passage has been asked for by them as a means of preventing delay in the execution of the existing law. Under the Nelson act, as it is termed, the lands referred to in the bill would not be placed on the market for possibly ten years at the rate they are now being estimated.

This country will soon be thrown open for settlement under the Nelson act. The settlers in that country will require the pine for their own uses, and there is no means of getting that pine into the market, and getting the use of it, except through the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the bill unanimously reported?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

Mr. REED. We can not hear a word of this conversation between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BALDWIN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. REED. We would like to know what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. This impression that the gentleman from Georgia is the only member of this House is a mistake.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Maine that I have been listening for myself, and he had better be doing the same thing.

Mr. PAYNE. We do not all occupy the same advantageous position as the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Georgia will tell us what he has learned about the bill——

Mr. PICKLER. How are these lands to be disposed of?

Mr. BALDWIN. Under the Nelson act.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course the right to object is reserved?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. The estimating and examination of these lands are now in progress. The estimators have been at work for the last four years, and it is apparent that it will require five, and possibly ten years, to complete the work at the present rate, and put the lands upon the market. The Indians have asked for this legislation, and I have introduced this bill in their interest.

Mr. PICKLER. How much land is involved?

Mr. BALDWIN. There is a large amount of land, several hundred thousand acres.

Mr. REED. What is it proposed to do with the land?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Sell it.

Mr. BALDWIN. It is proposed to sell it under the act of Congress already passed, under which the terms of sale are provided.

Mr. PICKLER. Is the land to be sold at public auction?

Mr. BALDWIN. Sold to the highest bidder, but at a price not less than $3 per thousand.

Mr. PICKLER. Is this a bill from the Public Land Committee?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes; from the Public Land Committee, and approved by it.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. BALDWIN. A unanimous report; yes.

Mr. PICKLER. How much land is involved?

Mr. BALDWIN. Oh, there are a million acres or more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The proposition is to sell the timber.

Mr. PICKLER. Not the timber alone?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Just the timber.

Mr. PICKLER. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Subject to objection still.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report can be read, subject to objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. This is such an important matter, that if unanimous consent is given for its consideration I shall insist that it be considered in Committee of the Whole. I shall have no personal objection to consideration of the bill, but I think it should be considered in Committee of the Whole, if that point is good.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can we have the bill read again?

The SPEAKER. The bill can be again read by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let us have the report read. I think that will be sufficient.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me just a moment, I think I can explain.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let us have the report read.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to interpose an objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] objects to the present consideration of the bill.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled, "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER], asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows.

"That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or a circuit court, an injunction shall be granted, continued, refused, or dissolved by an interlocutory order or decree or an application to dissolve an injunction shall be refused in a case in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken under the provisions of this act to the circuit court of appeals, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting, continuing, refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve an injunction to the circuit court of appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court during the pendency of such appeal."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let the report be read.

Mr. DRAPER. I desire that the report be read. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. SAYERS. We reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

The report (by Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5216) relative to enlarging the right of appeal in United States courts, report the same back to the House without amendments, and recommend that it do pass.

The seventh section of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," provides that appeals may be taken where preliminary injunctions are granted.

The bill under consideration amends the act of March 3, 1891, by authorizing an appeal where a preliminary injunction is refused or a motion to dissolve an injunction is granted or refused. Under the present law, in cases where preliminary injunctions are refused, no appeal can be taken until the final decree in the lower court.

In many cases the question at issue is a question of law and can be disposed of on bill, answer, and affidavits, as well as after final decree. There is no necessity for the long delay in such cases. An appeal from the refusal to grant a preliminary injunction or from an order dissolving or refusing to dissolve a preliminary injunction is not a supersedeas and can work no harm.

The committee can see no possible objection to the bill, and, believing that it would expedite business in the courts, recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed

On motion of Mr. DRAPER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JUDICIARY ACT.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2794) to amend the judiciary act of August 13, 1888.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I would like the gentleman from Georgia to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from Georgia can make a short explanation.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the act which this bill proposes to amend authorized suits against receivers appointed by the United States courts in the several States without previous leave of the court. Such is the present law. The object of the bill which has just been read is to so amend the act that service in such cases of receivers may be facilitated. In other words instead of limiting the service of the process to the county of the residence of the receivers, the suit may be brought and the service had as if the road were not in the hands of a receiver, and the service may be made either on the receiver or on the agent of the corporation of which he is the receiver. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and there is no earthly objection that can be made to this amendment of the law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Does this bill so amend the law that suit may be brought in any other court against the receiver than the court appointing him.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The present law allows that to be done.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. This does not change that law?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. This does not change that, but simply facilitates the mode of service.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Then, under the law, as amended suit may be brought in a State court against a receiver?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Certainly; the same as now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Is this a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I object.

Mr. CULBERSON. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not object. Will the gentleman allow us to make a statement?

Mr. HEPBURN. I certainly have no objection to the gentleman making a statement; but I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; all right.

LA CROSSE AND EAU CLAIRE.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the names of two cities in Wisconsin with the words composing the names properly spelled and properly arranged. Notwithstanding the efforts that have been made by the reporters of the House to have these mistakes corrected, the proof-readers in the Government Printing Office continue to spell these names wrong.

I desire to have these names appear in the RECORD particularly for the benefit of the Census Office and the other Departments of the Government, who are persisting in spelling these names improperly. They are taking liberties with these names as unwarranted as would be spelling Havre de Grace as one word or New Jersey with a small "j." Recognizing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as the repository of all knowledge of the nineteenth century, and as the proper vehicle for the dissemination of information, I want these two words to appear in the RECORD spelled in the way I have sent up to the Clerk's desk, not only for the benefit of the RECORD, but for the benefit of the Departments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD two names which he sends up.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the explanation of the request?

Mr. SHAW. My explanation is this: These are names of two cities in my district, which are being continually misspelt by the Government Departments. The United States Board on Geographical Names has had the matter under consideration and determined that those names should be spelled in this way. By these misprints, each one of them being printed as one word, the names of the cities can not be recognized. Eau Claire and La Crosse are the names of the cities.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You had better educate the people to do the spelling rather than to take up the time of this House; but I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I object.

JAMES STEWART.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claim of James Stewart, who served as first sergeant Company B, second and first lieutenant Fourth Artillery, and captain Eighteenth Infantry of the United States Army in the late war of the rebellion, for a balace of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion and during his entire time of service in said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due of the United States upon the said claim.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I shall have to object unless we can have the report read.

The SPEAKER. The report can be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5224) for the relief of James Stewart, report:

James Stewart served continuously as an enlisted man in the United States regular Army from October 29, 1851, to November 15, 1861, when he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Fourth Artillery, United States Army, and served as a commissioned officer in the United States Army from then till June 18, 1878. During the time he served as such commissioned officer the following provisions of law were, respectively, in force:

"That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additianal ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States. (5 Stat. L., section 15, page 258, act of July 5, 1838.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service. (Act of July 15, 1870, now section 1262 of the Revised Statutes.)"

He was paid for his services in the said interval of time from November 15, 1861, to June 18, 1878, merely what other officers of his grade were generally paid; and he was paid or allowed nothing whatever in this interval of time on account of his said prior length of service in the United States Army as an enlisted man. For this reason he alleges he was short paid for his services rendered during the said interval of time from November 15, 1861, to June 18, 1878, partially in the suppression of the late rebellion, and requests the passage of this bill, the sole object of which is to remove any statutable limitation bar that exists, or may exist, to prevent the Court of Claims from hearing and determining his demand in the premises as if it accrued within six years.

The commutation value or price, thus put in controversy, of the one additional ration per diem for every five years of prior service computes to about the sum of $4,300, and your committee, having fully considered the matter, can see no reason why the question involved should not be heard and determined, as this officer requests, in the Court of Claims.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do not understand that bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STORER. With the permission of the House, I will make a very brief statement explaining it. There is an old soldier of the United States regular Army who served as a private from 1851 to 1861, having been stationed in Texas most of the time. For good behavior, for temperance, for sobriety, for obedience, he was promoted to a second lieutenancy and served as a second lieutenant until 1878, making twenty-seven years of continuous service. He is on the retired list as a second lieutenant. There seems to have been a law providing that after a man had served twenty years in the regular Army he should be credited with an extra ration in addition to the ration served to men who had served less than that period.

That allowance this man never has received. He asks leave to go to the Court of Claims to ascertain whether he is entitled to it or not, and as it is too late to go under the statute, he asks leave to go in spite of the statute.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

HYPOLITE FILHIOL ET AL.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 782) entitled "A bill for the relief of Hypolite Filhiol and others," now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the House of Representatives the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant, and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana for the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HEPBURN objected.

LANDS FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES, INWOOD TOWNSHIP, MICH.

Mr. STEPHENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5779) to grant certain lands to the township board of Inwood Township, Mich., and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 33, township 41 north, range 17 west, Marquette land district, Michigan, is hereby granted to the township board of Inwood Township, in the State of Michigan, for the purpose of maintaining a public cemetery thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MOON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5779) "To grant certain lands to the township board of Inwood Township, Mich., for cemetery purposes," have had the same under consideration, and report it back with the recommendation that it pass.

The following letter from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office is made a part of the report:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., February 10, 1894.

"SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of January 31, 1894, transmitting a letter dated September 21, 1893, from the township board of Inwood Township, Michigan, addressed to John W. Jockim, Lansing, Mich., and a letter dated January 4, 1894, from David Spielmacher, township clerk, and George W. Gray, supervisor, addressed to John L. Van Pelt, Washington, D. C., and also a statement made by John L. Van Pelt, of No. 9 K street NE., this city, all relating to a tract of land (5 acres) in the SW. ¼ of the NE. ¼, Sec. 33, T. 41 N., R. 17 W., Marquette land district, Michigan.

"It is stated in the communications transmitted that the tract described is desired for cemetery purposes; that the township authorities at one time purchased the same from one who was supposed to have title thereto, but it was subsequently found that their vendor was without title and that title is still in the United States.

"You state that the township authorities desire to acquire title to said tract, by purchase or otherwise, and ask to be advised what steps are necessary to be taken in order to do so.

"In reply I have the honor to inform you that the entire northeast quarter of said section 33 is shown by the records of this office to be vacant, unappropriated, public land, and the whole or any legal subdivision thereof is, accordingly, subject to entry under the public land laws.

"Your correspondents state that the quarter described is of so little value for agricultural purposes that no one is willing to comply with the law and the regulations in order to obtain title thereto under the homestead law.

"If said land is within 3 miles of an incorporated city or town the whole, or any legal subdivision of said quarter section, can be entered by such incorporated city or town for cemetery and park purposes under the act approved September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 502). Herewith I inclose a copy of the circular of May 23, 1892, relative to said act.

"It is stated in one of the communications transmitted by you that land in the vicinity of the tract herein described, which has been entered under the public-land laws, has been so entered chiefly because of the valuable pine timber thereon. If the tract described is timbered and the timber thereon constitutes its chief value it may be entered under the act approved June 3, 1878 (20 Stat., 89), which was made applicable to all the public-land States by the act approved August 4, 1892 (27 Stat., 348). Herewith I inclose a copy of the circular of July 16, 1887, relative to said act.

"Not less than a legal subdivision of the quarter section described can be entered under the laws herein referred to, and if none of these laws are applicable I can suggest no method of acquiring title to the tract desired other than by a special act of the Congress.

"The letters transmitted by you are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

"EDW. A. BOWERS,
"Assistant Commissioner.

"Hon. S. M. STEPHENSON,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withhold that until this little bill can be passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

PROMOTION OF ANATOMICAL SCIENCE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments a bill (H. R. 4693) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND GREAT FALLS ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported in lieu of the bill (H. R. 6040) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway," a bill (H. R. 6777) of the same title; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1895.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose at its former session it was dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out certain words.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there was a disagreement about the salary of the secretary of legation to Mexico. It was, however, agreed——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state the agreement. The committee was dividing, but, upon an agreement, that part of the bill was passed over until the reading of the entire bill by paragraphs could be completed, with the understanding that the committee would then recur to that provision of the bill. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretaries of legations to Turkey, Austria, Spain, and Brazil, at $1,800 each, $7,200.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that the paragraph preceding this, ending with line 21, had been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed the Clerk to resume the reading where it was discontinued at the former sitting of the Committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to submit a motion to strike out in line 20, in the paragraph last under consideration, the words "secretary of legation and."

The CHAIRMAN. That part of the bill having been read——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But it had just been read——

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that it has just been read is as conclusive as if it were read several days ago.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I was not aware that lines 20 and 21 had been read. If they were read at the last sitting of the committee they would still be open to amendment this morning. Now, as soon as the Clerk commenced to read line 22—the beginning of the paragraph last read—I rose in my place for the purpose of making an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Clerk had concluded the reading of lines 20 and 21; and after the reading there arose a question as to an amendment for the consideration of which unanimous consent was asked to recur to a former paragraph. Now, the Clerk has resumed the reading of the bill where it had been discontinued at the last sitting of the committee—at line 22, and has read lines 22, 23, and 24——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. At the very moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch, however, as there seems to have been some misunderstanding, the Chair will entertain a request for unanimous consent——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not want to make any request of that kind; but I will make this point and will take the ruling of the Chair upon it: This morning at the very moment that I discovered that the Clerk had commenced to read line 22 I rose in my place before he had got through the reading of the paragraph and addressed the Chair for the purpose of moving an amendment to strike out in line 20 the words "secretary of legation and." Now, if I had made the motion before the Clerk commenced reading line 22, I would clearly have been in order. I did rise to make the motion the very moment that I ascertained the Clerk was commencing to read line 22. So that I think I am in time.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague [Mr. CANNON of Illinois] states that he was on his feet as soon as the reading of the previous paragraph was concluded; and on that statement he ought to be permitted to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cheerfully accepts the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and upon that statement will entertain the amendment which he offers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out in line 20 the words "secretary of legation and."

Mr. SPRINGER. That will give the whole $4,000 to the consul-general.

Mr. HITT. That is what the salary is now.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Let the amendment be read, so that we may understand the effect of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, in line 20, strike out "secretary of legation and;" so as to read "consul-general to Honolulu, $4,000."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think, Mr. Chairman, the words which I move to strike out would have been subject to the point of order that they change existing law. I did not make such a point, because if the provision as thus worded is really for the benefit of the public service I have no objection to it. But these words appear now for the first time in an appropriation bill or anywhere else in the law. If they be retained the consul-general at Honolulu will have to perform, in addition to his regular duties, those of secretary of legation. Heretofore there has been no secretary of legation at Honolulu. I understand there is really no necessity for any secretary of legation there.

I understand further that under the practice of the State Department in conducting our diplomatic service, a secretary of legation is never allowed to make charges of fees. For instance, if he certifies invoices or takes acknowledgments of deeds or does anything of that kind, it is a matter ex gratia; and it is regarded as below the dignity of the diplomatic service for him to make a charge in such cases. But if the consul performs such duties, he being a commercial officer and upon a business footing, the law allows him a fee.

I do not believe that the change introduced by the incorporation of these words is wise. I think we had better let the matter stand as it has been heretofore. Last year the consular fees at this point were in round numbers $4,000——

Mr. HITT. The salary is $4,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am aware of that; but the fees collected were in round numbers $4,000. If you make this officer secretary of legation, his fees will be nothing, just as the fees of the similar officer at Bogota are nothing. On line 16 you will find the provision:

Secretary of legation and consul-general to Bogota, $2,000.

There was not a cent of fees collected by the consul-general there. The service is performed ex gratia. So that this provision seeking to make this consul-general perform unnecessary duties, as secretary of legation, where he is not needed, and place him on a high salary with no fees, it seems to me ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. In stating that the fees collected at Honolulu were $4,000 last year, is it not true that the fees proper, classed as consular fees, were about $2,000, while $2,000 more was received by this official as agent for the Naval Department of the Government in taking charge of the coaling station there? That is my information at least.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It does not so appear from the report. But the consular fees there were—the nonofficial fees—$4,000, and if you make this change the fees will be nothing.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State recommended additional clerical force at Honolulu, using these words in his letter:

Provision exists for clerical or other assistance to our minister in the islands of Hawaii. Such assistance is at this time necessary, and I have recommended the appropriation of a salary of $1,500 a year for a secretary of legation.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was unwilling to appropriate $1,500 for a secretary of legation; but as we were paying to our consul-general at Honolulu $4,000 a year, we believed that it was proper and right to require him to discharge also the duties of secretary of legation.

At Bogota the consul-general, who is also secretary of legation, gets only $2,000 per annum; and the consul general, who is also secretary of legation, at Honduras gets but $2,000. Therefore, as the consul-general at Honolulu receives $4,000, we thought that he should also discharge the duties of secretary of legation.

It is important, also, that there should be, as stated by the Secretary of State, a secretary of legation at that point, because business there and other interests have increased in the last few years.

This bill, however, does not increase the appropriation. It simply leaves the salary at $4,000, and requires the consul-general to act also as secretary of legation.

Last year the minister occasionally had to leave Honolulu. When the minister left there was no one to act in his place. But if we make the change now proposed in this present bill so as to have a consul-general as well as secretary of legation, he can act as minister in the absence of that official.

I think it proper that it should be so, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs was unanimous in that conclusion, both Democrats and Republicans alike uniting upon it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Secretary of State recommends a secretary of legation to cost $1,500 a year. But we never have had that official. The gentleman from Kentucky now says that business and other interests have increased at that point. Not so.

If you want to make a secretary of legation and need him, you have the right to do so. But my point is that when you make the consul-general secretary of the legation, then, under the practice and the law and usage of diplomatic service, the $4,000 of fees that are collected at Honolulu, for which charges are now made, and a large part of which goes into the Treasury, will cease.

No more fees will be collected, and that is done ex gratia by the diplomatic officer and not the business officer of the Government, the consul. So that instead of complying with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, and spending $1,500 a year as he does recommend, in the name of economy you make that officer perform the duties and lose $2,500 a year at Hawaii besides. The gentleman from Kentucky shakes his head, but I think I am correct in that statement.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangier, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legations, and for printing in the Department of State, $100,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky why the committee recommend an increase of $10,000 at this time.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. In response to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, as regards this paragraph on contingent expenses of the foreign missions, the Committee on Foreign Affairs recommend $100,000. It was only $90,000 in the last appropriation bill, and it was at one time as high as $105,000. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, however, believe that $100,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is an increase of contingent expenses for the diplomatic service for the ministers as proposed here, while the committee have cut down the estimate $50,000 for the consular service, the business officers of the Government, which, in my judgment, is not a wise reduction.

Why, sir, under the last Administration we got along with $90,000 for this leather and prunella. What is there in this economical Democratic Administration, this party of Jackson and Jefferson, that is so close to the people, which requires this Secretary of State to have $10,000 more for leather and prunella and dress parade at a great many places where the country would not be badly served if our diplomatic service was wiped out? What is there to justify it? It does not answer for the gentleman to say that the Secretary of State asks it. A better reason than that ought to be given.

Now, these gentlemen get salaries perhaps not larger than they ought to get, if you have them there at all, but we all know that if three-quarters of these diplomatic officers were wiped out the country would be as well if not better off than it is now. But since you are going to make these places sinecures, places of rest for the lame ducks, the aged and infirm who have lost their grip at home, why, let them go as the Republicans did, instead of giving them this extra amount for leather and prunella. Go back, as you profess, to the frugalities of the ancient Democracy.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Why do you not move to strike out, then?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I will move formally to strike out "one hundred" and insert "ninety," in line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his formal amendment to strike out the last word, then?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, and I move the amendment which I have just suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ninety."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY], who has charge of this bill, to give some reason for this increase of $10,000. I want to submit to him that the present law is $90,000.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that the amount appropriated annually for a number of years was $105,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky (continuing). For a number of years before the last Congress the amount appropriated annually was $105,000 per annum for contingent expenses for foreign missions. In the last Congress, however, when the gentleman's colleague from Georgia [Mr. Blount] was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs the amount was reduced to $90,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And that is the present law.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. But it made a deficit.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But that is the law now.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. No; that is not the law. It was put at that amount in the last appropriation bill, but that made a deficit, and the Secretary of State recommended that we return to $105,000, using this language in his letter published in the Book of Estimates:

Heretofore there has been appropriated under this head the sum of $105,000, which has been found little enough, in consequence of the uses to which the Department is obliged to apply it; but for the last two years only $90,000 has been granted. I have therefore submitted an additional sum of $15,000, which will increase the gross amount to $105,000, and I urge that this be granted.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, after careful consideration, concluded that $100,000 was sufficient.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Upon what basis did you reach that conclusion?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Because $90,000 was not sufficient, and made a deficit of $15,000.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then why did you not give $105,000, if there was a deficit of $15,000?

The fact still remains that the gentleman says there is a deficit of $15,000. Now why did you not grant the whole amount?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. The committee thought the contingent expenses could be paid with $100,000 the next fiscal year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not with $90,000 then?

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Because it has been shown by experience that that was not enough.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But the fact exists that it has been shown that $105,000 was necessary, according to the judgment of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, on the Private Calendar of this House there are twenty-six reports from the Committee of Pensions and Invalid Pensions, about equally divided. We have been having sessions on Friday nights during this session for the purpose of disposing of those bills. Every night we have been met with a captious and querulous opposition. Gentlemen have insisted on calling a quorum and impeding legislation, although the sums involved were inconsiderable. Twenty-five hundred dollars would cover the entire expenditures annually on all these reports; and yet gentlemen have refused to allow business to be done, although we have had here night after night 60, 70, and 75 members, a larger number than participate usually in the legislation of this House.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; for if I do not you will do it just the same. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Do 60, 70, or 75 members constitute a quorum of this House?

Mr. HEPBURN. They do not constitute a quorum; but the business of this House is not done by a quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. There is not a quorum here now.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has participated in any of the actions of the House to-day, and the gentleman knows it. That pretense that a quorum must be here is a flimsy one, used to cover the subtle purposes of gentlemen here to prevent legislation at these Friday night sessions. Now, I want it understood that the same rule that is applied by those gentlemen to this business on Friday nights is to be applied to all business emanating from that side of the House. There will be no more unanimous consents.

Mr. KILGORE applauded loudly. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). There will be no more business without a quorum until there is some kind of an arrangement made by which fairness of treatment shall be accorded by the House to these pension claims. It is not a gracious thing for a member to have to object to a proposition of his friend, but three times I have had to do it this morning. I would have infinitely preferred not to do it, but I intend to persist in that until some kind of fairness is shown by those gentlemen in regard to pension business.

Mr. KILGORE. We are ready to stand by it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then we had better adjourn sine die and go home.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. McRAE. I move to strike out the last word.

I will yield a part of my time to the gentleman from Iowa that he may answer why it is that he did not object to the requests for unanimous consent that came from his own side.

Mr. HEPBURN. I propose, as I am a modest man, to limit myself to half of the duty. [Laughter.]

Mr. McRAE. That is honest; but I submit that the action of the gentleman to-day and the threat he makes is not creditable to the great ability and usual fairness of the gentleman, and I hope that upon mature reflection he will abandon what now appears to be his purpose. The idea that he should interpose objections to just and legitimate public measures out of spite is unworthy of the gentleman.

He seeks to apply to public matters the same unfair methods of which he complains on Friday nights. I did not prefer any request this morning, and personally can not be hurt by his objections, but others have preferred requests for unanimous consent for the consideration of reasonable and proper bills, which have been recommended by committees and are necessary for the protection of the Government; and if the rule of the gentleman as to unanimous consent is to be carried out, why of course no such requests upon his side can hereafter be granted, and he can not proceed very far before his own party friends will feel the effect of it. He has this morning permitted the passage of three or four bills by the Republican side, and every request preferred by the Democratic side has been objected to by him.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in connection with what the gentleman from Iowa has just stated, that it seems to me there is a great deal of unjust criticism made on Friday nights of members who are absent; and while I agree it would be better to have them here, and I would like to see every member here on Friday night, I suppose it is inconvenient for some members to be here. The criticism that pension legislation is delayed because we have no quorum is almost amusing, if not ridiculous, from the fact, Mr. Chairman, that we might have every member of the House here at Friday night sessions, and then any three gentlemen could take up all the time.

We are limited to a session of two hours and a half at these Friday evening sessions, and any gentleman in Committee of the Whole who gets the floor can occupy it for an hour. So you may have a quorum here and any three men who desire to defeat legislation of that character have only to be recognized by the Chair and consume the time. No bill was passed last night, and I believe no pension bill has been passed when regularly reached on the Calendar at these evening sessions, because the point of no quorum has been made.

Mr. MOSES. As to the consumption of time at pension sessions, do not you believe that you, with one exception, consume more time in speechmaking than any other member of the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir. I have not consumed fifteen minutes in speechmaking on a Friday evening this whole session. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, has talked more about the Seminole war four times over than I have talked about soldiers of the war for the Union.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. And he gets them all pensioned, too.

Mr. PICKLER. I am only meeting this cry about the absence of a quorum, and showing that having a quorum here will not do any good when gentlemen on the other side want to defeat pensions.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order, because the pending question is on an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Then I wish to speak on that.

The CHAIRMAN. But the debate on that has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think that in the interest of economy we ought to have a division on that.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steam launch for legation at Constantinople: Hiring of steam launch for use of the legation at Constantinople, $900.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 22 and 23, the paragraph just read, and I ask the Clerk to read the provision that I desire to strike out.

The Clerk again read the paragraph as above.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, heretofore, beginning with the Hon. Samuel S. Cox, when he was our minister at Constantinople, our representatives at that court have had an annual appropriation of $1,800 for the hire of a steam launch for the use of the legation. The committee this year propose to reduce the amount to $900. Now, I propose to "see them and go them one better," by striking it all out. [Laughter.] And I offer the amendment for this reason: We have now a party in power that chooses always the best and most efficient agents for every public service. Now, sir, we understand that away back in the dim past Jupiter ran off with Europa and swam the Hellespont, thus demonstrating the possibilities. [Laughter.] Later on, as we are informed, Leander swam the Hellespont, that he might pay his addresses to Hero [laughter]; and still later Lord Byron swam that historic strait. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, the idea that an American citizen and a Democrat, fitted for the diplomatic service, qualified to represent the great Republic at that effete court, has not the capacity, as he journeys about that locality, to swim as well as those other great personages did before him, is one that ought not to be tolerated in this Democratic House. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Our minister is not supposed to be in love, as Leander and those other gentlemen were.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, you have plenty of people who are in love with that position; and when you propose to strike down the appropriation for the hire of a steam launch for the use of that legation from $1,800 to $900, it seems to me that the reduction can not be justified except upon the ground that the launch is not necessary. As you propose to cut down the amount one-half, you evidently expect our minister to swim half the time at any rate. Now, I believe that if he can swim half the time he can swim the whole time, and I therefore move to strike out this appropriation. [Great laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and, Mr. MARTIN of Indiana having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment, the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the Hon. William H. Enochs, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, 8,000 copies, of which number 2,000 copies shall be delivered to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Ohio, which shall include 50 copies to be bound in full morocco to be delivered to the family of the deceased, and of the remaining 2,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to have engraved and printed a portrait of the said William H. Enochs to accompany the said eulogies.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House with an amendment to the bill (S. 443) to provide for the sale of new tickets by the street railway companies of the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee again resumed its session (Mr. BAILEY in the chair).

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I feel personally aggrieved by the present attitude of the Republican party. During the last two canvasses I have often made the statement in public that whenever the choice was presented on this floor between a high appropriation and a low one, the Republicans always voted for the high appropriation; but the gentleman from Illinois seems to be determined to spoil the argument which I based upon that ground, and if I attempt to use it again with my constituents I shall be compelled to explain the matter by telling them that there is some underlying motive in the opposition which the gentleman is making to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

We all know that the Republican party is in favor of doing everything on a high scale, and I think this House will not be deceived nor will the country be deceived as to the motives which actuate the various amendments that are offered to this bill by the gentleman from Illinois. As to this last amendment, and the suggestions he has made in connection with it, I will only say that while we all know the Democratic party to be "in the swim" at this time, it is not so to the extent which the gentleman from Illinois desires on the part of our representative in Constantinople. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RENT OF LEGATION BUILDINGS IN CHINA.

Rent of buildings for legation and other purposes at Peking, or such other place in China as shall be designated, $2,500.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of line 2, page 7, and insert in lieu thereof, "$3,600."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. This is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State. I will have his letter read.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should be glad if the gentleman would inform us why in this bill the committee have reported a reduction of $600 on this item, and now propose to make an increase beyond the amount which has been allowed heretofore. In other words, why is it necessary to pay now a greater sum for the rent of the building occupied by this legation than is paid at present, or was paid last year?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I will read the recommendation of the Secretary of State, as contained in the Book of Estimates, which very fully explains this matter, and then I will have read the letter which I have sent up.

Rent of buildings and grounds for legation in China.—The sum now appropriated is $3,100. I have accordingly asked that $500 additional be granted. It is proper to add, in this connection, that extensive improvements have been made by the lessors, due to the necessities of the legation and the requirements of the public service at Peking. In view of this enforced outlay on the part of the lessors in erecting, I may add, a fire-proof building for the preservation of the valuable archives of the legation, and making other improvements within the legation compound, I believe that they are justly entitled to a slight increase in the rent, and with the $500 additional satisfactory arrangements can be made to that end. Under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 377, the Secretary of State is authorized to provide for rent not exceeding the sum of $5,000 per annum. I therefore urge that the $3,600 now asked may be granted.

I now ask that the letter of the Secretary of State, which I have sent to the desk, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 9, 1894.

SIR: On page 88 of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895 (House Executive Document No. 5, Fifty-third Congress, second session), appears the following:

"Buildings and grounds for legation to China: Rent of buildings for legation and other purposes at Peking, or such other place in China as shall be designated, * * * $3,600."

Again, on page 298 of the same document, the following explanation appears:

"10. Rent of buildings and grounds for legation in China. The sum now appropriated is $3,100. I have accordingly asked that $500 additional be granted. It is proper to add, in this connection, that extensive improvements have been made by the lessors, due to the necessities of the legation and the requirements of the public service at Peking. In view of this enforced outlay on the part of the lessors in erecting, I may add, a fireproof building for the preservation of the valuable archives of the legation and making other improvements within the legation compound, I believe that they are justly entitled to a slight increase in the rent, and with the $500 additional satisfactory arrangements can be made to that end.

"Under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875 (Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 377), the Secretary of State is authorized to provide for rent not exceeding the sum of $5,000 per annum. I therefore urge that the $3,600 now asked may be granted."

In connection with the foregoing statements, I now have the honor to transmit, for the information of your committee, copy of a dispatch, No. 1755, from the United States minister at Peking, dated November 3, 1893, announcing the occupation of the new legation, and commenting upon the excellencies thereof.

Adding that the Department sincerely hopes that the slight increase now asked for under this head may be granted. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

W. Q. GRESHAM.

To the CHAIRMAN of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I have also a letter of our minister, Mr. Denby, addressed to the Secretary of State, which I will have read, if there be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] has expired; but without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 1755.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Peking, November 3, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I moved into the new office building the 15th ultimo.

Plans of this building will be found in my dispatch No. 1503, of the 30th of March, 1892. They have been faithfully executed.

On the first floor there are four rooms; one for the minister, one for the first secretary, one for the library, and a strong room. These rooms are all large and well lighted.

On the second floor there are four large rooms and one small one over the hall. The large rooms are for the Chinese secretary, the second secretary, the Chinese writer, for books which are not required for ordinary use, and the small one for stationery.

There are two wide halls on each floor.

The work was done under the superintendence of Mr. F. D. Gamewell, who devoted a great deal of time to it. The ironware was all imported from the United States. The building is of the best quality of brick. The roof is of galvanized corrugated iron. The vault for the archives occupies the southeast corner of the lower floor and is 18 feet square. The walls of this strong-room, or vault, are 2 feet thick, lined with fire-brick costing, laid down at Peking, gold, $27 per thousand. The ceiling is vaulted with arch of fire-bricks of three layers, affording ample protection in case of fire falling on the roof. The floor is filled with concrete and covered with Portland cement. The door is a wrought-iron vault door, with vestibule 20 inches deep, and an inner door, also of wrought iron. These doors were manufactured by the Victor Safe and Lock Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The cost of the entire building was 5,100 taels.

The archives have not been put in the vault yet because it is still damp. It will, I think, take some months to dry completely.

The building is an ornament to the compound. It is, without doubt, the finest specimen of architecture in Peking, except, perhaps, two Catholic churches.

I beg leave to thank the Department and the owners of the premises for the construction of this admirable building.

I am, etc.,

CHARLES DENBY.

To the Honorable WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this amendment. It is stated in the letter just read that the cost of constructing the building now in question was 5,100 taels. How much is a tael in our money?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I have read the recommendation of the Secretary of State as contained in the Book of Estimates. The act of Congress of March 3, 1875, allows $5,000 per annum for the rent of the legation buildings. This bill, however, with the amendment proposed, would carry only $3,600. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman will not get a vote till my time is up. I am informed by gentlemen about me that a tael is equivalent to about $1 of our money.

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, that is a mistake.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, how much is it?

Mr. COOMBS. I can not tell the exact amount; but the gentleman's statement is a mistake.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I will assume that the information I obtain from gentlemen around me is correct, as gentlemen on the Foreign Affairs Committee do not appear to know how much a tael is.

Now, here we have a building of eight rooms, costing for its construction about $5,000. We are already paying for this building a rent of $3,100 a year; and without any contract binding us to pay more, the Secretary of State wants to make the owner of this building a present of $500 a year. A rent of $3,600 is more than we ought to pay, if the cost of the building had been $25,000 instead of $5,000. We have made no contract to pay this amount of rent; and it seems to me, while we are borrowing money at 5 per cent, we had better not make any donation of this kind to the owner of this eight-room building when he is already receiving more rent than he ought to have.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had listened when the letter of Minister Denby and the letter of the Secretary of State were read he would have understood the necessity for the passage of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I learn that a tael is equivalent to $1.40; so that the cost of this building, for which we are now paying $3,100 rent, was $7,000; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs propose to pay $3,600, although there is no contract to do so.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is entirely mistaken. I have had letters of the Secretary of State and of our minister to China, Mr. Denby, read in order to give him proper information upon this subject. It has been necessary in order to preserve our archives at Peking to construct a fire-proof building, and by the act of 1875 there was allowed an amount per annum of not exceeding $5,000.

Now, Mr. Denby was so faithful and discharged his duty so well as minister that he was allowed to remain in office during the whole of Mr. Harrison's Administration, and is in office now. He wrote the letter which has been read and it is very satisfactory, and explains the whole matter thoroughly. It is within our power to appropriate $5,000 for this purpose, under the act of 1875 to which I have just referred, but it was believed by the committee that $3,600 was sufficient. We were compelled to have a good substantial fire-proof buildings to take care of our archives. After the most careful consideration the Committee on Foreign Affairs come to the conclusion that this amount set forth in the amendment, $3,600, should be allowed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will give me his attention for a moment I will be obliged to him. Minister Denby, I will say again, reports that the whole cost of this building is $7,000, or 5,000 taels, a tael being equal to $1.40 of our currency, as I have been informed.

Now, then, the propriety of letting the State Department pay Mr. Denby $3,600 every year for the rental of a building that cost $7,000 does not commend itself at least to my judgment. I fear that there must be some favoritism about this appropriation somewhere that allows more than half of the cost of the building per annum for rent. We are not bound to do it under the contract.

This Government is not appropriating money for charitable purposes. There must be some reason for it. No lease has been made, and it does seem to me that if the people are out of employment in all parts of this country, that we only want to be just. We should not be generous where generosity in this case looks like willful extravagance; and if you want to give away this sum of money, do not give it to some favorite who is already getting a large rent for a building that has cost but little; give it to somebody or to some charity that is badly in need of it at home.

Unfortunately, the people who pay the taxes in the United States are out of employment. In many parts of the country they can not get work, we are told. And in place of being generous, as you propose here to be, if you want to exercise your generosity, then give it to some of our own needy people instead of giving it to some favored parties who are getting already half the cost of their building as rent out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a committee amendment. It is proposed by the committee. I ask a division on this vote.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 41.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky and Mr. CANNON of Illinois as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 44; so the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The Committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. BAILEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1928) to amend section 1 of an act approved April 6, 1894, entitled "An act to give effect to the award rendered by the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29, 1892, for the purpose of submitting to arbitration certain questions concerning the preservation of the fur seals;"

A bill (H. R. 5978) to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; and

A bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE RANDALL L. GIBSON.

The SPEAKER. There is a special order set apart for 2 o'clock to-day. It wants but five minutes of that hour, and, without objection, the Chair will submit the special order now, instead of waiting until that time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 7th day of April, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m., be set apart for eulogies on the late Randall L. Gibson.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of the Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, lately a Senator and formerly a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, a great American poet has said:

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken
The light he leaves behind him lies,
Upon the paths of men.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honored usage of this body and of the associate branch of Congress that on the occasion of the death of one of its members we shall turn aside from the cares and activities of our ordinary duties to pay such tribute of respect as may be due to the memory of the deceased. I ask this House to-day to unite with me in this honor to the memory of one who sat here as a Representative from the State of Louisiana for four successive terms, and in the Senate of the United States from March, 1883, till the time of his death in December, 1892, filling these, as he did all the trusts of a long and varied career, with an earnestness, conscientiousness, and power that made him indeed a man among men.

Randall Lee Gibson sprang from Revolutionary stock, and, like many of our notable men, the antecedents of his family and his early studies of the Revolutionary epoch exerted a marked impress upon his character, opinions, and career. John Gibson, the first immigrant of the family, came from England in 1706 with one sister and several brothers and settled near the lower Rappahannock, in Virginia. Subsequently they removed to the vicinity of Sandy Bluff, on the Great Pedee River, in South Carolina. They and their kindred, the Murfees, Saunders, Harrisons, and others warmly espoused the cause of the Colonies and upheld it all through those long, weary years, till when "black and smoking ruins" had taken the place of once prosperous and joyous habitations the patriots of South Carolina entered upon their rich inheritance of freedom.

After the struggle closed the grandfather of Randall Gibson, bearing the same name as his, followed the westward current of American progress and settled in the State of Mississippi, where he became a wealthy planter. His home, termed Oakley, in Warren County, Miss., was noted for its hospitality. His connections and descendants embrace many of the best known names in the Southwest. This grandfather of Senator Gibson is said to have built the first church and founded the first institution of learning in the Mississippi Valley, fitly named Jefferson College. His wife, Harriet McKinley, was the daughter of John McKinley and Mary Connelly, both natives of Ireland. McKinley was an officer of the Virginia line in the Revolution, and died in the service of the Commonwealth in 1782.

Tobias Gibson, son of Randall Gibson, of Mississippi, and father of Randall Lee Gibson, of Louisiana, settled in Terre Bonne Parish of our State, where he became one of the wealthiest and most influential sugar-planters in that country. He was a warm personal and political friend of Henry Clay, and his summer residence at Lexington was a headquarters for those who supported the great American orator and statesman. Tobias Gibson married Louisiana, the daughter of Col. Nathaniel Hart, of Spring Hill, Woodford County, Ky. Her mother came from the Preston stock of Virginia, and he himself was nearly allied to Thomas Hart Benton and Mrs. Henry Clay. Spring Hill was one of those great Southern homes and households which belong to our past history, and were the products of a civilization no longer ours indeed, but yet even now redolent of memories of refinement, culture, manly breeding, courage, honor, and unstinted hospitality, the nurseries of a type of character in men and women that need not shrink from comparison with any other in the world or in all history.

It was in this typical Southern house that Randall Lee Gibson was born September 10, 1832. There and at Lexington, Ky., he passed much of his boyhood. Here was his earliest schooling in books, and here also his other education of country life, with the benign influences of home, family, forest, and field. There was for him a like healthy training at his father's plantation in Louisiana. In 1849 he went to Yale College, where he took high rank and graduated four years later with special distinction. There were formed some of the most cherished and enduring friendships of his life. He always spoke of Yale with proud and affectionate retrospect. His friends at Yale were dear to him always. Of this period of his life the late distinguished Judge Edward C. Billings, his classmate and close friend, said:

I wish I could fully delineate Randall Lee Gibson as he stood up and delivered the class oration in June, 1853, at Yale College. In his presence and appearance were united that which was comely and fascinating in the beauty of youth and scholarly in speech and that which was commanding in intellect, and above all the impressiveness and dignity of an earnest purpose to do well his part, not alone because it was to be connected with himself, but also because he appreciated and enjoyed everything that was well done.

Gibson studied law in New Orleans and graduated at the University of Louisiana in 1855. He then went abroad and spent three years in Europe. This travel was not for him a journey of idleness and pleasure, as it is with many. He had been a close and careful student and a diligent reader. His days in Europe were only a part of a liberal education. He studied in Berlin, and visited Russia and other countries, including Spain, where he spent six months at the American legation. In later life he frequently revisited Europe with his wife, but he traveled mainly for health and instruction. He studied and observed, gathering up stores for future use. He was never an idle man and what he did was with a high and serious purpose in life.

On his return to America this young man, so well educated and equipped, naturally followed his father's steps and became a sugar-planter. Country life in the South possesses great attractions even for those most richly educated and endowed. There were books, horses, hunting, the duties of the plantation, the kind and just government of those placed under him by the ordination of Divine Providence, abundant leisure and opportunities for study and research, and a society founded upon the sentiment of honor, respect for law, and reverence for women. There was nothing in the fascination of the Old World or of cities to wean him from this plantation life, which had bred Washington, Jefferson, Calhoun, and a host of worthies, and now welcomed to its charmed circle and happiest influences this accomplished and scholarly young recruit.

Even then he took a partial interest in politics, his mind leaning to State rights and Democratic opinions. It was, however, his nature to do well whatever he had in hand, and the work of a sugar plantation, its economies, methods, and forces, he then mastered so thoroughly that when in years long afterwards he came to deal with this great interest as a representative in Congress, the fullness and precision of his knowledge made him easily the first in the work of the committee and of the House, and a bulwark to the people who struggling for a living, rested on his strong arm and wise guidance. At that epoch, so early as it now seems to us, Louisiana blossomed as the rose. The harvest season in the parishes came to a wealthy, a prosperous, and a happy population. White and black living in a repose and peace almost Arcadian, hardly realized that on the horizon there hung the cloud which was destined soon to blacken the fair face of all that bright, sunny land.

Two short years passed and our young planter found himself bound in honor and duty to leave the happy home and peaceful avocations to which his tastes and education naturally conducted him, and to take his part in the stern realities of war. His native land had been invaded; the land of his youth, his home, his kindred, and all that he held dear and sacred was in peril. Of the justice of the cause of the South—that her struggle was purely defensive, however he might deplore the collision of the warring sections—he could feel no doubt. Nor could he doubt as to his duty. It was not a time for any to hold back. Young and ardent as he was, his thoughtful temperament and wise study of history could not fail to impress him with the solemn character of the ordeal of battle. He weighed all the risks to life, and fortune, and to the State, but these thoughts to so high a nature as his only nerved and strengthened his purpose.

Sectional passion, with thirty years of cessation of the conflicts of hostile armies, have given place to a broader and more generous feeling and to a yearning for a peace without recriminations or prejudice against any section; but stronger than this wise sentiment we find a disposition to do honor to the manhood and courage of those who in either army periled their lives for their convictions. The list of the heroes of the civil war is beginning to be regarded as a common heritage of honor. Men differ and will continue to differ as to the origin and causes of this great strife, but the discussion is historical, and does not involve present political issues.

In the roll of honor of which I speak, few stand higher than Gibson, and none more worthy. His record from first to last is that of duty well performed. The soldiers in my hearing know that there can be no higher praise than this. He lacked unfortunately the vigorous physique which enable many men to withstand the hardships and exposure of camp life, the rigors of the wintry storm, the march and the many trials of battle. There were no winter quarters with fires, blankets, clothing, and provisions for the Confederate forces. The strain was incessant. It was amid such hardships and exposure near Corinth in 1862 that this delicately nurtured young man first developed that terrible malady—hereditary gout—which in after years so often paralyzed his best thoughts and energies and tortured his frame to the infirmity which would have driven a common man to seek repose.

The intellect and the will triumphed over the body, and for over thirty years, in war and in peace, he braced himself to perform the duties of life. He was not an educated soldier, but he soon made himself a thorough one, and as such won the confidence of his troops and the commendation of his superior officers. Entering the Southern army as a private in the ranks, he was soon appointed to be a captain of the First Louisiana Artillery, and was stationed at Fort Jackson, below New Orleans. Not long afterwards he was elected colonel of the Thirteenth Louisiania Infantry. At Shiloh, before the battle, his regiment was assigned to picket duty with three others, and all, as it chanced, were without a brigadier. By common consent this honor was conferred upon him, and this brigade, thus led by Gibson, made a special reputation for heroism in those two days of fierce slaughter, stubborn endurance, and wonderful valor.

Hardly any brigade was more severely tried and tested in that battlefield than the regiments thus hastily thrown together under a new commander, and no man but one of rare force could thus have evolved from raw troops the steadiness and work of veterans. The service thus performed was the prelude to a long and honorable career. Gibson was present in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary, Ridge and other fields and in the campaigns of 1862, 1863, and 1864 of the Western army. One-third of his brigade was killed and wounded at Murfreesboro. He was trusted and commended by Polk, Hardee, John C. Breckinridge, Cheatham, Dan Adams, Maury, Preston, Stephen D. Lee, Richard Taylor, Joseph E. Johnston, and Hood.

Gen. H. D. Clayton in his report of the battle of Jonesboro, fought on 31st August, 1864, says that Brig. Gen. Gibson, seizing the colors of one of his regiments, dashed to the front and to the very works of the enemy. The brigade lost there one-half its members. Gen. Stephen D. Lee makes special mention of the gallant crossing of the Tennessee River near Florence, Ala., by Gibson and his brigade. When Hood's army was defeated at Nashville by Thomas, it fell to the lot of this brigade to check the progress of the enemy near Overton Hill under the immediate eye of Gen. Lee. Gen. Hood gives him the highest praise. He says:

Gen. Gibson, who evinced conspicuous gallantry and ability in the handling of his troops, succeeded in concert with Clayton in checking and staying the first and most dangerous shock, which always follows immediately after a rout.

Again he says that Gibson's brigade and McKenzie's battery of Fenner's battalion acted as "rear guard of the rear guard." Here we have a soldierly character and force developing itself and shining the more brightly as calamity thickened and the ordeal became more difficult with greater and greater odds and each hour bringing a lessening hope of final victory. Other work, however, remained to be performed. When Gen. Canby with a heavy force moved against Mobile, Gen. Gibson was detached by Gen. Maury from his main army with a few less than 2,000 men and ordered to hold Spanish Fort on the east side of Mobile Bay. For more than two weeks amid incessant fighting he maintained his position in the intrenchments of these works against a force estimated to be 20,000 strong, aided by seventy-five cannon and a large fleet, inflicted a large loss upon his assailants, and finally by a well-conducted retreat saved nearly all his command except those already killed or too severely wounded to be withdrawn.

These operations at Mobile Bay were the last great struggle of the war. Gen. Richard Taylor, in recognition of Gibson's services, enlarged his command, but this long and dreadful conflict of the two sections came to a close, and was terminated by surrender of the Confederate armies. Gen. Gibson's parting address to his troops was worthy of him and of them. He said:

As soldiers, you have been among the bravest and most steadfast. As citizens, be law-abiding, peaceful, and industrious.

This closing sentence furnishes the key to his political action and aims from 1865 till the hour of his death.

Like nearly all his associates, Gen. Gibson found himself at the close of the war ruined in fortune. His father's splendid sugar estate in Terrebonne was a wreck. To restore it without ample capital and reliable, efficient labor was impossible. He therefore settled in New Orleans and devoted himself to the practice of the law. His labors were crowned with unusual and immediate success, for few possessed higher adaptation to the requirements of the bar. It was at this time of his life, in 1867, that he met and married Miss Mary Montgomery, the charming and accomplished woman who lent such exquisite grace to his household and brought to him a tenderness and devotion that made her indeed a ministering angel. It was her fate to be summoned before he was called away, but not until many years of mutual happiness had blessed them both and strengthened him to meet the increased cares and burdens of a public career, and to bear up under the malady which for long years impeded his best endeavors.

Hardly any man in Louisiana was better qualified for a Congressional career at the close of the civil war than Randall Gibson, but the way was not open for him or for any representative man of Louisiana till long afterwards. To recall the epoch now seems like reviving a painful dream. The State of Louisiana was fast bound in misery and chains. It was held in the iron grasp of an alien rule under which neither its intelligence nor property had a voice. The State had been left by the war literally a wreck and a desolation.

The work of rebuilding the waste places, the restoration of paralyzed industries, the reorganization of society, education, and the like, would have been a herculean task under the best auspices and by the best of men, but nothing was done to evoke the best forces; and on the contrary, everything to wound, to oppress, and to retard the healthful processes of recovery. It was not until 1872 that Randall Gibson could be elected to this House, and even then he was not admitted. In 1874 he was chosen by the First district of Louisiana, and took his seat in December, 1875, as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress. The House was full of strong men. Among its members were Kerr, Speaker, BLACKBURN, Cox, Garfield, HOLMAN, Lamar, Blaine, Morrison, Randall, Tucker, Alex. H. Stephens, and Gibson's gifted colleague, E. John Ellis, of Louisiana.

But if the actors on the stage were able and brilliant, the themes were even greater. Party passion ran high. The feelings of the war had only slightly subsided. The Southern States were only slowly and painfully regaining their equality in the Union. Three of the number, including Louisiana, were yet struggling for home rule, the rule of the taxpayer, and for a staple and economical government suited to an impoverished people, for the right to work and accumulate free from wanton spoliation. There were strong prejudices to be disarmed, the prejudices of a powerful party that had long held the National Government.

The situation was complicated by the pending of a heated Presidential struggle which threatened the country with a civil war, not between sections but nearly balanced parties. When was there ever a condition that imposed graver duties and responsibilities on a representative of Louisiana or required more of wisdom, judgment, strategy, self-control, diplomatic tact and resources than this? and yet it is not too much to say that Representative Gibson proved himself equal to the occasion. He had had no previous legislative experience, but his education and studies were profound and he soon proved himself a natural parliamentarian and man of affairs.

At the outset of his legislative career Gen. Gibson, whose aim was to avoid violent controversies, and by appeals to reason of both parties to accomplish results for the general good, found himself forced to meet repeated assaults upon his State and constituents involving their good name and conduct. One of his earliest speeches in Congress was a vindication of Louisiana in connection with the election of 1876 for President and State officers, and thus it became necessary to review the work of the famous returning board. He discharged this unpleasant duty with frankness and plain speech, but he put the cause of his State with a spirit of justice, moderation, and fairness that could not fail to impress the House and public opinion. He spoke from the standpoint of a national and conservative statesman, accepting the logic of events and the results of the war so disastrous to the South, accepting emancipation and the equal political rights of the two races as a basis of action, disclaiming sectionalism, deprecating it and pleading for peace and justice to his people. He never departed from this keynote of policy throughout his career, not even in denouncing bayonet rule and the use of troops at the polls.

It was this admirable temper and national spirit, joined to his high character and rare power in personal intercourse with men, that enabled him to appeal successfully to President Grant at the most critical moment in the history of Louisiana, and to stay the effort that was made to induce President Grant to employ the Army to crush out the rightful government of the State. The struggle of the friends of the Packard government to win Gen. Grant in this juncture was incessant. The strongest influence wielded against them, as they well recognized, was that of Representative Gibson. Both under the administration of President Grant and President Hayes there were men who rendered most invaluable service, but there is no one to whom Louisiana is more deeply indebted for her final deliverance than Gibson. He had the respect of President Hayes, who freely consulted him. There was nothing loud or ostentatious in this great service. Like most of the potent work in public life, it was rendered quietly, but it was none the less effective. Then once more with the light of hope upon their brows the sons of Louisiana began to plant, to sow, and to reap. Anarchy, misrule, and despair gave place to order and progress.

But aside from all sentimental questions and the transcendent issue of local self-government, and both before and after its final adjudication, the most difficult duties devolved upon a representative of Louisiana. These were not party questions, but they were not less difficult of adjustment and demanded the most unwearied and skillful devotion. Among the most important of these issues which required Gen. Gibson's constant care from the day he entered this House during his four terms of service and in the Senate after he entered that body in March, 1883, were the protection of the great sugar interest of Louisiana and the question of the improvement of the Mississippi River. Both were vital to Louisiana and important to the whole Union. But he thoroughly understood them and in knowledge of each he had hardly a peer in either branch of Congress. To detail the successive steps of his labors on these questions would be to repeat their history for a series of years. I can barely glance at a work so familiar to his contemporaries in Congress.

The sugar industry of Louisiana before the civil war had grown to large proportions, and supplied one-half of the American consumption. By the havoc of war and emancipation it had been reduced to almost nothing, but was now gradually expanding. Upon its maintenance and development depended the subsistence and prosperity of nearly half of the people of the State, but this development it was vain to expect under hostile tariffs. All through the earlier period of American history down to a recent date the prosperity and necessity of the duty upon sugar had been questioned by no party or statesman. It was a prominent feature in every tariff for a hundred years. But soon after Gen. Gibson took his place on the Ways and and Means Committee in the Forty-fifth Congress he found himself confronted with measures involving changes in the revenue laws.

The wisdom and lessons of the past were only partially remembered, and this interest so important to his State was imperiled by repeated assaults and propositions which, if carried, would have wrought a fresh desolation in Louisiana. He was a friend to the policy of a revenue tariff and moderate duties, for he had been a wise student of economic science, but for that very reason he demanded a fair revenue duty on sugar. He was not willing to see Louisiana sacrificed to foster the interests of Cuba, Jamaica, or any other country. As far back as 1876 he opposed the passage of the legislation devised to carry out the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty, which he deemed injurious to American interests. His labors for the sugar industry in the committee, in speeches on the floor, and with individual members of both parties engrossed much of his time and energies.

He had a perfect knowledge of the numerous details and intricacies of these duties, and he knew the history of the contest and the past legislation. He had the skill to grasp a difficult situation, to combine favors and influences, to judge what could be done and how to do it; how much to yield and how much he could fairly demand. No cunning device of unfriendly interests escaped his watchful vigilance. He was always on guard and always at the front. He was the recognized leader of this interest in Congress every day and hour of his service, but it was as a public officer and not as a planter to be personally benefited; for he never had the capital to restore his old plantation. The final adoption of the polariscope test was largely due to his early and constant advocacy of its merits and necessity to protect the revenue and prevent fraud. The whole subject of this industry was to Congress a new discussion, but he illuminated it with a flood of light.

Not less valuable were Gen. Gibson's wise services in respect to the legislation happily enacted by Congress to harness the forces of that mighty current well termed the "Father of Waters," to make it the great artery of a vast and increasing commerce, to prevent its ravages and destructive floods, and to make it an ally to civilization and industry, a blessing to man instead of a curse. The genius of Capt. James B. Eads had already pointed out the way to open the closed mouth of the Mississippi, and the liberal hand of Congress responding to the call of the great valley had provided the means. One of Representative Gibson's earliest steps in Congress was to aid in supplementing this legislation by modifications which enabled Eads to continue his work, to expedite it, and push it forward till, to use the words of Gibson himself: "The jetties were a perfect success." But the main problem, namely, the treatment of the great river from Cairo or indeed from its head waters to the Gulf remained to be solved.

The most eminent hydraulic engineers of the country had made its forces and phenomena a study and had differed as to the remedy to be applied. The best thoughts of the best minds of the South and West in Congress at this time were exercised upon the two great questions: first, what plan of treatment for the river should be adopted; and next, supposing some mode to be preferred, how could Congress be induced to grant the ample means needed to carry out the plan. For a long period efforts had been made to induce Congress to rebuild the levees, but all these efforts had failed. Capt. Eads had for years insisted on the policy of concentration of the waters and obtaining a uniform width for the river; but there were so many conflicting opinions and plans that it seemed vain to ask Congress to adopt any one of them.

Amid all this confusion of counsels it was the happy conception of Gen. Gibson to propose a scientific commission, to be composed of the ablest men engaged in the public service and in private life, who should examine the river with a view to the improvement of its navigation, the prevention of floods, and the promotion of commerce, and after considering the different plans and methods suggested, to report to the Secretary of War a plan of comprehensive improvement. It was this plan of a commission that was finally adopted by Congress, and to it the country is indebted for the most beneficent results already accomplished, and for the assured prospect of final realization of one of the grandest works of modern civilization. Yet this wise law was not passed until after years of persistent struggle by its friends.

Out of the many able and zealous friends of this policy in Congress from all sections of the country who contributed to its adoption and maintenance, Representative Gibson was most conspicuous by the earnestness, fullness of information, and power which he brought to the discussion, and by the ceaseless vigilance and strategy with which he guarded the River Commission against all attempts to impair its powers and usefulness. The plan of treatment for the river adopted by the Commission was mainly the one advocated by Capt. Eads and in which Gen. Gibson fully believed. The mind in Congress which expounded and defended the plan of the Commission and the arm which upheld it, Eads always recognized as Gibson's. The names of both men are linked inseparably with this great measure. How eloquently does it contrast with the fruitless strifes and bitter phrases of lesser minds? Who shall set bounds to its blessings or put too high a value on the patriotism of those who carried it on to its high consummation?

I need not review the work of Gen. Gibson on other questions as a Representative and a Senator. The location of the mint at New Orleans, the establishment of closer commercial relations with Mexico and South America, the general work of river and harbor improvement, the reformation of the tariff, questions of the currency, the educational bill, the work of the Agricultural Bureau, the forfeiture of the land grant of the Backbone Railroad Company—these and many other topics were the objects of his care. He labored unsuccessfully to curtail the secret sessions of the Senate and to repeal the objectionable statute which disfranchises all ex-Confederates for positions in the Federal Army.

He never spoke for mere display. No small part of the most valuable work of a Representative is done in committee, or in personal intercourse with his associates, or with the President and heads of Departments. Gen. Gibson's influence in all these directions was unusual. He neglected none of the honorable instrumentalities essential to success. He had the confidence and respect of every President from Grant to the present occupant of the chair. His personal relations with such eminent men as Beck, Morrison, Randall, Carlisle, Bayard, Lamar, Tilden, Andrew White, Evarts, Sherman, Garfield, Hayes, Cameron, and Blaine were such as few enjoyed. The value to his people of such relations of confidence is too obvious to be insisted on.

Randall Gibson was an educated man and a scholar. He took the deepest interest in every scheme for educating the youth of the South, for none knew better than he the value of such education, and how greatly the opportunities for acquiring it had been cut off by the waste of the war and the widespread poverty of the people. It came to him, therefore, like a benediction when Paul Tulane, then living at Princeton, N. J., but a former resident of New Orleans, sought his aid and counsel in carrying into practical effect his noble and benevolent plan of making a large donation for the "encouragement of intellectual, moral, and industrial education among the white young persons of the city of New Orleans." Mr. Tulane could not have found a wiser or more sympathetic adviser than Randall Gibson. He formulated the method and plan on which the donation was to be made, and defined the purpose to which it was to be applied.

As has been said by one who well knew whereof he spoke:

> He selected the men whom Mr. Tulane associated with himself as the trustees of his sacred gift. As president of the administration, he impressed on each and every one of them his own high sense of the gravity of the functions with which they were charged. He was the electric cord which connected them directly with Paul Tulane, and maintained that perfect harmony and confidence between them which led to the constant enlargement of his bounty. His wisdom selected the distinguished man who as president of the university has organized its splendid faculty, has shaped its course of study, has planned its methods and degrees, and has in all respects conducted its affairs with such signal sagacity and success.

In a word, the character and intellect of Randall Gibson are thoroughly impressed upon this munificent foundation of the noble philanthropist. This institution was the object of Gen. Gibson's love and solicitude even to his latest breath.

Early in November, 1892, Senator Gibson, then in New Orleans, was seized with a recurrence of the malady which had so many years preyed upon him. His physician ordered him to the Hot Springs of Arkansas, where on a former occasion he had found much benefit. He went there under the care of a devoted friend, and at first he seemed to improve. But this was only illusory. His disease had approached nearer and nearer the citadel of life. His powers of resistance had waned till nothing was left but to yield with composure and courage to the last dread summons. He passed away on the 15th of December, 1892, surrounded by those whom of the living he loved best. Death did not find him unprepared. His dear wife, whose name in his last moments was so often on his lips, had preceded him years before to the better land. He had realized for many months how frail was his tenure of life, and he had made calmly all his arrangements for his last journey. The love and care of his surviving children were much indeed to live for; but his public career was well rounded and complete. It lacked nothing in its perfect symmetry.

Hardly any man of our day had had a better or higher conception of statesmanship. He was always a student of affairs, of history, of religion, morals and conduct. Everything relating to the foundations of government, and especially our own Government, he had studied. He was familiar with ancient and modern history, with the lives and writings of Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, and all the great men of the Republic, and with what may be called the classics of politics. Whether in debate or private intercourse he was effective. As a speaker he was direct, argumentative, persuasive. He brought to bear all the researches of legitimate debate; but he was careful not to wound the feelings or impugn the motives of his opponents. His retort might disarm, but left no sting. His gentleness, tact, and consideration for others was conspicuous in public and private life. He spoke well, yet he was eminently practical. He aimed in action not so much to destroy as to build up and create; in speech to conciliate and convince. He understood the arts of government, the necessity for compromise, and the value of peace with honor.

Hardly any man from the South of late years has so much impressed himself on legislation. In his public relations Gen. Gibson without being repellant bore himself usually with a certain degree of stateliness and reserve. But in the society of his friends no one could be more natural, frank, engaging, and companionable. He enjoyed social intercourse, but no one was more abstemious or free from dissipation. He was a man of clear morals and speech, and was imbued with the profoundest respect for religion and virtue. Bigotry he had none. He believed in religious liberty in the largest and best sense. As a friend he was kind, sympathetic, instructive; as a man of society, courteous and conciliatory; as a husband and father, tender, affectionate, and true.

> His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him, that nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

If he had ambition who shall blame him? It was an ambition not low, nor selfish, nor sordid. It inspired him to serve his State and the Union, to help to build up an impoverished and suffering section, and to increase the happiness and progress of mankind. It is by such generous aspirations that humanity advances to successive triumphs and states become great and opulent.

A man will sometimes unconsciously reveal his own nature in describing another's. We find a broad light cast upon the formative influences that shaped the character of our departed friend in his own eulogy upon the late Thomas H. Herndon, of Alabama. Said he:

As a general rule public men are the logical expressions of the tone and temper, the outgrowth of the local conditions and habits and culture and institutions of the people, and indicate their characteristics and qualities as surely as certain plants and fruits and trees do particular climates. His family [Mr. Herndon's], had emigrated from Fredericksburg, a part of the Old Dominion which has been prolific in men celebrated for all the virtues that adorn human nature, as well as polished manners and intellectual accomplishments. They belonged to the country people of Virginia who have given to the world names that command its admiration and homage. * * * Inheriting traditions so elevating, and representing a people themselves intelligent, brave, and virtuous, how could he prevaricate, or attempt to deceive or descend to subterfuge, or play the demagogue, or betray any trust, or fail of duty anywhere, or his name be less than it was—the synonym for honor.

On another occasion we find him laying a flower upon the grave of a departed colleague, Michael Hahn, of Louisiana. He cited a passage taken from Festus by Mr. Hahn in a published address, and said he doubted not that the noble sentiments therein expressed found a lodgment in his memory because his heart beat responsive to them, and that they inspired the aspirations of his life. These words match well and fitly the soul and aims of him of whom we speak to-day:

Life is more than breath and the quick round of blood;
It is a great spirit and a busy heart.
The coward and the small in soul scarce do live.
One generous feeling—one great thought—one deed
Of good, ere night, would make life longer seem
Than if each year might number a thousand days
Spent as this is by nations of mankind.
We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

[Mr. HOLMAN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. BLAND withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

[Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the late Senator Randall L. Gibson, of Louisiana, was elected a member of the Forty-fourth Congress and took his seat in December, 1875, at the same time I did—he on the Democratic and I on the Republican side of the House. Looking over the list of members of that Congress to-day it will be found that but seven of all the members who served with Senator Gibson in the Forty-fourth Congress now remain in the public service as members of this body. They are Judge HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. BLAND of Missouri, Gen. HARMER of Pennsylvania, Judge CULBERSON of Texas, and Mr. CANNON, Mr. SPRINGER, and myself, of Illinois.

Six members who served with Senator Gibson in the House as members of the Forty-fourth Congress were serving with him in the Senate at the time of his death, and still remain Senators, viz, Senator HOAR of Massachusetts, Senators FRYE and HALE of Maine, Senator BLACKBURN of Kentucky, Senator MILLS of Texas, and Senator HUNTON of Virginia. And so, Mr. Speaker, there are to-day but seven members of this body and but six members of the Senate who were associated with Senator Gibson as members of the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress. Such are the changes among those who make the laws of the land.

Many members of the Forty-fourth Congress, I trust, still survive, and are enjoying the quiet of private life, free from the noise and dissension of political strife, and free from the care and anxiety which a faithful public servant in the conscientious discharge of his public duties must ever feel. Quite a large number, like the distinguished Senator to whose memory we pay tribute to-day, have passed away, and are now safely over the other shore, where we know we must sooner or later join them. But Senator Gibson was not only a member of the Forty-fourth Congress, but was reëlected and served as a member of the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, and at the close of his fourth term in the House, having been elected a member of the Senate, he took his seat in that body and remained in the Senate until the day of his death. I can not say, Mr. Speaker, that I was at all intimate with Senator Gibson, either while he was a member of this body or after he became a Senator. But from our first meeting as members of the Forty-fourth Congress I had a pleasant acquaintance with him and knew him well, and he always impressed me as a gentleman of high character. I was not associated with him on any of the committees of the House on which he served, and it is there where we have the best opportunities, I have thought, of observing the better qualities and real worth of members. But he was a man of ability, and in his second term was made a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and again served as a member of that committee in the Forty-sixth Congress.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, the House being Republican, he was made a member of the Committee on Commerce, that committee then having not only its present jurisdiction, but also jurisdiction over rivers and harbors, and I feel entirely justified in saying that Senator Gibson was an active, intelligent, and prominent member of those important committees. I however remember this distinguished gentleman more particularly for the great interest he took in the improvement of the Mississippi River. Representing as he did, like myself, a district bordering on the Mississippi River, and feeling a deep interest in everything relating to its improvement, as both of us did, we were in that way brought together and worked together for the permanent improvement of that great river, which waters one of the greatest and richest valleys in the world, and I am sure no one took deeper interest in all legislation relating to the Mississippi River and its improvement than did the late Senator Gibson.

The people of the Mississippi Valley and of the whole country, as I believe, are greatly indebted to him for the legislation leading to the creation of the Mississippi River Commission, and the entering upon the great work of the permanent improvement of the river. If he had done nothing else, his public service in connection with the improvement of the Mississippi River alone would entitle him to the gratitude and respect of the country, and most certainly to the people of the Mississippi Valley.

As a native of the South, it was not unnatural that Senator Gibson should have been found a soldier in the Confederate service during the late war.

I am not, Mr. Speaker, sufficiently familiar with his military service to refer to it to-day, particularly. That he was a brave and gallant officer, and served with great distinction the cause he believed to be just, there can be no doubt. The tribute paid to his memory by sorrowing comrades when he was laid away at rest by the side of his wife, at Lexington, Ky., was touchingly beautiful, and showed that his memory was revered not only by them, but by the multitude who had assembled to honor the departed citizen, soldier, and Senator.

Mr. Speaker, it was with deep regret I heard of the death of Senator Gibson; I followed his remains to their last resting place with sadness and sorrow. He was a pleasant, courteous, dignified gentleman, liberally educated and highly cultured. He was an honorable, able, and faithful Representative and Senator, and a brave and gallant soldier, and I am glad to have the opportunity of uniting with his friends to-day in paying tribute to his memory.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Randall Lee Gibson, Louisiana lost one of her most devoted sons and most valuable public servants. He served her in war and in peace, in the camp and the council, always with devoted loyalty and always acceptably. He possessed the confidence of her people, and now that death has silenced detraction and removed the cause of jealousy which always attends successful careers, no one denies that he deserved it. It has not fallen to the lot of any other Representative from that State to be prominently connected with so many measures of vital importance to her welfare.

To him was given the credit by the late Capt. James B. Eads for the success of the legislation which promoted the construction of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi, which have been of such inestimable benefit to the whole valley. No other Senator or Representative could claim equal effectiveness with him in the adoption by Congress of the great policy of internal improvements which promises in the near future to redeem the valley of the Mississippi from the ravages of overflow and restore its old time fruitful abundance of production. Every industry and interest of the State received his watchful and tireless care; and when the time came to surrender earthly responsibilities, he could well have said that his services to his people repaid them for all the honors they had conferred upon him.

Gen. Gibson was not only the watchful guardian of the interests of his adopted State, but one of her most valuable contributions to the councils of the nation. A classical and thorough education, broadened by contact with the best and highest minds of the age, qualified him to grapple with the great questions which presented themselves for settlement in the years which immediately succeeded the war between the States. Conservative in his temper, tolerant of the views of others, but firm in the maintenance of his own, he commanded, by reason of his distinguished military service and acquaintance with the leaders of thought both South and North, an influence possessed by few who hailed from the stricken South. That that influence was wisely used is attested by the undiminished respect and confidence of his colleagues at the time when "he passed over the river to rest in the shade of the trees." One by one they go—Gibson, Colquitt, Vance. Few are left, and in the ordinary course of nature not many years can pass when to speak with jeers of the "Confederate brigadiers" will be to insult the dead, the noble dead, who have illustrated by their lives the best, the noblest, and the truest traits of American manhood. The time will come, sir, when the fame of those, our noble dead, will be the common pride, the common glory of the American people.

Gen. Gibson was as admirable in private life as he was distinguished as a soldier and a statesman. It was not my good fortune to personally know the lovely and accomplished woman who devoted her life to him; but I am justified in saying that a devoted wife found in him a loyal and devoted husband. As a friend he was most thoughtful and considerate, shedding the light of a benevolent and kindly heart upon all to whom he bore that relation.

Reverently and tenderly he has been laid to rest with the kinsmen and friends of his boyhood; a brave and loyal soldier, a faithful representative of the people, a devoted husband and father, a benevolent and self-sacrificing friend and Christian gentleman has gone to his rest.

Peace to his ashes.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions which are before the House bring up memories of many years ago. They recall to my mind when a third of a century ago I first met Senator Randall Lee Gibson, and it has been my privilege and pleasure to be intimately associated with this chivalrous gentleman for a greater part of the time up to the date of his death. I knew Senator Gibson as a soldier, brave, chivalrous, and undaunted. I knew him in the deadly carnage, always leading in the front of battle, always courting the post of greatest danger. I knew him in the camp, earnest and devoted in administering to the wants of his men, and performing the tedious routine of duty. I knew him on the march, always sharing with his devoted soldiers labor, fatigue, suffering, and privation. I knew him when the war was over and the flag of the Confederacy was trailed in the dust, broken in fortune, but unconquered in spirit. I knew him as a gentleman, gentle, courteous, urbane, and loved and respected by everyone, his bearing marked with dignity and firmness and yet the perfection of simplicity and unobtrusive modesty, a striking exemplification of the highest type of manhood. I knew him as a husband and father, enjoying the pleasures of a happy family home filled with reciprocal feelings of love and devotion. I knew him twenty-two years ago, when, after a terrific struggle, he was elected a member of this body and commenced his career as a statesman in an arena to which he brought great natural gifts, cultured by diligent study, profound thought, and extensive travel. I knew him in the strength and vigor of powerful manhood, the idol of his State, a leader among men, an honored, esteemed Senator of this great country. I knew him when the outstretched hand of death beckoned him to the shadow under which we all must pass.

In all these varied conditions and relations of life Senator Gibson shone forth and seemed to illumine any sphere in which he moved. Whether in prosperity or adversity, whether enjoying bounteous affluence or undergoing the financial reverses which the ravages of war brought upon him, whether as a private citizen or occupying the high positions of general and Senator, he was the same dignified, modest, and affable gentleman.

Senator Gibson was descended from a long line of distinguished ancestors, and the gentle courtesy which characterized him was his by inheritance as well as education. He was a native of Kentucky, his father having married in early life Miss Louisiana Hart, of Lexington, and here in the home of chivalry and culture his youthful mind expanded. While he was still very young his parents removed to Louisiana, and from that time he became identified with the interests of his adopted home. His early education was acquired in Terrebonne and Lexington, and his collegiate course at Yale was supplemented by several years of foreign travel.

Returning home he studied law at the University of Louisiana, but he did not at once enter upon the arduous details of the profession, preferring the life of a planter; but the stirring times preceding the outbreak of war forced him from his retirement and drew forth all the noblest qualities of his gifted nature. At the beginning of the war he raised a company, and was soon made colonel of a regiment. Although untrained in military affairs, his great natural qualities made him conspicuous in this career, as he would have been in any other position. His regiment, the Thirteenth Louisiana, gained immortal renown for courage and heroism from the time it first met the shock of battle on the field of Shiloh.

Soon after reaching Corinth he was sent to the front with his command and ordered to report to me at Monterey, to meet a reconnoissance in force under Gen. Sherman. This was the first time Gen. Gibson approached the enemy, and I recall the promptness, coolness, and determination with which he placed his troops in position with every expectation of an attack by an overwhelming force. Gen. Sherman, very possibly, had exaggerated information regarding the force under Gibson and myself, as he hastily withdrew to the Tennessee River without making an attack. Although an actual conflict did not take place, it was made evident that Gen. Gibson had absolute confidence in himself and his troops, and that they had implicit confidence in him.

The date first fixed for these ceremonies was just thirty-two years after the close of the terrible struggle where Gen. Gibson, worn and weary, begrimed with powder and smoke, was triumphantly completing the second day of the great battle on the banks of the beautiful Tennessee. Only the preceding morning he had received his baptism of blood, and in forty-eight hours had earned the reputation of a brave, intrepid, and skillful brigade commander. In the many battles in which that army afterwards engaged we find Gen. Gibson always brave and conspicuous, and frequently mentioned in the reports of the commanders.

In his report of the battle of Perryville, Gen. Adams speaks of the gallant service and military skill of Senator Gibson, and mentions a separate communication in which he recommends him for promotion to the rank of brigadier-general for the distinguished skill and valor which he displayed in that hotly contested battle.

I read from the War Records, volume 16, page 1124:

The praises bestowed in my report for gallant service on the field fell under my immediate observation in the cases of Col. R. L. Gibson, Maj. Austin, and Capt. Tracy.

Gen. Adams also says:

The report of the others named was derived from the regimental reports. The regimental commanders named deserve credit for the manner in which they moved and kept their commands together. The Thirteenth Louisiana, Col. Gibson, deserve special mention for the promptness with which they moved forward, the alacrity and rapidity with which they pressed the enemy until halted by my command. I will recommend Col. Gibson, for skill and valor, to be brigadier-general, in a separate communication.

The next great battle of that army was Murfreesboro, and here again we find Gen. Gibson very distinguished. The eminent Maj. Gen. John C. Breckinridge speaks of Col. Gibson's marked courage and skill throughout the battle, and Gen. Adams speaks of his conduct in a charge as deserving the highest praise, and states that no greater courage and determination could have been displayed. Gen. Adams also speaks in high commendation of the tenacity with which Gen. Gibson held a fiercely assailed position. I read from Gen. Breckinridge's report, War Records, volume 20, page 783:

Gen. Adams having received a wound while gallantly leading his brigade, the command devolved upon Col. R. L. Gibson, who discharged its duties throughout with marked courage and skill.

On page 793 of the same volume, Gen. Adams gives an account of the charge in which Gen. Gibson was distinguished, in these words:

The conduct of the officers and men in making the charge and holding the position as long as they did deserves the highest praise. No greater courage or determination could have been displayed.

Gen. Gibson also did excellent and gallant service in the various engagements during the summer of 1863; and for his eminent service at the battle of Chickamauga he was highly commended by Maj. Gen. Breckinridge, who stated in his report that the country was indebted to him for the courage and skill with which he discharged his duties in that great conflict. I read from Gen. Breckinridge's report, which I find in the War Records, volume 30, page 201:

To Brig. Gen. Stovall, to Col. Lewis, who succeeded to the command of Helms' brigade, and to Col. R. L. Gibson, who succeeded to the command of Adams' brigade, the country is indebted for the courage and skill with which they discharged their arduous duties.

All through the history of the Atlanta campaign we find Gen. Gibson repeatedly mentioned and highly commended; in the War Records, volume 38, page 767, by Lieut. Gen. Stephen D. Lee; on page 812 of the same volume, by Maj. Gen. C. L. Stevenson; on page 816, the same volume, by Lieut. Gen. A. P. Stewart; on page 823, by Gen. M. A. Stovall, and on page 846, by Gen. Alpheus Baker.

In the battle of May 25, Gen. Gibson's brigade bore a very conspicuous part. Maj. Gen. H. D. Clayton, in his official report, volume 38, page 833, says:

Three lines of battle of the enemy came forward successively, and in turn were successively repulsed. Men could not have fought better or exhibited more cool and resolute courage. Not a man except the wounded left his position. The engagement lasted uninterruptedly until night, or more than two hours, and when the enemy finally withdrew many of my men had their last cartridge in their guns.

In the many battles directly in front of Atlanta, and in the sanguinary battle of Jonesboro, Gen. Gibson was repeatedly distinguished. In his official report of the great battle of August 31, Maj. Gen. Clayton speaks of Gen. Gibson's heroic conduct in seizing the colors of one of his regiments and leading a charge on the works of the Federal Army, conduct which Gen. Clayton says created the greatest enthusiasm throughout the command. I read from Gen. Clayton's official report, War Records, volume 38, page 822:

Brig. Gen. Gibson seizing the colors of one of his regiments dashed to the front and up to the very works of the enemy. This conduct created the greatest enthusiasm throughout his command, which again, as in the engagement of the 28th of July, previously mentioned, moved against a salient in the enemy's works.

Unfortunately a large portion of the whole command stopped in the rifle pits of the enemy, behind piles of rails and a fence running nearly parallel to his breastworks, and to this circumstance I attribute the failure to carry the works. Never was a charge begun with such enthusiasm terminated with accomplishing so little. This gallant brigade lost one-half its numbers.

His corps commander, Gen. Stephen D. Lee, speaks in the highest terms of Gen. Gibson's brigade in the Tennessee campaign in the fall of 1864. He says:

I saw them around Atlanta and in Hood's Nashville campaign. I designated Gibson's brigade to cross the Tennessee River in open boats in the presence of the enemy, near Florence, Ala., and a more gallant crossing of any river was not made during the war.

At the desperate and bloody battle of Franklin, Gen. Gibson won the highest encomiums from Gen. Hood. This distinguished officer stated that Gen. Gibson evinced conspicuous gallantry and ability in the handling of his troops. I read the exact language of Gen. Hood:

Gen. Gibson, who evinced conspicuous gallantry and ability in the handling of his troops, succeeded, in concert with Clayton, in checking and staying the most dangerous shock, which always follows immediately after a rout. Gibson's brigade and McKinzie's battery of Fenner's battalion acting as rear guard of the rear guard.

In the conflict around Nashville, Gen. Gibson added to his already high reputation. His corps commander, Gen. Lee, speaks of the gallant conduct of Gibson's soldiers in that great struggle, and of Gen. Gibson's superb conduct in checking two formidable assaults of the Federal Army. Gen. Lee says:

At Nashville, when Hood was defeated by Thomas, Gibson's brigade was conspicuously posted on the left of the pike near Overton Hill, and I witnessed their driving back, with the rest of Clayton's division, two formidable assaults of the enemy.

I recollect, near dark, riding up to the brigade, near a battery, and trying to seize a stand of colors and lead the brigade against the enemy. The color-bearer refused to give up his colors and was sustained by his regiment. I found it was the color-bearer of the Thirteenth Louisiana. It was Gibson's Louisiana brigade. Gibson soon appeared at my side, and in admiration of such conduct I exclaimed, "Gibson, these are the best men I ever saw; you take them and check the enemy." Gibson did take them and did check the enemy.

It is not singular that an officer who in many battles had met the highest expectations of his commanders and of the troops he so gallantly led should be selected for the independent command of the troops at Spanish Fort, one of the important defenses of Mobile. In this position Gen. Gibson displayed the eminent qualities which had made him distinguished throughout the war.

Gen. Taylor speaks of the defense of Spanish Fort and the retreat conducted by Gen. Gibson as one of the best achievements of the war. I read from his Construction and Reconstruction, published in 1877, page 221:

Gen. R. L. Gibson, now a member of Congress from Louisiana, held Spanish Fort with 2,500 men. Fighting all day and working all night, Gibson successfully resisted the efforts of the immense force against him until the evening of April 8, when the enemy effected a lodgment threatening his only route of evacuation. Under instructions from Maury, he withdrew his garrison in the night to Mobile, excepting his pickets, necessarily left. Gibson's stubborn defense and skillful retreat make this one of the best achievements of the war.

In a work on the Campaign of Mobile, by Gen. Andrews, published in 1866, Gen. Gibson, the commander of Spanish Fort, is spoken of by this Federal officer in the highest terms, as a competent and active officer, and one who inspired his troops with enthusiasm. On page 165 he says:

The besiegers and garrison alike are entitled to praise for constant industry and for energy.

The garrison commander, Gen. Gibson, was competent and active, and inspired his troops with enthusiasm. He was highly complimented by his superior officers for his conduct during the siege.

I know I may be pardoned for dwelling, as I have, on the military career of Gen. Gibson. His colleagues in the Senate and House knew of his eminent services while a member of this House and also during his career as a Senator; but although all knew he was a distinguished general, very few of his friends were so informed of his military service as to have a full appreciation of its extent and character.

At the close of the war, returning to a blighted and desolate home, his hopes in the dust, his fortunes broken, he took up the practice of law and soon began to earn fame and fortune in his new vocation.

The breadth of his mind and the strength of his will, combined with the singular fascination which he exercised on those who surrounded him, soon placed him in a prominent rank of the profession.

He was elected to the Forty-third Congress, but was deprived of his seat. He was again elected and admitted to the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, and while still serving in the latter, and having yet a term to serve in the Forty-eighth, he was elected to the Senate in 1882, and reëlected at the end of that term.

Senator Gibson's services to his State have endeared him to every citizen of Louisiana. In the darkest hour of the reconstruction period it was well for his people that this brave, good man stood at the helm and piloted the craft into safe and quiet waters. It was by his strong and unswerving influence that the Administration was persuaded to adopt the policy which finally enabled Louisiana to arise from the shackles which had well nigh crushed her to destruction. For his efforts in this direction, for his able advocacy of the Eads system of opening the Mississippi, and for his coöperation with Mr. Tulane in the location of the great university at New Orleans, he merited the undying gratitude of the people whose beloved representative he was.

For a long time Senator Gibson suffered from the malady which finally resulted fatally, and several years before his death his happy home was broken up by the loss of his beloved wife, who preceded him to the tomb.

His remains were taken back to the home of his childhood, and deposited in the beautiful cemetery at Lexington, where repose the ashes of so many noble and distinguished sons of the great State of Kentucky. Here, surrounded by old war-worn comrades and escorted by a company of cadets from the Military University of Kentucky, he was laid to rest, amid the tears and blessings of the old and the young, in the bosom of his native and well-beloved home.

In looking upon the mound which covers the mortal remains of Senator Gibson we involuntarily recall the solemn words of Mrs. Browning:

Never, sister, never, was told by mortal breath,
What they behold
O'er whom hath rolled
The one dark wave of death.

And yet while it is an infinite decree of divine wisdom that we should have no tidings from beyond the tomb, yet there is within us an ever-living spirit which whispers of a future life wherein is to be found the fullness and completion of the always present yearnings and aspirations of our souls. It is a consolation to Senator Gibson's family and friends to know that he felt these yearnings and aspirations in all their force, and that he had full trust and confidence in all that Christians believe of the life to come.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. It is not my purpose, Mr. Speaker, to make a formal address in memory of my deceased friend, the late Senator from Louisiana. When I considered the relations which for many years I had maintained with him, and the ties that bound his family and mine together, it was with more than ordinary pleasure that I consented to say a word when called upon to do so by one of the delegation from his State. The details of his career have been related fully and admirably by those who have undertaken that part of these appropriate ceremonies. Gen. Gibson was a man whose character and career will yield greater fruit and receive greater admiration as they are continuously and closely studied.

In the course of a life not very prolonged he was called to discharge varied and high duties, and to all of them he proved fully equal. He was a man of such various gifts, of such learning, of such broad and perfect culture, that he would have been successful in any calling to which he had chosen to devote his attention. It is not surprising, therefore, that, although not trained to the profession of arms, he should have received the highest praise from those with whom he served as well as from those to whom he was opposed. With his courage and sagacity it was not a lengthy task for him to master the main elements of the military art.

As a lawyer he was successful, but his equipment was such that he was most needed by his people to serve them in a public capacity, under the complicated conditions which surrounded them at the close of the civil war. After all that has been said of his success, after all that has been said of his achievements, I think I can truly say that his public career never fully taxed his greatest powers. Of all the men in public life with whom I have been associated there was not one possessed of more fascinating manners, there was not one a more accomplished gentleman, there was not one who was a more sagacious and astute man than Randall L. Gibson.

Whatever were his successes—as a student at Yale College, as a lawyer, as a gentleman adorning the most cultivated society in Europe and in this country, as a member of this House, as a soldier, and as a Senator—I have always believed that Gen. Gibson never had an opportunity of publicly entering upon that field of labor which was best suited to his talents. That is the field of diplomacy. He would have made a great Secretary of State. No man of his day was better fitted to represent his country in its foreign relations. He was preëminently a wise man in council. He was thoroughly familiar with all the springs and impulses of the human heart. Energetic in action, he was yet a man of reflection, serene, comprehensive, and far-reaching judgment. Of his military career—and few men did more hard fighting than he—the defense of Mobile will be considered his ablest and best achievement.

The greater the task to which he had to address himself, the greater, apparently, was the ease with which his mind operated. I never knew a man who moved with greater ease than he did in all the higher elements of political philosophy and practice. Broad and comprehensive, he seemed to omit no detail, and yet to grasp in all their bearings the farthest outlines of the greatest public questions and the profoundest principles of public policy.

Sir, I shall not continue these remarks at length. There were just one or two points that I desired to speak of that had especially impressed themselves upon me in my long and close relations with Senator Gibson. Our families have maintained an intimate relationship for several generations. There was kinship between us, and during the war he served under the command of my father, who extended to him the same affectionate greeting that Gen. Gibson extended to me when I met him upon my entrance into public life here.

No man contributed more to the pacification of this country than did Senator Gibson, and his usefulness in public life, with all his rich and varied endowments, was so much dependent upon the blessings of his home life that remarks upon his career would be incomplete if they did not embrace within their scope the charming helpmate who graced his board and who aided him in all the work and relations of his life. He did not marry until some time after the war.

I remember being in the city of New York, soon after the war, and there meeting his wife, then a schoolgirl, recently returned from France, and I thought that my eyes had never fallen upon a fairer or more beautiful vision. She was beautiful in person, pure and elevated in character, with rare good sense, and perfect taste. They were thoroughly congenial, and she rendered him inestimable service in the exceedingly difficult undertaking that he, one of the representatives of a proscribed section, had to perform in seeking to knit anew the social ties, public confidence, and personal relations that had been severed by civil war.

Those labors, by reason of his happy alliance, by reason of his wide associations formed at Yale, and his fidelity to all the friendships of his youth, as well as by reason of his own matchless gifts and attainments, he was able to bring to a successful conclusion. Among all my friends and associates there is none of whom I could with more sincerity speak words of admiration and love than of Senator Gibson, to whose memory on this occasion we seek to do reverence and honor.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gibson was a member of the Forty-fourth Congress, where I first knew him as one of the prominent men whose superior abilities signalized the advent of the leaders of the Confederacy to the leadership of the restored Union. That Congress witnessed in this Chamber some of the greatest intellectual and forensic contentions in the annals of time.

The passions of the war had not then subsided. The irritations of the period of reconstruction had sharpened the animosities which fringed the sublimer emotions of the great anterior struggle more than ten years of quasi peace had assuaged them, and it is probable that the North and the South met here in December, 1875, in a mood for more acrimonious debate than in December, 1861.

Everything which led to the war and which had occurred during its prosecution, and subsequent to Appomattox, was fresh in all minds and ready to leap in fiery phrase of accusation or defense from every tongue. Beside the past, there was a present and an immediate future to be fashioned and molded, upon which depended the domination of the industrial and social policies whose collision rendered the era now rapidly disappearing from the scene one of the bloodiest and most distinctive in history.

Everywhere it was recognized that gradually but surely the South, although vanquished on the battlefield, was recovering from her wounds and rising from her ashes with her system of labor legally shattered, yet really stronger and more efficient than ever.

The old-time bond between the Democratic party in the two sections had not been severely strained even in actual war. True, the inherent patriotism of the masses of the Northern people had filled the armies of the Union with volunteers, who, regardless of party, died with equal devotion to the flag; but the ideas and policies of the antebellum Democracy survived the war, as they survive it still, and there was a natural restoration of unity in action in that great party as soon as the shock of battle ceased.

The reconstruction of the Democracy was complete at the surrender, for its unity of spirit—never disturbed during the war—was at once a manifestly perfect bond with the return of peace. On the other hand, the ideas and issues represented by the Republican party had no lodgment in the South, except in the hearts of vast but unintelligent masses of another and helpless race, so that the solid white population of that great section, reinforcing the Northern Democracy, had rendered the approaching Presidential struggle of 1876 one of very doubtful result.

Both great parties looked upon it as a political Gettysburg, and many feared that it might be succeeded by lawless bloodshed, if not by another outbreak of actual war. Under these circumstances, upon which the proprieties of the occasion will not permit me to dwell in further detail, it was unavoidable that the great men of the country, who in larger numbers never were present in any Congress since the foundation of the Government, should put forth their utmost powers, stirred and stimulated by the strongest passions, as well as the most elevated motives, emotions, and convictions belonging to human nature.

Of the great actors in that drama who still survive I say nothing, because it is unfitting to transfer them to the realms of deification while we are still blessed with their bodily presence. But there were Blaine and Garfield on the one side. On the other were Hill and Lamar. Many more immortal names in the great galaxy of the departed might here be mentioned; and it is but a just tribute to the memory of the brilliant, polished, able, and beloved Randall Gibson to say that he stood up among those marvelous men as gallant and courtly and chivalrous and honorable and patriotic and profoundly respected a gentleman as any one of them all.

I knew him thenceforward until he died, never intimately, but I believe I always knew him well.

For some four years we sat side by side in the Senate.

During all that time I was concious that a superior being was near; that a spirit sweet and affectionate and sensitive and pure, with lofty aspirations, with benevolent and far-reaching purposes for the improvement and blessing of others, looked forth from those steadfast and penetrating eyes, and vitalized with noble impulses the eloquent periods with which he charmed, instructed, and convinced the Senate.

His efforts were rightly, first, for the people of his then devastated and distracted State; but the heart of Gen. Gibson was as large as the whole country, and was full of justice and love for us all. He was one of those to whom a Northern man would turn with confidence if he were specially solicitous that the destinies of the land should fall into the possession of those of our Southern countrymen who would administer the Constitution and laws for all sections, in the true national spirit, and for the greatest good of the greatest number, tempered with the limitation that never shall the inalienable right of the humblest and weakest be sacrificed for the benefit of greed and power.

He knew that true reconstruction of the Union and the permanent existence of freedom and happiness depend upon universal intelligence and virtue among the people.

He was identified with the cause of education in his own State, as the chief promoter of the great Tulane Institution, that great intellectual light-house which burns as a pillar of fire for the perpetual illumination of the surpassing valley of the American Nile.

He was profoundly devoted to the passage of the national education bill, which for many years was the hope of the common people of the South, and which had it not died, as Christ died, by the betrayal of those who pretended to be its friends, would before now have reconstructed the country upon relations of equality and justice to all, and made peace and union and prosperity forever secure, by establishing homogeneous conditions everywhere, giving to each child of the Republic, white and black, a common school education and a fair start and equal chance in the race of life.

Urging the passage of this great measure, Mr. Gibson said on the floor of the Senate:

"In my opinion, reflecting men in all parts of the country * * * have formed the deliberate judgment that the education of the people, the enlightenment of the suffrage, the elevation of the pupular character and the popular conscience, the awakening of a loftier and healthier sentiment of national patriotism, is absolutely indispensable to the preservation of Constitutional liberty."

Noble words of a patriot, a philanthropist, and a sage!

They shall immortalize thy name when empires have fallen and realms have decayed!

Closely associated in their advocacy of the education bill, his great compeer from the same region of the South, the gifted and lamented Lamar, exclaimed:

"I have watched it with deep interest and intense solicitude. In my opinion, it is the first step and the most important step this Government has ever taken in the direction of the solution of what is known as the race problem, and I believe it will tell more powerfully and decisively upon the future destinies of the colored race than any measure or ordinance that has yet been adopted in reference to it—more decisively than either the thirteenth, fourteenth, or fifteenth amendments, unless it is to be considered, as I do consider it, the logical sequence and the practical continuance of those amendments.

"I think that this measure is fraught with almost unspeakable benefits to the entire population of the South, white and black. It will excite a new interest among our people; it will stimulate both State and local communities to more energetic exertions and greater sacrifices, because it will encourage them in their hopes in grappling and struggling with a task before whose vast proportions they have stood appalled in the consciousness of the inadequacy of their own resources to meet it."

Lamar was one of the great men of his generation. He will live in our history as a statesman, an orator, a jurist, a discriminating and philosophic student of mankind. But he never manifested a more powerful comprehension of the great problem of our time than is expressed in these vital and eloquent words.

Men of the South, the failure of the education bill was your great calamity. Under its operation ten years would have accomplished the slow and doubtful work of a century left to be wrought by existing agencies. Is there no resurrection, and is death an eternal sleep? This is the great question for the young and rising South. You have the power in your own hands, and you, not I, nor man or men of other sections are mainly responsible for the future now.

Randall Lee Gibson is with us no more.

Born in the South; educated in the North; combining the best qualities of both sections, and comparatively free from the influence of the weaker and lower elements of human nature, he lived an active and upright life; performed an important part upon a conspicuous stage; in war he was a knight without fear and without reproach; in peace a useful and honored citizen, discharging public duties with integrity, zeal, and ability, and always one of God's true gentlemen.

He is embalmed in the honor and love of his countrymen!

Rest, spirit rest! Soar, spirit soar!

Louisiana will enshrine his memory with fadeless and perpetual flowers; the incense of her gratitude will ascend until the last drop of the Mississippi has rolled by his grave on its way to the sea; and it is well that he sleep among those who knew him best, and therefore loved him most, until the resurrection. But I do know of eyes among the far hills of the North that will weep for him, and of one heart that will beat more quickly at the sound of his name until itself shall throb no more.

Mr. MEYER. On behalf of a number of our colleagues who are necessarily absent, I ask unanimous consent that they be permitted to print in the RECORD remarks which they desired to make on this occasion.

There being no objection, general leave to print was granted.

And then, in pursuance of the resolutions previously adopted, the House (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday next.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6741) to ascertain and pay for loss of property sustained by Lieut. John C. Colwell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 23, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Thomas Jordan Jarvis, appointed by the Governor of North Carolina a Senator from that State to fill until the next meeting of the Legislature thereof the vacancy caused by the death of Zebulon Baird Vance in the term ending March 3, 1897; which were read and ordered to be filed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in pursuance of law, a supplemental report including two judgments omitted from a prior list of final judgments rendered in favor of claimants against the United States not paid, arising from Indian depredations; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CAPITOL CORNER STONE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication, which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The general committee on the centennial of the Capitol has donated a bronze tablet, estimated to cost about $900, to be placed upon the exterior southeast wall of the north wing of the original Capitol building, to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol, September 18, 1793, by President George Washington.

As legislation will be necessary to carry out the purpose of the general committee, I have the honor to request that the subject may be brought to the attention of Congress, only suggesting that the matter of the inscription upon the tablet be left to the discretion of the joint committee appointed under the joint resolution of Congress approved August 17, 1893, and that the selection of the precise locality for the insertion of the tablet, as well as the work connected with such insertion, be placed under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

L. GARDNER,
Chairman General Committee.

Hon. ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
President United States Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have considered a joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, if there be no objection.

The joint resolution (S. R. 77) providing for the placing of a tablet upon the Capitol to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the building, September 18, 1893, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the general committee of citizens of the United States, of which Lawrence Gardner is chairman, have donated to the United States a bronze tablet to be placed upon the Capitol to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the building, September 18, 1793. Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States accept the said tablet, and that the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the same, when approved by the joint committee appointed under joint resolution of Congress of August 17, 1893, to be placed in or upon the southeast wall of the north wing of the original Capitol building, upon such suitable place as he, the said Architect, may select, at such distance above the corner stone laid by George Washington, September 18, 1793, as in the judgment of said Architect may be best suited to display the same, without detracting from the architectural effect of the building.

Mr. VOORHEES. It may not be improper to say that the committee having in charge the centennial celebration of the laying the corner stone of the Capitol have so well managed their affairs as to have a moderate surplus fund left with which to provide for this bronze tablet. The tablet is to be placed at a point to indicate the precise spot where the original corner stone was laid. That locality has been ascertained, and this is a movement to mark the spot for all time to come. I think it a charming and a most excellent thing to do, and the committee which have had charge of this matter are deserving of great credit. They have asked nothing of Congress, they have been at no expense to the Government, and they have the money to spare to make this provision. I thought it best to explain the matter. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. GRAY. While the Senator is on his feet in regard to this very appropriate act that has been performed, let me ask him whether the description on the tablet is to contain the name of any private person or of the donors of the tablet?

Mr. VOORHEES. I think not.

Mr. GRAY. It ought not to do so.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it does not, although on that subject I am not at all advised. I should say not, very decidedly. However, that can be easily controlled or managed. I do not think there is any such purpose at all. It is a tablet to mark the precise locality of the original corner stone laid by George Washington, September 18 1793.

Mr. GRAY. The good taste of the gentlemen connected with this enterprise would suggest that no such thing should be done; but I think it ought to be assured.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5216) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present a memorial of property owners on L street in this city, in opposition to Senate bill 1630 and House bill 6596, authorizing the Belt Railway Company to extend its tracks and run its cars from New York avenue and L street westwardly along L street to Eleventh street and L street to Connecticut avenue, etc. As the memorial is a carefully prepared statement of matters bearing on this question, and is very important to the interests of a large part of the District, I ask that it be printed as a miscellaneous document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HALE. Before that order is made I wish to say that for one I welcome very heartily any expression in reference to District street railroads that comes from somebody else besides the projectors. There is a general view on the part of speculators and schemers in street railroads that Washington is essentially a good place for their operations; and I am very glad the Senator from Vermont has brought here a protest from people who are interested in these roads, because they live in the neighborhood where a proposed road would run. I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia in considering this matter will give due attention to these people, and before anything is done have them called, and let there be a thorough hearing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and printed as a document, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. The latter part of last month a delegation of 16 women employed in the various textile establishments of Massachusetts and Rhode Island visited the Capitol for the purpose of presenting a respectful protest to the Senate Finance Committee against the adoption of the Wilson tariff bill, which is now pending in the Senate. These women, I believe, fairly represent the views and opinions of the more than 2,000,000 wage earning women of the United States. The majority of the Finance Committee declined to give them a hearing. They then asked the minority members of the committee to hear their statement, and the Republican members of the committee consented. All the Senators who heard their statement will agree with me that it was a very important and interesting one. I now present, in the form of a memorial, the statement made at the hearing, and ask that it be printed as a miscellaneous document for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none, and the memorial will lie on the table and be printed as a document.

Mr. HARRIS presented sundry petitions of citizens of Bristol, Greenville, Knoxville, and Morristown, all in the State of Tennessee, praying that national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations be exempted from the provisions of the proposed income tax; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Sheboygan, Wis., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Chinese treaty; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Fountain City Lodge, No. 13, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Fountain City, Wis., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of members of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from the Treasury Department to the Navy and Interior Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of sundry citizens of San Antonio, Tex., praying that national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations be exempted from the provisions of the proposed income tax; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Stonington, Conn., and a petition of sundry citizens of Durham, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PEFFER presented a memorial of sundry American workmen, residents of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a petition of the Retail Clerks' Union and the Barbers' Union, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCMILLAN (for Mr. STOCKBRIDGE) presented the memorial of John Wertheimer, of Cheboygan, Mich., and the memorial of J. C. Wooster, of Cheboygan, Mich., remonstrating against the imposition of an income tax on national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. STOCKBRIDGE) presented petitions of the Book Binders and Rulers' Union; of the Trunk Makers' Union, and of the Furniture Movers' Union, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MARTIN presented the memorial of Isaac S. Lee, J. W. Tauber, A. Burrow, J. P. Ellis, Fred Hall, and 127 other citizens of Leavenworth, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of proposed Sunday legislation as advocated by the National Reform Association; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of Isaac Moon and sundry other citizens of Randolph, Kans., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of Farmers' Alliance No. 74, of Nicktown, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Hill oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Powelton Building Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Cigarmakers' Union No. 242, of York, Pa.; of the United Association of Journeymen Plumbers, Gas Fitters, Steam Fitters, and Steam Fitters' Helpers of the United States, of Pittsburg, Pa., and of Cigarmakers' International Union of America, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Chinese treaty; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of J. G. Dietrick and 60 other citizens of Oxford; of Council No. 507, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Point Marion; of Council No. 853, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Oxford; of Venango Council, No. 358, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Franklin; of Council No. 290, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Manorville; of Council No. 658, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Smith's Ferry; of Council No. 181, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Erie, and of Reserve Council, No. 253, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of Fidelity Lodge, No. 17, Shield of Honor; of Alexander Henry and 29 other citizens, and of Charles H. Savidge and 44 other citizens, all of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Scranton, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Bailey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Encampment No. 60, Union Veteran Legion, of Johnstown, Pa., remonstrating against any change in the law providing for the management of soldiers' homes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER presented petitions of 52 citizens and business firms of South Carolina, praying that national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations be exempted from the provisions of the proposed income tax; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I present a statement on behalf of the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and joint resolutions and memorials to Congress from those States in relation to certain war claims, and praying for the reimbursement of moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion when aiding the United States in maintaining the "common defense" on the Pacific coast. The bill S. 1295 has been reported favorably, and quite an elaborate report was submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. This is a statement of additional matter which might be put in the RECORD, but I present it and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it may be printed as a document to go with the report of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. WHITE on the 17th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 12th instant, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

COURTS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. VILAS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3713) to provide for the division of the eastern district of Michigan into the northern and southern divisions, and for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States therein, and for other purposes, to report it favorably, without amendment. I also, by the same instruction, ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I desire to state that it is simply a bill for the division of the eastern district of Michigan into two subdistricts. The bill has been carefully considered. There are no amendments proposed. It has been lying awaiting action for some time, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VILAS. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1120) to provide for the division of the eastern district of Michigan into the northern and southern divisions, and for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States therein, and for other purposes, to report adversely thereon. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MARTIN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1942) granting to the Soule College Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church for educational purposes certain lands in Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1943) granting a pension to Annie Stewart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1944) for the relief of certain Indians; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that both this bill and an amendment which I submit to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill are intended to cure a difficulty which I think has been encountered in administering the law for the allotment of lands to Indians. Sometimes there is a controversy about the lands, and rights are entirely dependent upon the action of the Land Department. The object of this proposed legislation is to give Indians or persons of Indian descent who claim lands a right to maintain an action, or suit, or other proceedings in regard to them the same as if they were citizens of the United States.

I move that the bill and proposed amendment be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1945) for the relief of Holmes & Leathers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PEFFER. I was requested by a gentleman of the District of Columbia, claiming to represent a large number of persons, to introduce a bill and ask its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1946) to dispose of idle labor and discourage idle wealth in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill be read the second time in full.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to employ the idle labor, advance the rate of wages, and bring homes within easier reach of the homeless; and

Whereas it is desirable to reduce rent and interest, and to keep vacant land from advancing in price; and

Whereas it is desirable to avoid the support of the destitute by charity; and

Whereas it is desirable to secure these ends and to make certain public improvements without taxing anything but the profits derived from gambling in land values and holding wealth in idleness: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be levied on all idle land subject to taxation within the District of Columbia a special tax each year, which tax in each case shall be equal to the increase in the market value of such land during the preceding year; and that the revenue thus obtained shall be appropriated to the employment of the idle citizens of the District in the construction and management of such public works as Congress may, from time to time, direct.

That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect when approved.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to know from the Senator from Kansas what is covered by "and so forth," where, as I caught the reading, it is provided that homes are to be brought within easy reach, and so forth. If that means existing homes within reach of the army that is marching on Washington, I certainly object to the bill.

Mr. PEFFER. I stated that I introduce the bill at the request of a gentleman of this District who prepared the measure. I know nothing about it except that, and I am in no wise responsible for it. I do not even know what "and so forth" in that connection means, if it occurs in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill goes to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 78) providing for the publication of an additional number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, sufficient to supply three copies to each of the several National Soldiers' Homes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BERRY (for Mr. JONES of Arkansas) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Select Committee to Investigate the Geological Survey, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. WHITE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of Congress 15,000 additional copies of the report, with index, of the Committee on Foreign Relations relating to the Nicaragua Canal: of which number 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5216) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HEARINGS ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Mr. PEFFER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 400, being a resolution providing for the appointment of a select committee to be known as the Committee on Communication.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to prevail.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read at length, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER on the 14th instant as follows:

Whereas there exists in many places and on the part of large numbers of citizens, individually and in organized bodies, a disposition to visit the city of Washington for the purpose of personally presenting to Congress their views with respect to pending and prospective measures of legislation; and

Whereas many of such persons and bodies are reported to be now on their way hither, with others likely to follow, for the purposes aforesaid; and

Whereas, to the end that these, our petitioners, shall have full and respectful hearing, and that proceedings attending their communications with the Senate shall be orderly and not subjected to interruption by the transaction of other public business: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a select committee of nine members of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President, to be known as the Committee on Communication, whose duty it shall be to receive all written or printed communications from citizens or bodies of citizens visiting the capital, or intending to make such visit, for the purposes mentioned in the preamble hereto, and to receive all petitions, memorials, and remonstrances of such persons and bodies and hear them orally in relation to the matters and things about which they desire to communicate with the Senate. The committee shall report fully to the Senate, from time to time, as other committees report.

The Sergeant-at-Arms will set aside a convenient room in the Capitol, or other building belonging to the Government, for the use of said committee and furnish the same with the necessary articles for the convenient dispatch of business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to take up the resolution which has been read.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 28.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. CAMERON. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, but if he were present I should vote "nay." If the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] will intimate what the vote of his colleague would be on the proposition, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I am satisfied that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this proposition, and I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. In his absence from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PEFFER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I have observed that a number of Senators have announced their pairs. What I wish to inquire is, whether on a question of this kind pairs may properly be announced? If the Chair will state the rule in reference to it he will relieve my mind on this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that it is a subject over which the Chair has no jurisdiction. It is a question for the determination of each Senator for himself.

Mr. PEFFER. Then, Mr. President, I ask that the Senators who have announced pairs be requested to vote.

Mr. GORMAN. Regular order.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 26, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Teller,
Allen,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Allison,	Hawley,	Power,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Davis,	Martin,	Stewart,

NAYS—26.

Bate,	George,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Harris,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	White.
Coke,	McMillan,	Roach,
Frye,	Mills,	Sherman,

NOT VOTING—41.

Blackburn,	Dubois,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Caffery,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Squire,
Call,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stockbridge,
Camden,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas.
Cameron,	Hill,	Morgan,	Wilson,
Carey,	Hoar,	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Hunton,	Pettigrew,
Dixon,	Irby,	Platt,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,

So the motion was not agreed to.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6442) to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I have some further amendments to propose to the amendment reported by the committee in addition to those which I offered on Saturday.

In section 4, line 41, after the word "years," I move to strike out the word "either," and after the word "both," to strike out "together with the," and insert "and be adjudged to pay all;" so as to read:

And shall be subjected to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years or both and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 53 of the same section, before the word "punishment," I move to insert the word "other;" so as to read:

Said forfeiture shall be adjudicated and ordered by the court as a penalty in addition to the other punishment provided in this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 5, line 24, before the word "appeal," I move to strike out the word "their;" so as to read:

But the United States circuit court in said district may prescribe rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States district court.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 30 of the same section, before the word "cause," I move to strike out the word "proper," and insert "probable," so as to read, "probable cause is shown for holding the person," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 33, after the word "State," I move to insert the words "of Wyoming."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In line 37, of the same section, before the word "bailable," I move to strike out the word "offenses," and insert the word "cases," so as to read:

Provided, That the said commissioner shall grant bail in all cases bailable under the laws of the United States and said State.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 6, line 6, after the word "courts," I move to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may," so as to read:

And the said United States district and circuit courts may hold one session, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, line 7, after the word "Wyoming," I move to insert "or at any other convenient place in said State of Wyoming," so as to read:

May hold one session of said courts annually at the town of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, or at any other convenient place in said State of Wyoming at such date as the said courts may order, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 7, line 1, after the word "act," I move to insert "shall, in addition to the fees allowed by law to other United States commissioners, be paid annually a salary of $1,000, to be paid quarterly."

As the bill stands as proposed to be amended by the committee it only gives to the commissioner, who must be a resident in the park, the same fees that are allowed by law to other United States commissioners appointed by the circuit court. As a matter of course, anyone who knows that park will immediately agree that that would be no salary at all. The commissioner will possibly have very few cases; no one can tell how many; and the fees would only amount to an insignificant sum, fifty or one hundred dollars a year, upon which he could not live. I submit if a commissioner is to reside in the park and stay there, winter and summer, he should receive a salary upon which at least he could live. I propose to give him, besides the fees, $1,000 a year. It is a responsible position, and there ought to be a good man appointed to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 9, line 3, after the word "also," I move to insert the words "having in said building," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be erected in the park a suitable building to be used as a jail, and also have in said building an office for the use of the commissioner, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I desire to offer two other amendments, which I overlooked. In section 1 of the proposed amendment of the committee, line 3, after the word "Park," I move to strike out the words "in the State of Wyoming;" so as to read:

That the Yellowstone National Park as now defined, or as may be hereafter defined or extended, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In section 4, line 29, before the word "hundred," I move to strike out "one" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And shall forfeit or pay for every such offense the sum of $300.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I have no further amendments to offer to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAREY. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUAY. With the consent of the Senate, I have agreed to yield the floor to-day upon the pending bill to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, in all the legislation that has come before Congress in the history of the Government, there has been none probably that has created so general an interest and so profoundly stirred the public mind of the country, carrying apprehension and alarm, as the measure now under consideration in the Senate, unless perhaps we except the legislation between 1850 and the breaking out of the war in 1861, including the repeal of the Missouri compromise in 1854, and that soon followed it. The questions considered during that period, however, were more of sentiment and morals than such as relate to the material or economic interests of the country.

Measures looking to substantial changes in methods of raising revenue, and the application of economic principles, have at all times attracted more or less attention with those whose interests are more directly and immediately involved. Such was the case as far back as the consideration of the so-called Walker tariff law in 1846, as the debates in Congress at that time clearly show. This was an ad valorem tariff, the handmaid and near relation of free trade, and as nearly as possible an ideal Democratic tariff, but one that paralyzed industries, discouraged business, and impoverished the country and led up to the panic and crash of 1857, leaving the Government with a bankrupt Treasury, and an impaired credit, and a prelude to the disgraceful condition of things which existed when the Democratic party surrendered power in 1861.

The so-called Morrill tariff law, and those following later, largely increasing duties demanded by the exigencies of the war situation, were discussed with great interest in both Houses of Congress. Such, also, was the case with the Morrison bill, of horizontal structure, and the Mills bill, not without elements of fairness and justice, both of which, though not enacted into law, created a widespread interest through the country. The tariff revision of 1883, where duties were reduced, also excited much attention and created great interest throughout the country, as was also the case with the tariff law of 1890, or the so-called McKinley bill.

But, Mr. President, there has been no instance in the history of tariff legislation where the whole population of the country has been so deeply interested, excited, and alarmed as at the present time. And how could it be otherwise? There is scarcely an interest in any State of the Union, and certainly in no Northern State, which is not imperiled and threatened under the provisions of this bill—a bill not for protection and creation, but for destruction.

Mr. President, the effect of this bill, so far as the New England and other Eastern States are concerned, can not fail to be most disastrous, for I can see no possible escape from the closing of their great mills and factories, rendering valueless millions invested in plant; or else largely reducing the price of labor employed to substantially the basis of foreign labor, either of which must prove unfortunate and disastrous to those great industrial communities. And all this will be true, to a less extent perhaps, in my own State and the other States of the Northwest, engaged so largely in agricultural pursuits.

The people of Minnesota, prior to the enactment of the law of 1890, have been to a limited extent only, direct beneficiaries of protective tariff legislation. The interests of our people have been in the productions of the soil and in the creation of real wealth; yet in all the years since the settlement of the State, and during its development, intelligent observation and experience have taught them to believe in the policy of protection, and that too on its broadest lines and basic principles. They have learned to know by practical experience that the prosperity of each portion of the country can only be coincident of that of the whole. In other words, that the producing sections of the country could prosper only as the manufacturing and industrial sections prosper. They have learned that the best market for their products was the home market, furnished by the development and maintenance of home industries.

Under the inspiration of this protective policy, they have seen industrial development throughout the entire land that has no parallel in history. They have seen the furnaces lighted on both sides of the Alleghenies; they have seen the iron rails span the continent upon a half dozen different lines, and a railroad system developed reaching every State, county, and hamlet almost in the land, with transportation of their products reduced by one-half or more. In the past few years they have seen industries of every kind and description, and in all localities, spring into existence as if by magic, until the country has become one great workshop, and millions of intelligent laborers employed on a basis never known under other conditions or in other countries, and coincident with all this development they have had furnished them a home market for their products.

They have learned that the well-paid, intelligent wage-workers of our own country are larger and better consumers of their products than the poorly paid and half-starved laborers of other countries; they have come to know that the laborer in New England, receiving from $1.50 to $2 per day for a day's work, is a better consumer for their flour, corn, their pork and their beef, and all their great productions, than the pinched and poverty-stricken laborer of other countries, receiving but 40 and 50 cents a day for the same service, and able to maintain an existence little above the animal, consuming food scant in quantity and poor in quality.

With scarcely an exception in a period of thirty years, the best market in the world for all this production has been found at home, and so upon general principles it has followed that the theories of doctrinaires and the clamor and appeals of demagogues have been disregarded, and Minnesota, from the day of its admission as a State into the Union in 1858, has remained strong and sturdy in its adherence to the policy of protection of American industries and American labor.

I have said that the people of Minnesota have been only to a limited extent direct beneficiaries of protective tariff legislation. This is true. Until the tariff act of 1890, their products have received no just or adequate protection against the competition of other countries.

In the enactment of the law of 1890 the farmers of the West for the first time in the history of tariff legislation received that to which they were entitled. It is the first instance that duties had been levied sufficiently large to operate as a barrier to the competition of the farm products of the Canadian Provinces.

In 1889 we imported from Canada 11,365,881 bushels of barley, valued at $7,721,475; in 1890 substantially the same amount, and this was done under a duty of 10 cents a bushel. In 1893, with a duty at 30 cents per bushel, we imported 1,969,761 bushels only at a valuation of $921,301, a falling off of over 9,000,000 bushels. The production of this 9,000,000 bushels was transferred from Canadá to States of the Northwest, including Wisconsin, Minnesota, the two Dakotas, and Montana.

The present bill reduces the duty on barley to 30 per cent ad valorem, which, with the valuation probably put upon it in Canada, will make the duty less even than prior to 1890, so that there would seem to be no good reason, with this reduction of duty, why the same or even larger amounts will not be imported from Canada than prior to 1890.

This is one practical object lesson as to the effect of this bill on the productions of the West. I could go on with other productions, as potatoes, hay, flax, hops, eggs, pease, cheese, and other food and agricultural products, and show the same results would apply to them, but will not do so at this time, but shall take occasion when the bill is considered by paragraphs to treat the subject more in detail.

But, Mr. President, there is another provision in this bill which will affect the farmers of the Northwest more disastrously than even the reduction of duties to which I have referred, and that is the repeal of the reciprocity provisions in the law of 1890. There is probably no section of the country where the effect of reciprocity treaties with foreign nations consummated by the wisdom and persistent efforts of Mr. Blaine, under the late Administration, have been so marked and favorable as the States of the Northwest.

No legislation has been so favorably received and hailed with so much delight in the Northwestern States as the reciprocity legislation in the act of 1890. In these treaties no interests were more carefully guarded and advanced than the agricultural interests, and more especially those of the Northwestern States. No one appreciated more fully the importance of furnishing new markets to our agricultural products than Mr. Blaine, and he seemed to have had this constantly in view in the preparation of these treaties, not only with Spain and the South American Republics, but also with Germany.

You can, therefore, Mr. President, well imagine that the people of Minnesota, as well as the other Northwestern States, look with more alarm upon the repeal of this reciprocity legislation than any other of its provisions.

I now come to the discussion of the question of the abandonment of the policy of reciprocity with foreign nations, including our sister republics on this hemisphere, inaugurated and given vitality in the tariff law of 1890.

But before entering upon such discussion I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall ask a vote of the Senate upon the following amendment to the tariff bill:

SEC.—. That the removal and reduction of duties provided for in this act shall apply only to articles imported from countries which shall have made reciprocal and equivalent concessions in their tariff laws in favor of merchandise imported from the United States.

I am not only opposed, Mr. President, to termination of the reciprocity arrangements already existing between the United States and other countries, but I am in favor of applying the same principle in all our foreign trade.

It may be saying a great deal, but it seems to me that there is no provision in this remarkable bill, evidently having for its purpose the destruction of American industries and American interests, so absolutely without excuse; so utterly devoid of reason, and ordinary business sense; so disastrous to the many great interests of this country, and apparently so vicious in purpose and design, as the repeal of the reciprocity provisions of the act of 1890, the handiwork of one of the wisest and far-seeing statesmen that this or any other country has ever produced—Mr. Blaine.

The authors of this measure, both in the House of Representatives and the members of the Finance Committee in the Senate, have evidently broached this subject with great misgivings, even if not forebodings. They have, either from want of a clear understanding of the subject, or the requisite courage to meet this question in an open and manly way, floundered, until quite recently, amid uncertainty, doubt, and distrust as to what should be attempted or dared in connection with this important legislation.

The Finance Committee has, however, evidently "taken the bull by the horns," so to speak, and clearly disclosed their purpose and policy by incorporating into the bill the following language, which surely can not be misunderstood:

SEC. 104. That sections 3, 15, and 16 of an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," are hereby repealed; and all agreements or arrangements made or proclaimed between the United States and foreign governments under the provisions of said section are hereby abrogated, of which the President shall give such notice to the authorities of said foreign governments as may be required by the terms of such agreements or arrangements.

But, Mr. President, before entering upon the discussion in details of the provision as now clearly presented, I think it may be well to bring to the attention of the Senate and the country the doubt and uncertainty that has shrouded this question from the time the Committee on Ways and Means submitted the report which accompanied the bill when it was finally sent to the House of Representatives up to the present time, if for no other purpose, as indicative of a want of a clear understanding and of consistency and logic which has attached from its introduction and passage in the House of Representatives, and the finishing touches which it has received at the hands of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee of the Senate which has reported the bill in its present shape, making such observations as occur to me in following it through its different stages.

In the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, which accompanied the bill when it was submitted to the House of Representatives, appears this paragraph:

It is the purpose of the present bill to repeal in toto section 3 of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, commonly but most erroneously called its reciprocity provision.

The section in the pending bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, reads as follows:

SEC. 89. That section 3 of an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed, and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made, etc.

THE FORCE OF THE SECTION AND ITS EFFECT.

If I read this section aright, Mr. President, it was intended by the committee of the House of Representatives which framed this bill to deprive the Executive of any further authority under the reciprocity section of the act of 1890, but not to disturb the rights that may have been heretofore acquired under the provisions of that section. In other words, the fifteen commercial arrangements which now exist between the United States and foreign nations by the authority of that act were intended by the House to remain as they are, but the President was forbidden to negotiate more like them.

It seems to me that no other interpretation can be placed upon the language of section 89 of the House bill, for it says distinctly that the repeal of existing laws shall not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued, "but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue, and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made." That this was the intention of the House of Representatives is shown by the discussion of the section referred to on the 25th of January, 1894. Mr. SPRINGER, addressing the House, said:

Mr. Chairman, I think there should be added to the end of this section a proviso that the treaties made in pursuance of the provisions of that act should remain in force the same as if the section had not been repealed. I offer an amendment of that character.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That all treaties heretofore made in pursuance of the provisions of said section shall continue in force until abrogated by their terms, the same as if said section had not been repealed."

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the only object of this is to provide that the treaties that have been made in pursuance of this section which is now to be repealed shall be continued in force until abrogated by the terms of the treaty, the same as if the section had not been repealed.

To which Mr. TURNER, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, replied.

The proposition is to repeal the reciprocity clause by express and explicit provisions, but it does not in any way affect these existing agreements. I suggest to the gentleman that his amendment is entirely superfluous.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia added the following:

We are repealing what we never believed was constitutional—the authority given to the President of the United States, when in his judgment other countries charged duties which he does not believe to be reciprocal, he shall issue an Executive proclamation suspending a law and fixing rates upon certain articles imported from those countries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, another member of the committee, said:

The proposition of the committee is to repeal the provision of the McKinley law which authorizes the President to make agreements without referring the questions to Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER, in the course of subsequent debate, returned to the subject, and put the question again directly to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Said he:

I understand that the gentleman from West Virginia contends that it (the repeal of section 3 of the McKinley law) will destroy these agreements, because he is of the opinion that they ought not to have been made.

To which Mr. WILSON of West Virginia replied, "The gentleman is mistaken."

Whereupon Mr. SPRINGER said again:

If I understand the purport of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] it is to repeal the law under which certain commercial agreements have been made with certain foreign countries. If you repeal the authority for making those agreements you destroy the agreements themselves.

Mr. TURNER. Where does the gentleman from Illinois find authority for that proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. I find it in the general principle that when a statute authorizes any particular thing to be done and you repeal the statute, the thing that is to be done or that has been done is abrogated.

THE EFFECT UPON THE DUTY ON SUGAR.

The repealing section in the bill when it was originally given to the public by the Senate Committee on Finance was precisely the same as that passed by the House of Representatives, excepting only the number, which in the original was 89, was changed to 106. It therefore was intended and understood to mean exactly what it did when it was discussed by the House of Representatives, or we are compelled to infer that the committee have not treated this very important subject with entire candor. But another section of the bill restored a duty upon sugar, which can not be collected upon four-fifths of the imports of that article into the United States as long as the reciprocity arrangements continue with Brazil, Germany, Austria-Hungary, and the Spanish and British colonies in the West Indies. Sugar would therefore have practically remained free if the bill had remained as originally prepared by the subcommittee, notwithstanding a pretense of restoring a duty in another section.

I regret very much, Mr. President, that the bill has again been changed so as to instruct the President to give notice of a desire on the part of the United States to terminate these treaties, because no such desire exists and the announcement of the purpose of the committee has been received with profound regret by the people of Minnesota, and I may add by all who have an intelligent appreciation of the efforts that have been made and the methods which must be used to extend our commerce with foreign countries.

I may be pardoned for again referring to the debate upon this question in the House of Representatives. Mr. COOMBS, a Democratic Representative from New York, is a merchant who has been engaged for many years in trade with the West Indies and South America, and I am informed that the house of which he is the senior partner is the largest exporter of general merchandise for the United States to those countries, and he therefore speaks from practical experience and personal knowledge.

OPINION OF A DEMOCRATIC MERCHANT

Referring to the proposed repeal of what is known as the reciprocity section, Mr. COOMBS said:

I do not believe in letting go these arrangements or in releasing any hold we have upon these foreigns markets. The men who would be the most injured by the abrogation of the section of the McKinley act now proposed to be repealed would be the farmers. Under these agreements (and I am in that business) the United States has been able to export the farm products of this market to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the West India Islands. I do not believe we should take the first step to deprive our farmers of those large markets which they did not have before and which they will not have after these trade arrangements are abrogated.

Mr. BYNUM. To what extent have our farmers got there?

Mr. COOMBS. They have got there with their flour under the strength of these trade arrangements; the duties on that article have been removed. Flour is now taken from the United States which was previously taken from Spain. Every western miller and every western farmer is interested that the advantages we now enjoy shall not be ruthlessly torn from us. [Applause.] I speak of what I know. But let us keep hold of our present advantages in the interest of our farmers, our producers, and our manufacturers, just as long as we can and let the first movement for a change come from them. We make a new law as far as the admission of their materials free is concerned.

Undoubtedly they will admit it, but do not let us be the first ones to give away the interests of the farmer, which are affected more by this than any others. Let them do the abrogating, and do not let us do it.

A DECIDED DIFFERENCE OF OPINION IN THE COMMITTEE.

But, Mr. President, if we are to accept newspaper reports, there has been a decided difference of opinion among the members of the subcommittee who framed this bill as to its exact meaning and intention with regard to the reciprocity arrangements.

I find in the newspapers of Germany a cablegram from Herr Rudolf Cronau, a distinguished writer who was sent to the United States by the Cologne Gazette—perhaps the most prominent and influential journal in the German Empire, and the mouthpiece of the Government—announcing that he had been personally assured by Mr. VEST, a Senator from Missouri and a member of the Finance Committee, that the commercial arrangement between the United States and the German Empire would not be affected by the passage of this bill, but that German sugar would continue to be admitted free into the ports of the United States regardless of the restoration of the duty upon similar products from other countries.

I should like to ask my friend from Missouri if he gave Mr. C onau any such assurances, or by what authority this announcement was cabled? This news has been spread all over Germany, and the peculiar relation of the Senator from Missouri to this bill has caused his statements to be received as the voice of an oracle; and it may be said that the German Empire and the German people are not accustomed to the publication of reckless nd careless announcements concerning official matters by their public men.

I see in the Washington Post a corroboration of the cablegram of Mr. Cronau, and the mention of his name as the person to whom the Senator from Missouri made this statement. I also find a very interesting and intelligent dispatch from Washington in the Chicago Record of the same date, March 21, which includes also an interview with the chairman of the Finance Committee on the same subject:

RECIPROCITY IS SAFE—NEGOTIATIONS NOT DISTURBED—SENATOR VEST SAYS EXISTING COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS WILL NOT BE AFFECTED BY THE TARIFF BILL.

[Special to the Chicago Record.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12.

Senator Vest said this afternoon that the tariff bill as reported from the Committee on Finance did not repeal or abrogate any of the reciprocity arrangements that were negotiated between the United States and foreign nations under section 3 of the act of 1890, known as the reciprocity section.

This was in answer to an inquiry made by Mr. Rudolph Cronau, the correspondent of the Cologne Gazette, who was sent from Germany to Washington by that paper to watch tariff legislation, particularly that which directly affects the interests of the German Empire. A treaty was negotiated with Germany under the reciprocity section, in which it was agreed to admit German beet-root sugar free into this country provided she removed the embargo from American meats and reduced her rates upon other agricultural products from the United States. Under this treaty there has been a very large increase in the exchange of the articles affected. The exports of corn from the United States to Germany jumped from $2,000,000 to $7,000,000, rye from $116,664 to $3,759,584, wheat from $295,953 to $7,842,902, fertilizers from $360,784 to $1,493,445, oil cake from $1,182,041 to $2,328,169, and other articles in a corresponding degree, while the imports of beet-root sugar from Germany increased from 173,310,790 to 325,503,840 pounds.

Mr. VEST explained further that it was the intention of the bill to repeal the reciprocity clause of the McKinley law for the purpose of depriving the President of the power to negotiate any further treaties under it, but it was not intended or desired to disturb those that had already been negotiated and were now in force. He alluded particularly to the commercial agreements with Spain and with Germany, and said that they would be in no way affected by the bill. The retaliatory measures that had been directed at Haiti, Venezuela, and Colombia would, however, be revoked by the bill, and those nations placed upon the same footing as others.

Mr. VOORHEES concurred in the views of Mr. VEST as to the understanding and purpose of the committee and the interpretation of the bill. Section 106 of the bill, as reported from the Senate committee, which was section 89 in the House bill, repeals section 111, which contains the reciprocity provision of the McKinley law, but it explicity provides that "the repeal of existing laws or the modification thereof emoraced in this act shall not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued before the said repeal," etc. "But all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made."

Mr. VOORHEES said he did not see how language could be any plainer. It was manifestly the intention of the committee, by recommending the repeal of section 3, to prevent the negotiation of any more treaties, but it had expressly provided that those which had already been negotiated should not be affected in any way. If it had been the intention or desire to abrogate or revoke the reciprocity arrangements with Germany, Spain, Brazil, and other countries the bill would contain a section instructing the President to terminate them, as was the case with the Hawaiian treaty. Mr. VOORHEES, then turning over the pages of the bill, called attention to section 105, which was inserted in the House bill by the Finance Committee. This provides that "the President shall, immediately upon the passage of this act, give notice to the Government of the Hawaiian Islands that the United States intends to terminate the treaty of June 3, 1875," etc.

"If we intended to terminate the German and Cuban treaties," said Mr. VOORHEES, "we should have added a similar section to the bill referring to them."

"Then we are to understand that German and Cuban sugar will continue to come in free after the passage of this act until the reciprocity arrangements are terminated by the President?"

"That is my understanding," replied Senator VOORHEES. "Is not it yours, Evans?" said he, turning to Mr. Evans, the tariff expert from the Treasury who has been assisting the committee.

"Yes," replied Mr. Evans, "this bill will in no way affect the operation of the pending reciprocity arrangements."

This information is confirmed by the Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, on the following day, who appears to have been startled at the utterances of the two members of the Finance Committee on this subject, but secured from the Senator from Indiana a confirmation of the statement. He casts some reflections upon the intelligence of the committee, which I regret to see:

A BLUNDER IN SUGAR DUTIES—SENATE AMENDMENTS DO NOT ABROGATE THE RECIPROCITY TREATIES—THE PROPOSED DUTIES, THEREFORE, ARE OF LITTLE IMPORTANCE, AS UNDER THE FOREGOING INTERPRETATION 85 PER CENT OF RAW SUGAR WILL CONTINUE TO COME IN FREE—RECIPROCITY PROVISIONS OF THE HOUSE BILL.

[From our own correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, March 13.

A colossal blunder has been discovered in the new tariff as amended by the Senate in regard to sugar. Those who supposed that a duty of 1 cent per pound had been imposed by the Senate amendments on raw sugar imported into the United States, with a graduated scale up to 1.4 cents per pound on refined sugar, were somewhat startled this morning to read interviews with Senator VOORHEES and Senator VEST declaring that the Senate amendments did not abrogate the reciprocity arrangements under the old McKinley law. The bill as it passed the House provided that the third section of the McKinley law should be repealed, "but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceedings had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications, but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made."

Senator VEST fell back upon this qualifying clause as leaving in force all the reciprocity arrangements made under the McKinley law, and as going no further than prohibiting the making of additional arrangements of the same sort.

Senator VOORHEES this morning concurred with this view so far as to say that the reciprocity arrangements would not be abrogated except by notice on the part of the United States. When asked if he was aware that sugar from Cuba, from Germany, and from Brazil would continue to enter the United States free of duty under this view of the case, he refused to continue the discussion.

The suggestion that the Supreme Court had declared legislation paramount to treaties was met by the reply: "You must go to the Supreme Court then for your information."

The effect of this view, that the treaties are not abrogated by the tariff bill, is to make the sugar duty of very little account. The imports of sugar into the United States during the fiscal year 1893 reached a value of $102,108,587; Cuba sent to this country $60,637,631 of this amount; Porto Rico, $3,227,522; Germany, $9,475,615; Brazil, $2,054,201, and the British West Indies, $9,487,434. All these countries have reciprocity arrangements with the United States, and if these arrangements continue in force and their sugar remains free of duty, the amount subject to duty under the tariff bill will be about 15 per cent of the gross imports.

Another singular feature of the bill is that the Hawaiian treaty, which was formally ratified by the Senate, is singled out for abrogation by the Senate bill. This fact is cited by the Senators as proof that the other reciprocity arrangements are not abrogated, but, on the other hand, it seems remarkable that sugar should be made dutiable from the Hawaiian Islands while it remains free from Cuba, Germany, and Brazil. The suspicion prevails in some quarters that the Senators who make these statements do not know the real effects of the bill themselves, and were not aware when they published their interviews that their argument as to the validity of the reciprocity arrangements would make a farce of the sugar duty.

I find on the same date, Mr. President, a telegram to the New York Tribune on the same subject, equally interesting and important, as it contains a confirmation of the statement that Senators VOORHEES and VEST were of the opinion that the passage of this bill would not disturb existing treaties:

RECIPROCITY AND SUGAR—RESULT OF THE NEW TARIFF BILL IF THE TREATIES STAND—IMPORTED SUGAR WILL FIX THE PRICE OF DOMESTIC, THE SUGAR TRUST WILL HAVE ADDITIONAL PROTECTION, THE AMERICAN PRODUCERS WILL BE RUINED, AND THE REVENUE WILL FALL SHORT OF ESTIMATES—QUEER TREATMENT OF HAWAII.

[By telegraph to the Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, March 13.

Everybody who is familiar with the reciprocity agreements between the United States and other countries and with the geographical distribution of sugar production throughout the world, and who had also been informed that the majority of the Senate Committee on Finance estimated that the amount of revenue to be derived from the duty on sugar under the pending bill would exceed $45,000,000 a year, was amazed when he read in the Tribune and several other newspapers to-day that Chairman VOORHEES and Senator VEST agreed in the statement that it was not the design of that committee to disturb or abrogate existing reciprocity arrangements, but simply to deprive the President of the authority to make any new arrangements with other foreign countries.

Chairman VOORHEES, according to the published statement, also declared that the bill could not be fairly construed as abrogating existing reciprocity agreements (except in the case of Hawaii), and called attention to sections 105 and 106 in support of his declaration. When his attention was again called to the matter to-day, and he was asked if the statement published this morning was correct, Mr. VOORHEES replied in the affirmative.

If the design of the majority of the Finance Committee is, and if the effect of the bill if enacted will be, such as Chairman VOORHEES and Mr. VEST assert, certain consequences will naturally and inevitably follow. In the first place, all sugars below No. 16 Dutch standard of color produced in countries with which the United States has entered into reciprocity arrangements will continue to be admitted free of duty. That means that 80 per cent of all the raw material of the sugar refiners of the United States will be admitted free, thus fixing the price that they will be obliged to pay for the other 20 per cent imported, as well as the price of domestic raw sugar.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, the total importations into the United States of beet and cane sugars under No. 16 Dutch standard, amounted to 3,733,040,266 pounds, of which 3,296,706,423 pounds were cane sugar and 436,333,843 beet sugar. Of the total amount imported 2,973,854,622 pounds, or about 80 per cent, were produced in countries with which the United States has reciprocity agreements.

Of the total amount of beet sugar (below No. 16 Dutch standard) imported 34,223,342 pounds came from Austria-Hungary and 325,503,840 pounds from Germany; and of the total amount of "cane and other sugars" imported, 15,836 pounds were produced in and imported from Guatemala, 218,450 pounds from Salvador, 332,967,481 pounds from the British West Indies, 64,035,840 pounds from San Domingo, 1,843 651,095 pounds from Cuba, 99,578,182 pounds from Puerto Rico, 114,598,997 pounds from Brazil, and 159,061,559 pounds from British Guiana. With all of these countries reciprocity agreements are in force.

In the same year the importations of sugar under No. 16 Dutch standard from Hawaii, which were admitted free of duty by virtue of the reciprocity treaty which it is now proposed to abrogate, amounted to 288,517,929 pounds.

In addition to these free importations there were admitted free of duty 15,490,679 gallons of molasses, of which 15,218,480 gallons, or more than 98 per cent, were produced in and imported from the British West Indies, Cuba, Puerto Rico, and San Domingo.

In the same year the total importations of sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard amounted to only 33,405,081 pounds. Of this total 32,676,000 pounds were dutiable at five-tenths of a cent per pound. It also follows, if the assertion of Chairman VOORHEES and Senator VEST be correct, that the rates of duty on all refined sugars imported under the proposed law (if any are so imported) will be considerably more than double the rates under the existing law, or from 1.1 to 1.4 cents a pound. In other words, according to their interpretation of the bill, raw sugars will continue to be admitted free of duty and the sugar trust will gain an additional protection (which sugar consumers will be forced to pay) of six-tenths to nine-tenths of a cent a pound. This will, indeed, truly be "a staggering blow to the sugar trust."

The cane and beet sugar producers of the country declare with one voice that these industries will be seriously injured, if not speedily ruined, if the rates of duty proposed by the majority of the Finance Committee shall be adopted. Of course, if the construction now given to the bill by two of its framers is correct, the rates of duty on sugars below No. 16 Dutch standard, no matter what may be their saccharine strength, will not be operative, and the sugar industries of the United States, deprived of the benefit of either a bounty or an adequate duty, will be destroyed. That is the prospect which the sugar-producers of the South and West now face.

But while it is proposed to continue to admit free of duty the raw sugars of Austria-Hungary, Germany, the British and Spanish West Indies, British Guiana, Brazil, San Domingo, Guatemala, and Salvador, it is also proposed to abrogate the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty and compel the sugar of Hawaii, most of which is produced by American citizens and American energy and capital, and the production of which is the chief industry of that country, to pay a duty. It is also proposed to impose a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem on bananas and pineapples, the production of which has become an industry of some importance in Hawaii, and promises to increase in magnitude.

As Senator Lodge said in conversation with a Tribune correspondent to-day; "The bill discriminates most harshly and unjustly against Hawaii and Hawaiian products. It is hard for anybody to conceive what should have impelled the framers of the bill to do this thing, in view of the close commercial and political relations between the United States and that country, and the great probability, amounting to a moral certainty, that those relations will become even more intimate at no distant day."

Again as to revenue. If the bill should become a law in its present form, so far as sugar is concerned, and the law should be construed as the bill is construed by Chairman VOORHEES and Senator VEST, the duties on sugar and molasses would yield at the most only one-fifth as much revenue as the majority of the Finance Committee estimates, and in all probability the amount would be even less than that.

But, on the following day, March 14, I find in the newspapers an interview with the Senator from Missouri on this subject which appears to have been furnished to the press associations, and from its phraseology one would judge it were written in the same room where this bill was prepared, after conference with the representatives of the sugar interest and reflection.

HAVE NO USE FOR BLAINE'S PLAN—THE RECIPROCITY TREATIES NULLIFIED BY THE WILSON BILL.

The question having arisen as to the effect the Wilson bill, as amended by the Senate Committee on Finance, would have upon the reciprocity treaties negotiated by the President under the McKinley act, Senator VEST, of the Democratic majority of the Finance Committee, was asked for his views on the subject. He said:

"The pending tariff bill does away with the whole system of reciprocity as created by the McKinley act, but it does not attempt to rescind any treaties made with foreign countries as authorized by the Constitution. While Congress has the unquestionable right to rescind a treaty it could only do so in express terms. The commercial arrangements made by President Harrison with foreign countries are necessarily nullified by the provisions of the pending bill.

"The unavoidable defect of the proposed legislation will be to so absolutely do away with the whole system of reciprocity as created by the McKinley act, including the power of the President to retaliate by putting a duty upon the exports from foreign countries which refuse to admit our exports into that country free of duty."

Senator VEST said further that he understood that the effect of the bill would be to nullify the agreement made with Germany, Brazil, and Spain whereby sugar is admitted free from those countries and their dependencies.

HOW THE RECIPROCITY ARRANGEMENTS MAY BE TERMINATED.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this uncertainty and doubt in the minds of the committee as to the effect of this legislation was entirely unnecessary and inexplicable. The President of the United States on the 27th of June, 1892, submitted to the Senate, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, what is known to the index of the Senate folding room as Senate Executive Document No. 119, Fifty-second Congress, first session, which contains copies of all the commercial agreements that were negotiated under authority of section 3 of the tariff act of 1890, and a statement of the results that had accrued from those arrangements to that date. I find by examination of these treaties that all but three contain upon their face the method by which they may be properly terminated.

It appears, on page 32, that the negotiations with Brazil closes—

With the understanding that the commercial arrangements thus put in operation shall remain in force so long as neither government shall definitely, at least three months in advance, inform the other of its intention and decision to consider it at an end at the expiration of the time indicated: provided, however, that the termination of the commercial arrangement shall begin to take effect either on the 1st day of January or on the 1st day of July.

The next arrangement in order is that with Spain for Cuba and Puerto Rico, in which it is stated that—

This commercial arrangement, put in operation under the clause above stated, shall remain in force so long as it shall not be modified by the mutual agreement of the executive power of the two countries, always reserving the respective right of the Cortes of Spain and of the Congress of the United States to modify or repeal it whenever they think proper.

The next arrangement was with San Domingo, which was negotiated with the understanding that the commercial arrangement, when it shall have been promulgated, shall remain in force so long as it shall not be modified by the legislation of either government or by mutual agreement as to the executive power of the two countries.

The provision for terminating the treaties with the British colonies is found on page 87, and reads as follows:

It will be understood that the arrangement shall remain in force so long as it shall not be modified by the mutual agreement of the executive power of the two governments or by the legislative action of the Government of the United States, or the said colonies with the approval of the British Government.

The arrangement with Salvador, as given on page 93, provides that—

The Government of the United States may terminate the provisional arrangement proposed by you upon thirty days' notice to the Government of Salvador.

The arrangement with Nicaragua (see page 96) provides that—

Such treaty shall remain in force until the lawmaking power of either of the two countries decides otherwise, or until it is abrogated by the mutual consent of both governments.

The arrangement with Guatemala provides that—

It will be the understanding that it shall remain in force until it is modified or abrogated by the legislative action of either government, or by mutual agreement between the executives of the two countries.

The arrangement with Honduras provides that—

The Government of the United States may terminate the provisional arrangements now under consideration by giving the Government of Honduras thirty days' notice in advance.

I do not find, Mr. President, in the papers relating to the commercial arrangement between the United States and the German Empire any formal provision for its termination. Nor can I find any provision in the similar agreement with Austria-Hungary. But I may suggest that it is a universal law of nations that such agreements and treaties can be terminated at any time by either party upon giving due notice to the other.

A DISCOURTESY THAT WILL BE RESENTED.

You will find, Mr. President, that the abrogation of these arrangements will be the most unpopular piece of legislation this Congress has enacted or will enact, and that it will be resented by the citizens of the southern republics and colonies as well as by the people of the United States.

Those governments expect to be treated with ordinary courtesy. They expect that the etiquette that prevails among nations will be observed in all our relations with them. They have regarded the United States as the mother of republics. They have looked to her for example and precept. They have modeled their institutions upon our own. They have copied our Constitution and our form of government, and they have endeavored to follow in the path we have laid ever since they achieved their independence from the Crown of Spain. It is not probable, Mr. President, that any of those little republics will show forcible resentment, but even if they were able to do so the difference in population, in military strength, in wealth, and in area between them and the United States should make us the more generous and the more scrupulous in observing all of the obligations we have incurred.

I have received information, Mr. President, by means which I am not permitted to describe, that the governments of the other American republics regard the proposed action of Congress on this subject as an unwarranted and inexcusable exhibition of selfish indifference to their friendship and their welfare, and the passage of this act will go very far to destroy all the good effects that have followed the endeavors of this Government to promote closer social and commercial relations with them. They can not resent this as an insult, but I warn this committee that they will enter a solemn protest against what they consider a breach of faith on the part of the United States.

We sought these arrangements; they were made at our request and in pursuance of legislation which was under discussion in Congress and in the public prints for several months. They entered into them with the expectation that they would be permanent, and they discarded existing commercial relations with the European countries upon the implied assurance that the new relations they were entering upon with the United States would continue for years. There were protests entered by the diplomatic representatives of European nations, but they were ignored and the arrangements were consummated with an abiding faith that the United States would regard them as sacred. Now, Mr. President, we propose to show these people that they were but the footballs of our political jealousy, to be kicked about here and there, to be taken up and discarded according to the whims and caprice of a political majority in Congress, and the attitude in which this Government now stands before the world is, in this respect, neither flattering nor just to itself.

We have been engaged since 1884 in endeavoring to extend our foreign trade. The product of the industry and the genius of our people have so far outstripped the requirements for home consumption that we will be compelled to seek new markets for the surplus or close our factories and let a portion of our harvests rot upon the ground.

The price of our wheat and corn, and in fact of all the agricultural products of the Northwest, are lower to-day than they have ever been, and the same is true of nearly every line of mechanical merchandise. This condition is largely the result of overproduction, and our hands and tools and machinery must lie idle or we must find purchasers for the results of their labor.

THE NECESSITY OF FOREIGN MARKETS.

The necessity of extending our foreign markets for manufactured goods could not be more forcibly demonstrated than by the reports that have just been issued from the Census Office. These show an enormous increase in the number of manufacturing establishments, from 253,852 in 1880 to 355,401 in 1890, and the amount of capital employed from $2,709,272,606 in 1880 to $6,524,475,305 in 1890, and in the amount of wages paid from $947,953,765 in 1880 to $2,282,823,265 in 1890. The value of the products at the same time has increased from $5,369,579,491 in 1880 to $9,370,107,624 in 1890.

In my own State, as in all of the other of the newer States of the Northwest, there has been an enormous increase during the last decade. The number of manufacturing establishments in Minnesota, according to the census of 1890, was 7,505, with a capital of $127,686,618, with plants valued at $65,377,472, employing an average of 79,629 hands, and paying average wages of $38,189,239. The cost of the materials used each year by these factories was $118,481,941, and the value of their product was reported to be $192,033,478.

In the flouring interest, which is perhaps the most important in my State, the recent report from the Census Office on manufactures shows that there are in the United States 18,470 establishments, with a capital of $203,473,500; with plants and machinery valued at $136,539,851, with 63,481 people employed, to whom are paid annually the sum of $27,035,742 in wages. The cost of the material used—that is, the amount of wheat ground annually by these establishments—was in 1890 $434,152,290, and the value of their product was $513,971,474.

The lumber interest, which stands next in the State I have the honor in part to represent, has 21,011 establishments, with an aggregate capital of $403,339,968, with plants and machinery worth $294,325,888; employing an average of 286,197 men, who receive an average of $87,784,433 as wages. They consume materials to the value of $231,555,618, and the annual value of their product in 1890 was $403,607,575. The number of planing mills and factories for making sash, doors, and blinds in 1890 was 3,670, with an aggregate capital of $120,271,440, with plants and machinery valued at $52,327,364, employing 83,880 men in 1890, who were paid the sum of $48,970,080 in wages. The materials consumed by them was valued at $104,926,834, and the value of their product was $183,681,552.

The most convenient and encouraging markets, for both our agricultural and mechanical merchandise, are those offered by the Latin American Republics and colonies, whose population of 50,000,000 or more have been purchasing annually between four and five hundred millions of merchandise in Europe, and an average of only about one hundred millions from us. The greater part of these imports could be furnished by our own farmers and manufacturers at prices as low as those obtained in Europe, and nearly all our products are acknowledged to surpass in quality those of any nation in the world.

WE CAN COMPETE WITH ANY NATION IN THE WORLD.

As there has been doubt raised upon this question I may again call upon Representative COOMBS of New York, who in a recently published interview with the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, says:

[Special to the Chicago Record.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 19.

The one question that is always coming up in the debate on the tariff bill is whether the manufactures of the United States are able to compete in prices in foreign markets with the manufactures of England, France, Germany, and Belgium and other European countries, and it is constantly asserted on one side or the other that it is impossible for them to do so because of the excessive cost of producing and the higher price of labor in the United States. But those who have been talking are merely theorists. No man has as yet discussed the question on the floor of the House who has ever had any experience or practical knowledge of the facts.

Representative COOMBS, of Brooklyn, whose novel plan for a permanent tariff was described in these dispatches the other day, might give some accurate information, as the house of which he is the senior partner has been engaged for more than twenty-four years in selling goods in all the foreign markets of the world. While they may not do as large a volume of business as some other exporters, it is doubtless true that they sell a larger amount of miscellaneous manufactured merchandise in more foreign countries than any other house in the United States.

I asked Mr. COOMBS to-day what his experience had been in this particular; how the American manufacturer stands in foreign markets as to the price and quality of his goods, especially in the markets of South and Central America.

"Taking all classes of agricultural implements," said Mr. COOMBS, "housekeeping goods, furniture, drugs, and medicines, paper and stationery, leather goods, trunks, all kinds of cotton goods (except prints and percales), table cutlery, glassware, lamps, agricultural and mechanical tools, machinery of all kinds, and nearly everything we produce for export, we can sell these just as cheap as the Europeans can, in many cases even cheaper, and make a fair profit. We have a very large market for carriages and wheeled vehicles of all kinds, cordage, barbed wire, and binding twine. Our house sold 500 tons of binding twine in the Argentine Republic last year."

"How about the superiority of the American goods?"

"American goods are undoubtedly superior and are recognized as such all through South America, and to such an extent that the Germans particularly, and the English to a certain extent, have been forced to imitate them in pattern and fabrics, and in years gone by even forged our trade-marks. The latter, however, has been practically stopped by recent treaties, under which we have been able to prosecute manufacturers for infringement in those countries."

"Is there any class of goods that you think it impossible to compete with?"

"Woolen goods. We can compete with them in ordinary dress silks, but not in styles. We do not originate styles in this country. For instance, the French manufacturer will show a certain style of silk to a merchant in New York, say Arnold, Constable & Co., who will buy in a variety of colors, and no other house will be permitted to see that particular style until it is opened and exposed for sale on the counters of the purchasing firm. The moment it is put on sale agents of American manufacturers of silk will buy a dress pattern, and immediately commence imitating it. Silk that retails for $8 and $9 a yard one season will be imitated in as good a fabric and sold the next season at $2.25 and $2.50 wholesale. So that a large part of the tariff that is levied on silks is a tariff on taste. The same is true of high-grade muslins, which are imitated in Manchester and this country. The French originate styles; they have the designers. Some of our manufacturers have regular arrangements in Europe to obtain styles in advance. I have heard of one establishment that spent $16,000 in one year to get styles in advance.

"It has been asserted that American prints or calicoes can not be sold in competition with those from Manchester; that is untrue. We can always sell American prints when we can get them in suitable styles and colors. Mexico, Venezuela, Brazil, and the Argentine Republic are large buyers in this line of goods. Our manufacturers will get up their styles for the season, manufacture from 10,000 to 20,000, send sample cards out, and rush them off. What the wholesale trade does not take at once will be sent to a house like Cladin's, who will take the balance. By the time the orders come back from Latin America for those prints the stock is all gone, and this is the cause of our failure to extend the sales of prints.

"The English manufacturer pursues a different course. He sends travelers to South America with samples of his styles before he manufactures them. Each pattern has a variety of colors. He will take his orders for a number of cases or bales, which will be manufactured in exactly the colors wanted, and put in cases according to the assortments desired. This the manufacturer and wholesale merchants in this country refuse to do. The American print manufacturer as soon as he gets through with his season's supply will turn off his rollers and make no prints of that style; but the English manufacturer keeps his rollers of all stamped styles, and will manufacture any design of prints as long as there is a demand for them.

"I will give you a sample of how a New York commission merchant attempting to do business with Mexico in prints under these unfavorable conditions has to suffer. There was one house that purchased in advance $800,000 worth of American prints in order to insure their ability to fill their orders. They have, after selling their $800,000 worth of prints, maybe $200,000 worth of unsalable colors on hand, which must be sold in the New York market at a great loss. There are certain colors that will not sell in Latin America. The Mexican merchant knows what his people want, but our manufacturer does not seem to give this fact any consideration. He has had enough customers in the United States and does not care about foreign markets.

"There is scarcely ever a difference of more than one-eighth of a cent a yard between the prices of Manchester and New York prints, and this difference is as often in favor of New York as of Manchester. Our people, with a wonderful thickheadedness, insist upon imposing upon foreign markets our own idea of styles and quality. It has been so with agricultural implements, with tools, etc., the styles of which we never would vary to suit the tastes of these markets. We have really forced the market to accept what we offer instead of furnishing what the people want.

"We can not compete in the Latin-American markets in hosiery or ribbons, gloves or laces, etc., but we do compete with France in high grades of perfumery. We can not touch the fine grades of pocketknives. Wherever our people will make shoes of the styles desired by a ready market awaits them. They generally insist, however, upon making and selling the South American people shoes made for us in this latitude, whereas they want something for the tropical zone; but, as I say, wherever we have furnished the styles desired in those markets we have never failed in getting good orders. We can compete with any country in nearly everything we manufacture in woolen goods except

"Our manufacturers of woolen goods have already been working under wrong conditions. For instance, they have never been able to get good assortments of wool without paying enormous prices for them. Our tariff has always been the very highest on the lowest grades of woolen goods, and has stimulated the production of that quality of goods, while the higher grade has been neglected. The tariff is high on low grades and low on high grades. There are about three factories in the United States that make woolen goods really fit to compete with high grades from England. Our house is also a very large exporter to the colonies in Africa. The assortment sent there is not as large as that sent to some other markets, but it includes a great variety of goods, and we readily compete with similar articles from England.

"The assortment that goes to the Argentine Republic is infinite. This is because the climate there is similar to ours, and in Chile, where the same climatic conditions exist, there is a demand for the same class of goods we make and use in this country. The same is true to a certain extent with regard to Venezuela. An order from a merchant in that country seems to have just as great variety as an order from a merchant in the interior of the United States. There is no cutting at all and the order will cover five hundred or six hundred items. This is also true of orders from Mexico, where the merchants have been every year withdrawing one class of orders after another from Germany and placing it with our merchants, because our goods are superior, and wherever they are known they find a ready market. We furnish the world with wrought-iron pipes and fittings, a very large percentage of the total cost of which is for raw material. Our last comparison of iron pipes and fittings with England showed that we are 23 per cent lower on assortment of sizes."

"How can our foreign trade be promoted?"

"The same as any other trade is promoted. Give us facilities for getting the goods and credits. England and Germany have comparatively small home markets for their manufactured products, and have for generations been building up a foreign business, in which their consuls have very largely helped them. Their banking system has also been of great assistance. It is possible for a merchant in Birmingham, for instance, who has £20,000 of capital, to go to a banker, show his capital, and say:

I want credit for £100,000, using my £20,000 as margin. I propose to sell goods in the Argentine Republic to the extent of £100,000. I will draw drafts through you upon my customers; I want you to cash the drafts for me and credit the collections to my account.'

"He will pay about 3 or 4 per cent interest, whatever the rate may be at the Bank of England. He will then sell his goods to the merchants in Buenos Ayres or Montevideo at six or nine months' credit at 6 per cent interest, drawing upon them through this banker. All their remittances are made to him. Should the banker become tired of the transaction the merchant goes to another bank, maybe just across the street, who will take the account. It is by this means that the banking system of England helps merchants and manufacturers in making markets for their merchandise We, of course, have no such system in this country. The closest approach we have to it is that we can ship to our customers in Montevideo or Buenos Ayres or Rio, and convert our invoice into sterling, draw at 60 or 90 days' sight in sterling, and send the drafts to a London bank for collection.

"The London bank, if they know us well, will allow us to draw upon them at sight after they get the draft into their hands. They will charge us about one-half per cent, and 5 per cent interest, and for stamps, etc. It is not every manufacturer or commission house, however, that has credit enough to warrant such transactions, and when a house is established with sufficient credit to conduct its business in this manner, the credit becomes a part of its capital. Although laboring under this disadvantage, we have been able to make a serious impression upon those markets, and if instead of giving them from six to nine months' credit, we can under the best circumstances give them sixty or ninety days' credit, or make them supply us with bankers' credits with which to pay for the goods, it shows that we can certainly sell our goods cheaper than the English can, or they would not come for them."

ORIGIN OF THE RECIPROCITY POLICY.

In the study of different methods suggested for the promotion of our commerce with the Southern countries, the recent International American Conference, composed of delegates from eighteen of the nineteen independent nations of the hemisphere, recommended as the best and most practical, the negotiations of reciprocity treaties "upon such a basis as would be acceptable in each case, taking into consideration the special situations, conditions, and interests of each country, and with a view to promote their common welfare." And it was the unanimous judgment of the delegates that our exports to these countries and to the other republics could be increased to a great degree by the negotiation of such treaties as recommended by the conference, and, as Mr. Blaine remarked in submitting this recommendation to Congress:

The practical everyday experience of our merchants engaged in the trade demonstrated beyond a question that in all classes of merchandise which we have long and successfully produced for export, they are able to compete with their European rivals in quality and in price; and the reiterated statement that our Latin-American neighbors do not buy of us because we do not buy of them, or because we tax their products, have been annually contradicted by the statistics of our commerce for a quarter of a century.

The conference believed that while profit would come to all the countries if reciprocity treaties should be adopted, the United States would be by far the greatest gainer. The increased exports would be drawn alike from our farms, our factories, and our forests. None of the Latin-American countries produce building lumber, the most of them are dependent upon foreign markets for their breadstuffs and provisions, and in few is there any opportunity or inclination for mechanical industry.

To escape the delay and uncertainty of treaties, it was suggested by Mr. Blaine that a practicable and prompt mode of testing the question was to submit an amendment to the then pending tariff bill authorizing the President to declare the ports of the United States free to all the products of any nation of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed, whenever and so long as such nation shall admit to its ports free of all national, provincial (State), municipal, and other taxes, our flour, cornmeal, and other breadstuffs, preserved meats, fish, vegetables, and fruits, cottonseed oil, rice, and other provisions, including all articles of food, lumber, furniture, and other articles of wood, agricultural implements and machinery, mining and mechanical machinery, structural steel and iron, steel rails, locomotives, railway cars and supplies, street cars, and refined petroleum.

It will be noticed that Mr. Blaine suggested that the ports of this country should be free "to all the products of any nation of the American hemisphere," which includes wool, fruit, lead (?) ore, and copper, two articles which he was willing to put upon the free list of the United States in order to secure control of the markets of Mexico, Chile, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic.

Congress accepted the suggestion of the Secretary of State, and an amendment was attached to the then pending tariff bill, which was not so broad in its scope as his proposition, but provided—

That, with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, however, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or of any such articles, imposing duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension, duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the products of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely:

Then follows the schedule of duties.

THE OBJECT OF THE RECIPROCITY POLICY.

The object of this provision, as will be seen, was to enable the President, by diplomatic negotiations, to secure reductions in the import duties imposed upon the exports of the United States by countries whose staple products, under the provisions of the McKinley law, were admitted free into our ports. It applied particularly to the other American Republics and colonies, and to such European nations as produced sugar for export.

It was intended to remove or impair the protection that had permitted and encouraged the marvelous development of the natural resources of the industries of this land, but it was believed that, so long as the duties upon sugar and other raw products were to be removed, it was only just and reasonable to invite the country from which they come to make such equivalent concessions as would promote the sale of our agricultural and mechanical products in their markets, by enabling consumers to obtain them at lower prices, and by encouraging our manufacturers and export merchants to utilize the advantages thus secured for them. And under its authority commercial treaties were negotiated with Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Santo Domingo, Brazil, the Spanish colonies of Cuba and Puerto Rico, the British colonies of Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, Guiana, and the Leeward and Windward Islands in America, and with Germany and Austria-Hungary in Europe.

The treaties were very nearly uniform, and provided that in consideration for the free admission into the United States of certain raw products, such as sugar, coffee, rubber, hides, etc., originating in the countries named, they would admit to their ports certain agricultural and manufactured merchandise produced in the United States, either entirely free from customs or at a rate of duty 25 and in many cases 50 per cent less than those imposed upon similar articles from other countries; thus giving the producers and manufacturers of the United States an advantage equivalent to the difference between the wages paid for similar labor in this and European countries.

ARTICLES AFFECTED BY THE NEGOTIATIONS.

Among the articles that were to be admitted free into most of the countries named under the treaties were wheat, flour, corn and corn meal, rye and rye flour, buckwheat and barley, vegetables of all kinds, hay and oats, salted and pickled pork and bacon, preserved fish, cotton-seed oil, coal, rosin, tar, pitch and turpentine, all forms of agricultural implements and machinery, all forms of mining and mechanical tools, implements and machinery, engines, instruments and books for the arts and sciences, all form of railway supplies, marble and other forms of stone, mineral medicinal waters, ice, petroleum, tallow, lumber and other manufactures of wood, lard, butter and cheese, and various other agricultural and mechanical products.

The articles admitted at 50 per cent of the regular duties included glass and crystal ware, clay tiles for pavements and roofs; stoneware, earthenware, and porcelain; cast and wrought iron and steel in all forms not included in the free list; needles, pins, cutlery of all forms; tin plate; all articles made of copper, bronze, brass, nickel, and other metals; furniture of all kinds; bread, crackers, preserved and canned goods, sausages, stuffed meats, pickles, jams, jellies, all forms of rubber and gutta-percha, oilcloths, tarpaulin, etc.

Among the articles admitted at a reduction of 25 per cent from the regular duties were all forms of cotton goods, rope, cordage, twine, paints, varnishes, soaps and perfumery, medicines and drugs, candles, paper for printing, wallpaper, all forms of leather goods, trunks, valises, harness and saddlery, watches and clocks, and carriages.

In the arrangements with some of the countries these were considerably enlarged, and contained nearly every article produced for export in the United States. The list in detail furnishes an important and appropriate study, as it contains some articles that appeal directly to the interest of nearly every farmer and mechanic in the United States. For that reason I may be pardoned for inserting it here:

LIST OF ARTICLES AFFECTED BY RECIPROCITY ARRANGEMENTS.

The following is a list of articles grown or manufactured in the United States that are favorably affected by the reciprocity arrangements. Upon many of them the duties have been removed, upon others the duty has been reduced.

[Where the term "cotton or partly" is used it signifies at least half cotton. Articles mentioned in this list as of rubber are to be understood as composed wholly or partly of rubber. Boots and shoes of all kinds are to be understood as made wholly are partly of leather except those of rubber.]

THE GREAT OPPORTUNITY THAT IS THROWN AWAY.

Under these treaties, Mr. President, the United States stands in position to command and control the greater share of the trade of the tropical portion of the southern continents, and it is possible, by surrendering the duties upon wool, copper, lead ore, and some other articles, to negotiate similar arrangements with Mexico, Chile, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic, whose foreign trade annually exceeds the sum of $500,000,000, and whose imports annually surpass $250,000,000. All of the articles I name except lead ore are placed upon the free list by the pending bill, without asking anything in return, or giving an opportunity by diplomatic negotiation to secure valuable concessions for the benefit of our farmers and mechanics.

Not only does this bill repudiate and reject all the advantages that have been obtained for our producers in the southern nations, but it throws away forever the prospect of obtaining a market for at least one hundred millions of the surplus products of our farm and factories which we can not sell at home.

The advantages secured for them in the southern countries have inspired the merchants and manufacturers of the United States to make a determined attempt to obtain a share in the markets which they had previously neglected, and the passenger lists of the steamers and the statistics of the postal service show that more commercial travelers have gone from this country to Central and South America, more buyers have come from those countries to this, and more correspondence has been conducted during the last two or three years than was ever known before, and the increase continues to be very rapid.

EVERY TOWN AND VILLAGE INTERESTED IN THE TRADE.

Nor is this subject of importance only to the great commercial ports and manufacturing centers. Nearly every city and town in the United States has a direct and immediate interest in the extension of the trade. The men who make the articles of commerce do not know the destination of their wares, except in cases of large contracts of consignments. The South American trade, being conducted at present almost exclusively by commission men, is peculiar in this respect, and the workmen in the little factories that have sprung up in the towns and villages of the Middle and Northwestern States little know that the results of their labor are found scattered in nearly every country of Central and South America, and over all the islands of the sea.

Not long ago a gentleman interested in the promotion of our export trade to South America took the trouble to trace to its source every article of merchandise that composed the cargo of a vessel bound from New York to one of the southern republics. The result was astonishing. I shall not give the entire list, but only a few of the items for the purpose of illustrating the point which I have made, that every community in the Union has a personal interest in every effort that is made to secure larger markets for our products among the nations of this hemisphere, and to show the infinite variety of goods that can be sold in their markets. The following list shows a few of the towns and what they contributed to this cargo:

ALABAMA.

Bessemer: Cast-iron pipe.

ILLINOIS.

Belvidere: Sewing machines.

Other cities in the Northwest contributed to this cargo the following articles:

Portable road-making machine, gas engine, portable electric motor for drilling, boots and shoes, baseball bats, canned beef, brickmaking machines, patent evaporator, patent cereals, chairs, cheese, clocks, clothing, condensed milk, buckets, canned corn, corn meal, wool compressors, cotton-seed oil, dairy utensils, distillery plant, electric-light plant, bales of excelsior, fire bricks, flaxseed oil, passenger elevator and machinery, furniture, vegetables, seed, harness, hay-baling machine, hosiery, ice factory and cold storage plant, knitting machine, oatmeal, ornamental tiles, pickles, pressed bricks, plant, saddletrees, soap, spokes and hubs for wheels, starch, laundry machinery, strawboards, watches, wire screens, wooden ware, and material for repairing watches.

THE INTEREST OF MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS AROUSED.

Our people are just beginning to realize the value of the reciprocity arrangement. Trade is always conservative and sensitive, and feels its way cautiously when it is turned into new and unaccustomed channels; but the same intelligence and enterprise that has developed our internal commerce is now being applied to the extension of our foreign trade, and should have the protection and encouragement of the Government, instead of being deprived of the advantages it now enjoys. It requires time and patience and energy to acquire new markets and to successfully compete with established lines of trade.

The manufacturers of Europe have intrenched themselves in the southern markets by the experience of a century. Agencies and branches of commercial houses in London, Manchester, Hamburg, Frankfort, Antwerp, Paris, Lyons, and other European cities, have been established at the mercantile centers of Central and South America for generations, and the import trade of the southern continent is almost exclusively conducted by or through them. The relations so long established are satisfactory, and the consumers of that section are not seeking our trade.

It is therefore necessary for our merchants to invade these markets, and break down the existing lines of commerce, in order to sell their goods; and that they can do so is demonstrated by the testimony of Mr. Coombs, which I have quoted, and the experience of every man who has faithfully and intelligently made the experiment. Much money has already been invested, and much time has been spent in the introduction of our merchandise into the southern markets; in the establishment of agencies; in the study of the tastes and requirements of the people, and the conditions of the trade; in opening banking connections and credits, and in making the acquaintance of the buyers and consumers in the Latin-American countries and colonies.

This demonstrates that the advantages of the reciprocity arrangements have been recognized and are appreciated by those for whose benefits they were intended, but just now as they are beginning to see the results of their efforts, the majority of this Congress proposes to deprive them of the advantages they enjoy.

A REMARKABLE INCREASE IN THE USE OF THE MAILS.

The following table shows a remarkable increase in the weight of mails dispatched from the United States to Central America and the West Indies since the movement to increase our exports in that direction began:

NO ONE HAS ASKED TO HAVE THESE TREATIES TERMINATED.

I am not aware that any one of these countries with which these arrangements have been negotiated wishes to terminate them, nor has there been any such desire expressed upon the part of any individual or corporation or commercial organization in the United States.

There is no such memorial or petition before this body; nor has any person made any such request or suggestion to the Committee on Finance.

If those who are most interested in this subject were to be consulted they would insist that the reciprocity section and commercial arrangements that have been negotiated under its authority be let alone. They have not come here with their protest, because they know it would be useless to oppose a policy that has been apparent ever since the present Administration came into power. They recognize the purpose of the present Executive and the majority in Congress to cancel or revoke or overthrow, so far as is in their power, every act of the last Administration, whether it refers to the Islands of the Pacific or the Republic of South America, with the same disregard of the honor of the nation, the interests of the people, and the friendly relations of our neighboring states.

THE VALUE OF THE RECIPROCITY ARRANGEMENTS.

It is impossible to measure, as it is useless to conjecture, the value and importance of the reciprocity arrangements. They have been in operation but two or three years, and our merchants have not had time to see the full result of their efforts to introduce their goods into new markets; but it is gratifying to note that wherever commercial conditions have permitted there has been substantial gain in the exports from the United States.

In some cases it has been phenomenal, and can be traced directly to the advantages secured by the treaties and to the invasion of the market by our merchants and manufacturers.

In other countries where financial depression has prevailed a comparison of commercial statistics will show that the export trade of the United States has suffered less than that of any other nation, and that it has been a decided triumph to be able to hold our own. The testimony of all the commercial organizations of Europe, all the commercial publications, all of the diplomatic and consular representatives of the European countries in Central and South America all goes to show the value they place upon the commercial advantage the United States has obtained, and the danger threatened by them to their own commercial interests.

THE OPINION OF AN ENGLISH EXPERT.

Col. Howard Vincent, M. P., who has recently made an extensive tour through South America, in a recent address at Montgomery Hall, Sheffield, England, expressing the opinion of the British commercial community concerning our trade with Brazil, spoke as follows:

For the development of the prodigious resources of Brazil, England has advanced some £100,000,000. Under the settled government of the dethroned and defunct Emperor Pedro it produced a fair return in interest, and a larger one in orders to English workingmen for steel rails, machinery, and railway plant. In 1860 we sold to Brazil twice as much as we bought. Now the tables are turned, and we sell but one-third of what we buy. The trade of Brazil with the world increased 20 per cent between 1880 and 1891, but only 6 per cent with Great Britain. It has still a downward tendency.

The Germans are very strong in the rich province of Rio Grande do Sul. But the United States has become our most formidable opponent. In 1881 they persuaded the credulous young republic to admit their manufactures either free of duty or at a great reduction over ours. The result has been a loss of revenue which has to be made up by an increase of some 50 per cent on the duties on English goods. This puts them at an obvious disadvantage. The only satisfaction is that our cutlery still holds its own. I wish it was possible to say the same of the edge-tool trade—axes, hatchets, picks, nearly all come from America. Beyond question there will be in the near future a reorganization of affairs in Brazil, and it will be necessary for us to take care that it does not take a direction adverse to our commercial interests.

THE ONLY INCREASE IN OUR TRADE LAST YEAR WAS IN THE RECIPROCITY COUNTRIES.

I might call attention in this connection, Mr. President, to the enormous falling off in the exports from the United States to other countries during the same year, and to argue from that that our trade with Europe was a failure because the exports in 1893 were not equal to those of 1891 or 1892, and it is a strong argument in favor of these reciprocity treaties and a greater test of their value upon our trade with the republics and colonies with which they are made. The total exports of the United States in 1892 were $1,030,278,148, while in 1893 they were $847,665,194. The domestic exports to Europe alone fell off $189,106,919; to Oceanica the decrease was $4,300,000; to Asia $3,367,000, while the decrease in our shipments to South America was only $483,000. And the increase of exports from 1892 to 1893 to the countries with which we have reciprocity was $3,560,515, and the increase over 1891 was $16,440,721.

The exports to Austria dropped from $1,527,000 to $571,000; the exports to Belgium from $48,785,000 to $26,740,000; to Denmark from $8,000,000 to $5,000,000; France, $99,000,000 to $46,000,000; Germany, $105,000,000 to $83,000,000; Italy, $14,000,000 to $13,000,000; the Netherlands from $43,000,000 to $38,000,000; Russia from $5,000,000 to $2,000,000; Sweden and Norway from $6,500,000 to $4,000,000; England from $432,000,000 to $361,000,000; Scotland, $42,000,000 to $36,000,000; Ireland, $32,000,000 to $22,000,000; China from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000; Australasia from $11,000,000 to $7,000,000, and to other countries in a corresponding degree. The only countries in the entire list of nations and colonies in the world with which we have commerce that showed an increased exportation from the United States that year were the Azore Islands, Gibraltar, Greece, Portugal, Roumania, Spain, Turkey, Asiatic Russia, Philippine Islands, British Africa, French Africa, Portuguese Africa, the Dominion of Canada, and the Latin-American countries.

REASONS FOR A FALLING OFF IN TRADE.

Nevertheless in all of the Latin-American countries and in the West India Islands, except Cuba, there has been a period of financial and commercial depression unprecedented in its severity and continuance. This was due in Nicaragua, Honduras, and Brazil to revolutionary insurrections which have disturbed the peace, interfered with industries, destroyed confidence, impaired both public and private credit, wasted the fortunes and retarded the prosperity of the people. In other of the republics and in the British colonies there have been an extraordinary succession of poor crops which have reduced the purchasing power of the people, and compelled them to forego many imported luxuries to which they have been accustomed, to postpone private and public improvements, and to reduce the expense of living to correspond with the reduction of their revenue.

All of the southern republics and colonies have also suffered severely from the reduced value of silver, which is there common currency and standard, and a corresponding increase in foreign exchange. The price of labor and production and living has not in any measure decreased. A silver dollar which was worth 90 cents in gold in some of these countries a few years ago, is now worth less than 50 cents in foreign exchange, so that from this cause alone the value of foreign merchandise has been increased to a corresponding degree in all of the southern markets, and the aggregate value of their imports is reduced accordingly.

The English merchants have suffered from this cause, not only in Latin America, but wherever silver money is current. The commercial bodies of Great Britain, particularly those in trade with Cuba, Japan, India, and South America, including the London Chamber of Commerce, the greatest commercial organization in the world, have recently sent a memorial to the Government on this subject. They represent the urgency to be so great as to make necessary the reassembling of the International Monetary Conference, with a view to finding some remedy for the heavy fall and the violent fluctuations in silver which have disturbed the trade of the country beyond calculation.

In 1889 a Mexican silver dollar, which is the standard of value in most of the West Indian colonies, was worth 79 cents; in 1892 it was worth 74.4; on the 1st of January, 1894, it was worth 56 cents, in gold.

The Peruvian sol, the Colombian peso, and the sucre of Ecuador, which were worth 77 cents in 1889, were worth but 51 cents on the 1st of January last, in gold.

In January, 1891, the Brazilian milreis was worth 36 cents in gold; in June, 1893, it was worth only 24 cents, and in March, 1894, but 21 cents.

THE COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH BRAZIL.

The reciprocity arrangement with Brazil for a mutual reduction of duties was the first negotiated, and the first to go into effect, and although that country has been suffering almost continuously ever since from domestic political disturbances, our export trade has not diminished, and our imports have increased to a remarkable degree. The foreign commerce of Brazil is almost entirely controlled by Europeans. The large importing and commission houses are English; the banking capital is English, and the principal newspapers are owned or controlled by Englishmen, so that public sentiment, so far as it can be created or controlled by such influences, is prejudicial to the United States. When the treaty was proposed, and still more when it was promulgated, the British influence in official circles, in the Congress, and in the press was bitter and determined against it.

An attempt was made to have it denounced as unconstitutional. Public meetings were called and addressed by Englishmen to bully the Government and excite the animosities of the people, and every pretext was seized upon to make trouble. Then came a bitter and relentless war of rates, and the natural obstacles to an increased commerce were supplemented by unusual efforts on the part of European merchants to retain a trade that, under the reciprocity arrangements with this country, was seriously threatened. They reduced prices upon merchandise that might be bought in the United States and sold even at a loss, to prevent and frighten competition, and the steamship lines from Europe assisted them by cutting rates of transportation below the limit of profitable traffic. Writing on this subject the United States consul-general at Rio de Janeiro said:

The reduction of transportation rates from Europe seriously interferes with our shipping interests, and charterers can engage vessels on any terms; and they are often indifferent to risks and dispatch. Capt. Roy, of the sailing vessel Cora, is just in with a cargo of coal from Cardiff and was paid 16 shillings a ton only, while in 1888 for the same voyage and a similar cargo he received 29½ shillings, and so with many others.

THE COMMERCIAL DEPRESSION IN BRAZIL.

This was continued until the summer of 1891 when the political revolutions commenced. The financial interests of the country and the foreign trade were the first to feel the changing situation. Public and private enterprises were interrupted and many of them abandoned; foreign capital was withdrawn; banks and mercantile houses failed or went into liquidation; the demand for machinery, railway supplies, and articles of luxury ceased; workingmen were thrown out of employment; merchants found themselves with large stocks of imported goods on their hands, and no customers.

Both the national and State governments were busily occupied in efforts for self-preservation, and the period of the greatest prosperity in Brazil was immediately followed by a period of great financial and commercial depression. Exchange fell rapidly in sympathy with existing conditions. The nominal value of the milreis, the monetary standard in Brazil, is 54 cents in United States gold. In April, 1890, it was quoted at from 48 to 50 cents; in April, 1892, it was as low as 22 and 24 cents, and, as a result, the Brazilian merchant who had paid for his goods with the local money nearly at par, was obliged to sell them when it was at a discount of 50 per cent; and there was no corresponding increase in the milreis price for native products.

In January, 1891, the milreis was worth 44 cents in American money, so that when merchandise was contracted for to be paid in gold or its equivalent, as it always must be, it only required 2¼ milreis to buy a gold dollar. When the time of payment came, six months later, a gold dollar was worth more than 4 milreis, and sometimes 5. Added to this was the uncertainty of future values, so that trade was paralyzed and the importation of foreign merchandize was limited to actual necessities, and the receipts of the Government from duties on imported goods dropped 42 per cent from the total of the previous year.

DISTURBANCE OF TRADE BY THE REVOLUTION.

And conditions have been growing worse instead of better as those who have the newspaper dispatches are aware.

The harbor of Rio de Janeiro, the principal port of the republic, has been practically in a state of blockade for nearly a year, and but for the gallant conduct of Admiral Benham the vessels laden with American merchandise would not have been permitted to unload. As the sympathy of Great Britain has been with the insurgents, her commerce has been almost entirely interrupted, and it was only in February last that Lord Rosebery, the British premier, received the following appeal for protection from the British shipmasters in the port of Rio:

Eighty British shipmasters, with 2,000 British subjects on board, representing £3,000,000 of money in their cargoes, demand, as loyal subjects, immediate protection of life and property in this harbor. Last Monday a British subject was shot dead, being recognized while landing. Appealed to Capt. Lang, the commander of the British fleet at Rio, who would not see us, and sent us to the British minister; minister refused to see us, and referred us back to Capt. Lang.

The same conditions have existed at Santos and Rio Grande do Sul, the two ports next in importance to Rio, which have caused an almost entire stoppage of trade. The following extract from a private letter will show the situation at the first-named place:

The harbor at Santos is filled with vessels, numbering, as I learn from reliable parties, all of two hundred, each awaiting its turn for discharging, which will consume from twelve to eighteen months. The custom-house is literally jammed with goods of all kinds, with lighters lying near filled with produce, many of them for weeks used for storage purpose, S, to the detriment and detention of other discharging vessels. The beach is covered with machinery in a very confused condition, waiting for shipment by rail into the interior.

NOT A FAVORABLE TIME TO TEST THE VALUE OF RECIPROCITY.

The financial condition in Brazil during the last year, Mr. President, has been worse than it can be remembered ever to have been in the past, and it is scarcely necessary to suggest that such conditions have not furnished a fair test of the value of reciprocity arrangements with that country. Yet there has been a notable increase in the exports from the United States.

In 1889 they amounted to $9,351,081; in 1890, the first year of the treaty, they reached $14,120,246; in 1892 they were a little more, and in 1893, the year of the greatest depression and blockaded habors, they were valued at $12,388,124.

Comparing these figures with the exports from Great Britain to Brazil, we find considerable cause for gratification. In 1889 they were valued at $30,161,500; in 1890, at $37,293,140; in 1891, at $41,550,195. In 1892, the first year after the treaty went into effect, they had fallen to $36,562,631.

The French suffered even more. There was very large gain in the trade between France and Brazil about the time of the overthrow of the empire, which was due to the establishment of a new line of steamers between Havre and the Brazilian ports, but since the reciprocity treaty with the United States was consummated all that was gained has been lost and the goods that were bought in France are now purchased in the United States. In 1889 the exports from France to Brazil were 70,132,528 francs; in 1890 they increased to 81,010,705 francs; in 1891 they jumped to 102,934,876 francs; but in 1892 when the effect of the treaty was felt they fell 33,000,000 and were only 69,520,091 francs. The exports from France for 1893 are not yet reported.

It should be said in this connection that the transportation facilities between the United States and Brazil are exclusively in the control of Englishmen, the American line having been discontinued two years ago because of a quarrel between Mr. Huntington and Mr. Rockafeller, the principal owners, and the shipowners discriminate seriously in freight rates against American goods.

TESTIMONY OF A RECENT BRITISH OBSERVER.

Col. Vincent, a member of the Parliament from one of the largest manufacturing districts in England, has recently made a tour of South America in the interest of his constituents, and in response to a request of the Chamber of Commerce of Sheffield, Col. Vincent prepared a memoranda upon British commercial interests in Brazil, in which he said:

The total volume of the British trade with Brazil amounts to over £13,000,000 a year, of which two-thirds consist in purchases in Brazil. This preponderance of import over export on our part is a new feature in the commercial relations between the two countries in the past twelve years, and one unfortunately often duplicated at the present day. In 1880 British exports to Brazil were double the imports thence. In 1890 they still exceed them by 20 per cent. But while the importations from Brazil have quadrupled in the last thirty years British imports have declined. Nor do we find that the whole volume of British trade with the Republic represents so satisfactory an increase as could be desired. While it amounts to about one-fourth of the total external trade of Brazil, British commerce, according to the eminent statistical authority of Mr. Mulhall, has increased 6 per cent between 1880 and 1891, while that of Brazil, with the rest of the world, increased 20 per cent.

In that year, 1891, moreover, the United States of America concluded with Brazil a reciprocity convention well calculated to make the British results for the next decade still more unsatisfactory. The convention, the first of a series of twelve similar treaties already signed at Washington, a number augmentation of which is now in active negotiation, secured the admission into Brazil on and after April 1, 1891, of fifteen standard articles of American production (including the old British staples of agricultural tools and machinery, mining and mechanical tools and machinery, all machinery for industrial and manufacturing purposes, and all railway construction material equipment), "free" of duty, whether national, State, or municipal, and a reduction of 25 per cent in two thousand other classes of goods "on the tariff then in force or which may hereafter" be adopted. The consideration for this enormous advantage to the United States over Great Britain and the rest of the world was the free admission of Brazilian sugars, molasses, coffee, and hides—articles America could not do without. It is obvious that the advantage of this treaty was and is entirely on the side of the United States of America, and this fact Brazil, in her wild desire to translate the American Constitution into Portuguese, could not then see, but now recognizes too late.

The question for us, though, is not what good this or other reciprocity is likely to do for America, or the other contracting parties, but what harm it is likely and indeed certain to do British trade in the long run; slowly it may be, but not the less surely.

Already in 1892 the Brazilian budget law increased by 60 per cent the duties on cotton and wool manufactures, mainly derived from England, and by 50 or 60 per cent the duty upon other articles of import. It is satisfactory to find that Sheffield cutlery has not as yet been seriously affected. But it holds its own only by enforced cheapness, and that too often means an undue cheapening of wages. Axes, hatchets, picks, and other articles in the manufacture of which we excel, are, however, being obtained from the United States. Whatever the results up to the present time, the undermining of British markets is a matter which requires most careful watching, and it is satisfactory that Mr. Harford, Her Majesty's secretary of legation, is giving close attention to the question in Brazil.

It appears that the American sales to Brazil of cotton goods and manufactures generally have doubled, whilst those of hardware have trebled.

EFFORTS OF AUSTRIA TO GAIN CONCESSIONS.

The Austrian legation at Rio has endeavored in vain to obtain some concessions for flour imported from that country, whose trade was almost annihilated, when, under the reciprocity treaty, American flour was admitted at a greatly reduced duty. Uruguay and the Argentine Republic have also been trying for the last three years to obtain from Brazil a similar concession in favor of their flour on the ground that it is one of the necessaries of life, and that the United States does not supply a sufficient quantity to meet the wants of the people.

The amount of duties remitted by Brazil on the articles imported from the United States under this arrangement averages about $1,400,000.

The exports from the United States to Brazil show a large falling off in wheat, which was due to the attempt on the part of the milling companies of that country to boycot the cereals of the United States, and also to the enormous harvests in the Argentine Republic, which were larger than was ever known before, and could be sold at Rio much below the ruling rate at Chicago or Minneapolis, and for these reasons the exports of wheat fell from 580,127 bushels in 1891 to 63,928 bushels in 1893, but there was a decided increase in the shipments of flour from the United States to Brazil in 1892, which were valued at $4,972,539, as against $3,838,919 for the previous year. The exports of flour for 1893 were valued at $3,647,251, which show a slight falling off due to the revolution and the commercial depression. There was a decided increase in the exports of cotton goods and other manufactured articles.

THE GREAT INCREASE IN TRADE WITH CUBA.

The most direct and profitable result that has come from the reciprocity policy of the last Administration is found in the statistics of our trade with Cuba, for there with the exception of a decreased value of silver and the natural increase in the rate of exchange, all conditions have been normal and favorable for a practical and fair test of its advantages to the agricultural and mechanical interests of the United States.

The commercial arrangement with Spain, acting in behalf of her American colonies, Cuba and Puerto Rico, was concluded June 16, proclaimed August 1, and went partly into effect September 1, 1891. Owing to the existing treaties with other nations it became necessary to adopt a provisional or transitory schedule for the time being, did not have full force until after the 1st of July, 1892.

The foreign commerce of Cuba is much larger in proportion in population of the island than that of most of the nations of the earth. The greater part of the exports have been sent to the United States in the form of sugar, molasses, and tobacco, but we have furnished only a small part of the imports, of which Spain and Great Britain have sold a larger share.

From 1876 to 1891 the people of the United States purchased from Cuba raw products to the amount of $923,888,557. During this time we sold Cuba merchandise to the amount of $188,695,845, leaving a balance of trade against us for the sixteen years amounting to $735,192,512.

Our exports to Cuba have varied but slightly during the last sixteen years, the average being $11,793,490, or $431,398 less than total for 1891. The character of the exports is shown by a very long list comprising nearly everything that enters into the reach of man.

But commencing with 1891, when the commercial arrangement went partially into effect, the increase has been gradual and large in almost every line of merchandise. That year they were a little more than twelve million; in 1892 they had jumped to nearly eighteen millions; and in 1893 they had almost doubled, the total being $24,157,698, or more than twice as much as for any year previous to the negotiation of the treaty. The greatest increase was in flour, which jumped from 114,447 barrels in 1891, to 366,175 in 1892, and 616,406 in 1893. There was also a large increase in other lines of merchandise.

The following table of exports from the United States to Cuba during the fiscal year 1891 and 1893 will show the value of the trade with that country to the farmers and mechanics of the United States:

There was a corresponding decrease in the exports from the European countries to Cuba. The exports from Great Britain fell from $14,546,515 in 1890 to $12,420,395 in 1891, and to $8,390,855 in 1892. The exports from France dropped from 11,671,054 francs in 1890 to 6,626,231 in 1891, and to 4,792,398 francs in 1892. The returns for 1893 have not been received.

THE EFFECT ON THE FLOUR TRADE.

The negotiation of this treaty reduced the price of flour in Cuba nearly one-half. The duty previously was $5.31 a barrel, which, counting the shipping price at New York at $4.80, made it worth on delivery at Havana $11.46. Now you can buy flour at Havana at $6 a barrel, a price that brings it within the reach of the common people, who before the treaty was negotiated could not use it at all.

With regard to the result of canceling this treaty I desire to call attention to a letter which appeared in a recent number of the Washington Post, signed by the Hon. MICHAEL D. HARTER, a Representative in Congress from Ohio, which contains some important information and suggestions for the consideration of the Senate:

THE RESULT OF REVOKING THE TREATY.

Editor Post:

The fear that Spain will increase the duties upon agricultural products and upon manufactured goods going from the United States to Cuba, in case we place a tax upon sugar, is well grounded. A friend just from Havana tells me the merchants there look upon such action as certain. Of course sugar must go upon our tax list for revenue purposes, and the question arises as to how we can get this necessary revenue and yet retain our very valuable Cuban trade. I think it is easily answered.

Put into our tariff laws a provision that will double our tariff taxes upon all goods of every kind produced in any nation or in the colonies or possessions or any nation which may hereafter increase the duties upon articles produced or manufactured in the United States. The equity of such a provision is very plain as our placing of a duty upon sugar is for revenue purposes solely, and in no sense is intended to exclude the productions of any nation. Its effectiveness need not be argued, as it will prove an absolute preventive for the dreaded legislation referred to. The people of Cuba would welcome such a provision as I suggest fully as much as our own farmers and manufacturers.

MICHAEL D. HARTER.

WASHINGTON, March 16.

In connection and apropos to this letter of Mr. Harter's, I desire to say that it was my good fortune to spend about a week of the holiday recess of Congress in Cuba, and a large portion of that time in Havana, and can fully confirm what Mr. Harter states as to the sentiments and expressions of the merchants of Havana as to the restoration of duties upon our agricultural products and manufactured goods by the Spanish Government in case of the abrogation and termination on the part of our Government of present treaty relations. Of this there can be no doubt. There can be no reason why Spain will not at once seek to restore the condition of things that existed before the making of this treaty, allowing her to furnish to Cuba very largely both her agricultural products and manufactured goods, of which she was deprived by the terms of this arrangement.

During my visit in Havana I took occasion to look into and investigate, as far as time and opportunity would permit, this question of reciprocal trade between Cuba and the United States as developed under the operations of these treaty relations between the two countries, as well as to the general condition of things in that misgoverned island.

In conversation with American merchants and others doing business in Cuba, I learned that the effects of the commercial relations created by this arrangement had been really remarkable, and increasing in importance and magnitude day by day. The Americans doing business there are more than satisfied with the results. The Cubans are satisfied, and everyone is satisfied excepting Spain itself and the representatives of Germany, France, and other continental countries, who see the trade of the island gradually slipping away from them and finding themselves supplanted by the products of the American farmer and the wares of the American workshop.

I saw upon every hand evidences of all this. In the warehouses I noticed flour in large quantities, with familiar brands of Richmond, St. Louis, Minneapolis, and other flour-manufacturing points. I also saw the bacon and ham, and every description of our pork product, from Illinois, Iowa, and others of the great pork-producing regions of the Northwest. I found also that machinery for the sugar mills and other manufacturing establishments were being imported largely from the United States. I saw also on every hand American carriages, the Concord wagon and the Concord coach, and almost every description of carriages manufactured in this country. In fact, the people of Cuba are fast adapting themselves to the use of different articles of American manufacture, and the sentiment is fast developing to increase this kind of importation and trade.

Mr. President, this question of reciprocal trade is not a new one with the people of Cuba. They have looked forward for many years to a commercial disenthrallment from Spain, and to the establishment of such natural commercial relations as can only be had with this country. The revolution occurring in Cuba a few years since was inspired by the thought, wish, and hope that it might result not only in breaking the political ties that bound it to Spain, but to the establishment of the same character of commercial relations that have grown up under the present reciprocity treaty, looking also to the time when Cuba should become a part of this great Republic and enjoy what it has never had—a permanent and satisfactory form of government.

Cuba, about the fairest and richest spot on this globe, lying as it were at our very door, with natural resources almost without parallel, with a climate nowhere surpassed, has been lying prostrate for centuries at the feet of Spain, groaning under the burdens of taxation and the effects of bad government, that we in this country have never hardly been able to realize.

An island whose people should have been the richest and most prosperous in the world has been reduced almost to beggary by such taxation and bad government. So they have naturally looked forward to some change which would bring relief to them.

As we look back and consider the commercial situation as we now find it, and which has existed for so long a period prior to 1891, it seems to me almost incredible that steps were not sooner taken to relieve this country from the disadvantages of its commercial relations and trade.

While in Havana my attention was called to a letter written to the Brooklyn Eagle, June 5, 1885, by a very prominent and distinguished American gentleman, who had been doing business in Cuba for thirty or more years and a close observer of events, which made a deep impression upon me as not only evidencing the sentiments of Americans doing business in Cuba, but of the native-born Cubans themselves, and more especially the statements of facts made as to the conditions of trade which had existed there for so long a time. The correspondent of the Eagle quoted largely from an article published in the New York Sun, in 1876, which brought out clearly many startling facts which should offer food for reflection to our statesmen who are now seeking to reinstate the same conditions that existed in 1876, 1885, and in fact up to 1891.

Among other things, this article in the Sun called attention to the fact that the United States, in 1875, received over 85 per cent of the total productions of the island of Cuba; 2 per cent only of Cuban exports were sent to Spain, and 13 per cent to other countries. This article of the Sun is so suggestive and replete with information that I feel that I can not do better than to insert a portion of it in this connection:

In the six years from 1869 to 1874, inclusive, the United States imported Cuban goods to the amount of $398,056,631. In the same space we exported to Cuba goods to the amount of only $82,219,621, leaving a balance of trade for the six years against us and to the benefit not of Cuba, but of Spain, of $315,839,040. Had Cuba no wants which our agricultural, manufacturing, and industrial interests could supply, there might be less motive for complaint. But we have a merchant marine which, by Spain's law in Cuba, is almost debarred from entering the ports of the island. Cuba requires annually hundreds of cargoes of beef for her field hands; but Texas and our Northwestern States are prevented by the tariff from supplying it. Millions of pounds of rice are annually consumed in Cuba; but our rice grown in Louisiana, Georgia, and the Carolinas is excluded, and the demand has to be supplied from India via Liverpool to give employment to Spanish shipping, under the protection of the differential tariff above mentioned.

An enormous amount of dry goods is annually consumed in the island, but the high duty on importation of these articles in foreign bottoms and our own navigation law, which retaliates on Spanish vessels, divert a trade, of which we should have a large share, to the manufactures of Catalonia Great Britain, France, and Germany, to the absolute exclusion of our New England manufactures. And yet for the wherewith to pay for this beef, for this rice, for these dry goods, which we are prohibited from supplying, we furnish 85 per cent of the money.

A barrel of flour can be landed in Havana as cheaply as in New York, but here, again, the onerous Spanish tariff steps in, and always to our detriment, for while the Gallican and Catalonian miller is taxed in Cuba on his produce shipped in a Spanish vessel only $2.25 per barrel, our Western agriculturists are excluded by a duty of $5.49 per barrel. These duties, of course, curtail the consumption enormously. In 1874 Cuba consumed only 391,979 barrels of flour, of which less than 60,000 were American. These figures give to the population a per captia consumption of about 56 pounds. Were the absurd fetters which Spain imposes on Cuba and our own trade with her removed, she would furnish us a market for about 300,000 barrels of flour every year. However, as matters stand to-day, the balance of our trade with Cuba shows a loss to us of about $62,000,000 every year.

In 1874 our imports were	$84,327,842
And our exports to Cuba only	21,591,509
And this balance of	62,746,333

We pay for in European goods instead of by a direct exchange of our products with those tropical countries that furnish the United States with sugar, molasses, and coffee. For these latter countries buy their imports from Europe with the proceeds of their exports to the United States. Therefore if this trade could be done by the United States upon terms of direct exchange in addition to this benefit, our Northern cities, principally New York, must become the commercial center from whence all letters of credit connected with this business must issue, and where all bills of exchange based upon this trade must be cleared, instead of at London, as now occurs.

Now, whatever may be said about tobacco and cigars, which in the foregoing table figure only for some $3,000,000, sugar and molasses, which figure in it for over $70,000,000, are indispensable requisites of life. And, as we have within the Union no tropical land adapted for sugar cultivation, Louisiana and Florida being north of the tropic, we are forced to supply our wants from abroad. But, that while we foster slavery and monarchical institutions in a neighboring island, we should be obliged to lose sixty-odd million gold dollars or gold bonds every year, without a chance to pay off our indebtedness with cotton, breadstuffs, dry goods, etc., or any of our leading staples, is not only ruinous, but absurd. The evil, however, can be remedied by adopting either of the following methods:

First. By annexing tropical territory fit for sugar cultivation.

Second. By reciprocity treaties with nations from which we draw our wants of tropical produce of such a nature as to insure us a market for our cereals, cotton, lumber, iron, coal, and manufactures proportionate to the extent of our imports from such countries.

The first of these, that of annexation of tropical countries, is sure to meet with so much opposition, is so remotely possible, as especially in the case of Cuba, not to be worth discussing. The second, that of obliging nations of whom we buy largely to become customers of ours, is perfectly feasible. Let us adopt our enemy's tactics. Let Congress enact a differential tariff based on Spain's Cuban tariff under which shall be collected 1 cent per pound extra import duty on all sugars and molasses imported from Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and all other Spanish possessions.

This measure would produce about $14,000,000 in gold additional revenue without materially increasing the retail price of the article. It would foster our sugar interests in Louisiana and possibly develop what good sugar lands there may be in Southwestern Florida, and every pound of this sugar would be, of course, exchanged for some other article produced by American labor and capital. It would develop the best root-sugar manufacture in the United States as well as in Europe, but all supplies which we might draw from France, Belgium, Russia, or Germany we should be enabled to pay for by correspondingly increased exports of our own productions.

It would ultimately benefit Cuba, because it would kill slavery and would, in the end, benefit Spain herself, because it would oblige her to give up a colony whose possession has long ceased to be profitable to her.

The latest statistics show a large falling off both in imports and exports; consequently the loss in the balance of trade to the United States amounts only to $36,618,617.

In 1884 our imports were	$57,181,49
And our exports to Cuba only	10,562,880
	36,618,617

What the writer in the Sun in 1876 so clearly stated in regard to this situation, has been and is being realized under the operations of the treaty which is now sought to be terminated. He seems to have written almost with the vision of a prophet. He could not, however, have foreseen that there should ever have been an attempt on the part of this Government to deliberately throw away all the benefits arising from a policy which he so strongly and ably advocated.

COMMERCE WITH PUERTO RICO.

The financial condition of Puerto Rico since the reciprocity agreement went into effect on the 1st of September, 1891, has not been favorable to an increase of trade. The sugar crop for the first year was a partial failure, which reduced the purchasing power of the people, and created a general depression throughout the colony, and the low price of silver was felt as much as anywhere else. The Mexican dollar, which is the standard of value in Puerto Rico, dropped from 79 to 56 cents. The importing merchant is required to pay gold prices for his goods in New York, but must sell them at silver prices to his customers in Puerto Rico, which is equivalent to a nominal advance of 20 or 25 per cent in the cost of everything entering into the consumption of the people, without any corresponding increase in the incomes of the rich or the wages of the poor.

Our commerce with Puerto Rico for the last twenty years has remained nearly stationary. Our imports from the colony vary from three to five millions a year, and our exports average annually about two millions; but notwithstanding the depressing conditions, there has been a slight increase in the exports from the United States since the reciprocity agreement went into effect, as will be shown by the following:

EXPORTS TO THE CENTRAL AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

The exports of merchandise from the United States to the five countries of Central America increased from $5,296,478 in 1890 to $6,813,316 in 1891, and $6,122,046 in 1892, and to $5,522,586 in 1893, although the revolutions in Nicaragua and Honduras caused a considerable falling off in our exports to those countries in 1892 and 1893, and the entire trade suffered severely from the low price of silver.

But the exports from Great Britain to those countries showed an even larger decrease, being $6,027,445 in 1891 and only $4,326,615 in 1892, a falling off of $1,700,830.

The exports from Germany and France to Central America at the same time showed also a decided falling off.

RESULT OF THE TREATY WITH SANTO DOMINGO.

The condition in Santo Domingo for the two years since the commercial arrangement was negotiated has been worse than in in any other country in the list. There have been short sugar crops, and the great scarcity of money and a general business depression in consequence, which was further increased by a general commercial crisis, which extended all over the island, resulting from imprudent speculation, which injured the credit and consequently the ability of some of the most prominent houses of Santo Domingo which had previously been the largest purchasers in our markets. But the falling off in the exports to that country from the United States was not nearly so great as from the countries in Europe, which demonstrates that the reciprocity treaty, notwithstanding the apparent decrease in trade, was beneficial and made the loss in our trade less in proportion to that suffered by other countries that did not have this advantage.

The exports of domestic merchandise in 1891, the year when the treaty went into effect, were valued at $1,986,826. In 1892, the first year they were in force, they were $984,188, while in 1893 they showed a small increase of $1,108,733.

At the same time there was a decrease in the imports from Great Britain from $2,641,775 in 1890 to $1,239,855 in 1892. The returns for 1893 have not been received.

There was a decrease in the imports from France from 13,474,000 francs in 1891 to 8,791,000 francs in 1892, and the exports of Germany fell from 2,368,000 marks in 1891 to 1,438,000 marks in 1892, so that the United States fared very well in comparison with other countries, which is doubtless due to the favorable effect of the reciprocity agreement. What little increase there has been in our trade with Santo Domingo was in manufactured goods, chiefly wearing apparel, but there was some also in machinery, manufactures of iron and steel, paper and stationery, and in pork and other meat products.

EXPORTS TO THE BRITISH COLONIES.

The British Colonies in the West Indies have suffered severely from poor sugar crops and the low price of silver, and the exports from the United States show a small decrease, from $9,779,138 in 1891, to $8,044,846 in 1893, but Great Britain suffered more in her trade with her own colonies than did the United States, for her exports fell from $15,510,230 in 1891, to $11,521,745 in 1892. The exports from Germany to the British West Indies dropped from 1,653,000 marks to 1,099,900 marks during the same period. The falling off in the exports to the British West Indies was mostly in manufactured articles and machinery, there being an encouraging increase in nearly all agricultural products.

THE TREATY WITH BRITISH GUIANA.

There seems to have been a slight increase in our exports to British Guiana, the total value in 1891 being $1,858,742, which increased in the year 1892 to $1,933,299, and in 1893 to $2,000,675. The principal increase was in agricultural products and lumber.

At the same time the exports from Great Britain to her own colony of British Guiana dropped from $4,481,965 in 1891 to $3,761,375 in 1892, a decrease of $720,590.

THE TREATY WITH THE GERMAN EMPIRE.

In many respects the most important of the several commercial arrangements negotiated by the last Administration under the authority of the reciprocity section of the McKinley act was that with the German Empire. By this the embargo that had been placed upon American pork products in 1880 was removed, a number of agricultural products were admitted free, and many more at a greatly reduced rate of duty.

Bran, flax, hides, wool, and many other articles are now free. The duty on wheat and rye was reduced from 5 marks to 3.50 marks per 100 kilos; oats from 4 to 2.80 marks; corn from 2 to 1.60 marks; hops from 20 to 14 marks; butter and oleomargarine from 20 to 17 marks; pork from 20 to 17 marks, and all other kinds of meat from 20 to 15 marks; all forms of flour and other mill products from 10.50 to 7.30 marks; and so on through the list.

In exchange for this the United States agreed to admit the beet-root sugar of Germany into this country free of duty.

The result has been a large increase in the exports to Germany of the articles affected by the treaty, as the following table will show:

It should be remarked that the year 1892 was remarkable for the failure of corn and wheat crops in Europe, so that the increased exportation of those articles from the United States to Germany was unnatural.

THE RESULT OF ABROGATING THE TREATIES.

It is evident that the framers of this bill in their great haste to repeal Republican legislation have not stopped to consider all the results of their impetuosity. The commercial arrangements which were entered into by the United States under the authority of section 3 of what is familiarly known as the McKinley law, are solemn compacts between this and friendly nations which can not be carelessly kicked aside like a memorial from a legislature or an appeal from some domestic industry whose prosperity is threatened. They have the sanctity of formal treaties, and if they are to be terminated it should be done without national dishonor.

There must be good reasons to show why this Government desires to withdraw from such compacts, and asks to be released from its obligations. I take the liberty to suggest that the honor and the dignity of this country is too precious to be forfeited, and that if it be determined to withdraw from these arrangements, that the act be done according to custom of civilized nations, and that the bill be so amended as to authorize the President to give some good reason for the desire of the United States to terminate them. Such a method would preserve the honor of the nation, even if the act would be a serious blow to the commerce they have done so much to encourage and promote.

I can recall but one instance where a treaty between the United States and a foreign government was terminated or interfered with by legislation, and that was the passage of the exclusion law in violation of our treaty stipulations with China.

Such an offense as is proposed by this measure, as it came to the Senate, if committed by an individual or a corporation, would be followed by a suit for damages in court, but when committed by one nation against another the usual recourse is a declaration of war or commercial retaliation. It is impossible to predict what may occur should these arrangements be abrogated, but the result will certainly not enhance the credit of the United States among nations, nor promote our commercial welfare.

The commercial arrangements with Brazil and other republics of Central and South America were made by them as an expression of their friendly sympathy and desire for closer commercial relations, against a powerful influence exerted by the nations of Europe which had hitherto monopolized their trade, and in certain cases in the face of formal protests against the discrimination extended in favor of the imports of the United States. The arrangements with the British and Spanish colonies were initiated without the encouragement or approval of the home governments, who finally gave their indorsement with the greatest reluctance. Each agreement bears the stamp of favor which would not have been extended to any nation but the United States, and now we propose to reward this friendly disposition with an insolent indifference to their welfare as well as our own.

THE RESULT OF THE GERMAN TREATY.

The arrangement with Germany was the culmination of negotiations that extended over a long period of years by which we endeavored to secure the removal of an embargo that had been imposed upon one of our principal products; one for which the farmers of the Northwest feel the need of a foreign market as much as for any other commodity they produce. For more than ten years prior to the passage of the tariff act of 1890 American pork had been the object of the most unjust discrimination in Europe, and on account of the prohibitive or severely restrictive laws it had been practically excluded from most of the countries of the Continent. Notwithstanding the earnest and repeated efforts of our diplomatic representatives to secure a repeal or modification of these unjust laws, at the date of the passage of the tariff act of 1890 they remained in full force, to the great detriment of the export trade in this important agricultural product.

The adoption of the reciprocity provision conferred upon the President such ample powers of discrimination in commerce that he was soon enabled through negotiation to not only secure a removal of the prohibition against the importation of pork, but to obtain important concessions for American agricultural and other products in some of the leading nations of Europe. The first of these was negotiated with the German Empire. This was followed by a reciprocity arrangement with Austria-Hungary by which American products are admitted to the same favors as those granted by the commercial treaties made with Germany, Italy, and other countries.

And we are now proposing to revoke and abrogate that arrangement without even saying "by your leave." But no member of the committee seems to have thought it of any importance to ask what Germany, or Austria, or Brazil, or Spain will think or do.

By this act we restore the duty upon sugar. That includes the beet sugar of Germany, which under the compact of February 1, 1892, we agreed to admit free to our ports. In 1892 we took 173,000,000 pounds of sugar from Germany, and in 1893 we took 325,000,000 pounds. Will Germany see that trade cut off without some form of retaliation? Will the embargo upon American pork be restord, and if so, how will this Congress excuse itself to the farmers of the Northwest for depriving them them of a profitable market?

WHAT WILL GERMANY DO IN RETALIATION?

The Chicago Record of recent date contained an interview between the Washington correspondent of that paper and the Hon. John A. Kasson, formerly minister to Germany and Austria, who is recognized not only as one of the most learned students of international law, but also as one of the most experienced and skillful diplomatists in this country. Mr. Kasson was asked to explain in terms his views of the effect of the Wilson tariff bill as reported to the House upon the reciprocity arrangements made by the last Administration. He said:

"Section 56 of the Wilson bill repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act. It also declares that the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof 'shall not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued' before the said repeal or modification, but all rights and liabilities shall continue as if the act had not been repealed. On the other hand, the Wilson report on the tariff bill declares the purpose of the bill to be 'to repeal in toto section 3 of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, called its reciprocity provision.'

"From these declarations it would appear that, so far as the Wilson act imposes duties upon articles made free under the McKinley act and in our commercial arrangements under section 3 of that act, it does operate to repeal not only the reciprocity clause of the McKinley act, but also to annul the arrangements made with foreign countries under it. Against this view, however, is the saving clause I have quoted from section 56, which is the repealing section of the Wilson bill.

"Taking the report and the provisions of section 56 together, they indicate some confusion in the minds of the framers of the bill, both as to what they can do and what they have done with the international arrangements established under the reciprocity clause of the McKinley act. Inasmuch as the commercial arrangements of reciprocity were 'acts done and rights accrued' prior to this repeal, it might be construed in court that it is the intention of the Wilson bill to exempt from repeal these reciprocal arrangements with foreign countries. It leaves an impression on my mind that the committee hardly knew what they embraced in the repeal and exemptions provided for in section 56."

"Is that the usual way of terminating a treaty or an arrangement with a foreign country?"

"No; very far from it. I know of no case in our history in which Congress has boldly trampled upon any international treaty of the United States and nullified it, except its discreditable conduct toward China. In every other instance throughout history, so far as I remember, treaties have been terminated in the manner provided for by their own provisions or through other regular diplomatic actions."

THE RIGHT TO TERMINATE TREATIES.

"Has Congress, under the Constitution, the right to terminate treaties in this way?"

"That represents a question which was finally solved by the Supreme Court of the United States—the question of reconciling the legislative power of Congress with the treaty-making power of the Executive and Senate. It was finally settled by the Supreme Court that treaties made in pursuance of the powers granted by the Constitution were the supreme law of the land, like constitutional acts of Congress. At the same time it was decided that Congress had the constitutional power, within the limits of constitutional action, to make provisions which might nullify the treaty. That is to say, in substance, that the latest exercise of power controls the former. If, however, a treaty is violated, the action of Congress in no manner exempts the Government from its responsibilities to a foreign nation. The foreign government has then its claim for damages and its right of war to satisfy its demands for violation of the treaty."

"What would be the impression conveyed to foreign governments if the United States should violate its treaties by such methods?"

"From the earliest times the violation of an international compact by one party to it has been considered an act of dishonor, and orators describe such insulting action by borrowing from the old Roman the term 'Punic faith.'"

"Would Germany and Austria be more likely to take offense at such action than China?"

"Undoubtedly. That is to say, they would be likely to take more prompt action."

"In retaliation?"

"I should say yes, if the injury to their interests seemed to require it, but I am still not clear that the intention of the bill is to nullify these existing arrangements other than by the methods provided in the arrangements themselves."

GERMANY AND AUSTRIA WOULD ACT PROMPTLY.

"You are familiar with the commercial arrangements with Germany under which the removal of the embargo upon American pork, the decree of the German Government of March 6, 1883, was revoked as a consideration for our removal of the duty upon German sugar. What effect would the revocation of that commercial arrangement have upon our trade with Germany, speaking from your experience and knowledge of that country?"

"I can only say that both in Germany and Austria-Hungary there is widespead jealousy among the people of American agricultural products which compete with their own. As far back as fifteen years ago I was called upon at the legation in Vienna by a representative of the local press, who said to me that there was great alarm in a certain rural district of Austria over the report that the United States Government was about to establish an agency near them for the introduction of American pork and other food products. He added that there was great excitement on the subject, and desired me to inform him if there was any truth in the report. This same feeling of apprehension is so general in the two countries named that either government would be supported by popular sentiment in any action it would take for the embarrassment of our export trade in those articles, and that leads me to think that they would seize any provocation which might justify them in restoring their hostile enactments. The revocation of the decree prohibiting the importation of American pork into Germany was the consummation of many years' difficult diplomatic negotiations and could not have been secured without offering to Germany the important concessions in favor of beet sugar, which the reciprocity clause of the McKinley act enabled our Government to make."

THE TRADE OF GERMANY WITH OTHER AGRICULTURAL NATIONS.

A reciprocity treaty has recently been concluded between Germany and Roumania under which the agricultural products of the latter country are to be admitted into the empire at the rate of duty now imposed upon such products from the United States, and a similar treaty with Russia was recently ratified by the Reichstag.

Germany is not an agricultural country, but a great majority of the people are engaged in mechanical industries and must purchase the larger part of their food products abroad. The population is rapidly increasing, and with the most abundant harvests the supply of bread and meat will always be insufficient for the wants of the people.

Since the negotiation of the reciprocity arrangement with the United States efforts have been made, under the direction of the Agricultural Department, to introduce our cereal products into more extensive use among the people with encouraging success; but the United States will always be handicapped in her trade by the fact that Germany is surrounded by the largest grain-producing countries in Europe, which can get their products to her market without the expense of long ocean voyages and the several handlings at the ports of departure and arrival. The commercial relations between her people and her neighbors are of long standing, and their business methods are better understood than ours. This natural disadvantage can only be overcome by the most skillful diplomatic negotiations on the part of our Government and by the heartiest enterprise and energy of American exporters. But if the reciprocity arrangement now existing with Germany is revoked that market will be entirely destroyed.

The value of that market is shown by the fact that the exports of maize to Germany in the year 1891 were valued at $2,042,404; in 1892, the first year after the treaty took effect, the exports were $7,481,125, while for 1893 they were $2,794,689.

At the same time the exports of maize from Belgium into Germany fell from $171,493 in 1891 to $59,222 in 1892, and from Russia from $995,397 in 1891 to $269,384 in 1892, while from Roumania the exports were $608,102 in 1891 and $620,915 in 1892.

In 1891 the United States furnished 28½ per cent of all the maize imported into Germany; in 1892 it furnished 62½ per cent.

In 1891 we furnished Germany $7,048,606 worth of lard; in 1892, $7,722,727, and in 1893, $6,429,211 worth.

THE IMPORTS OF RYE INTO GERMANY.

The imports of rye into Germany show an increase. In 1891 the United States furnished only 7 per cent; in 1892 it furnished 25 per cent. There was a general falling off in imports from all the other nations, and a very large increase from the United States. The following table shows a comparison of exports of rye for the years 1891 and 1892:

RECIPROCITY THE POPULAR POLICY IN EUROPE.

The commercial policy of the leading nations of Europe has recently adopted reciprocity treaties as the most satisfactory and equitable method of regulating international trade, and promoting an interchange of peculiar products, but they were not general, in fact were almost unknown until the late President Arthur inaugurated the policy in the United States by the negotiation of such arrangements with Mexico, Santo Domingo, and with Spain for her colonies of Cuba and Puerto Rico.

Germany has made or is making treaties with all the countries with which she has commercial relations, for the purpose of extending her export trade in machinery and manufactured merchandise, and cheapening the cost of food to her people by a reduction of duties. She has reciprocity arrangements with Australia, Italy, Roumania, and other countries, besides the United States, and on the 11th of March, after a most exciting debate in the Reichstag a treaty with Russia, which will admit the wheat and flour of the latter Empire at the same rate of duty as that imposed upon similar articles from the United States. To abrogate our treaty with Germany, and restore her old duties upon wheat, corn, rye, barley from this country would stop instantly and for ever all exports of breadstuff and provisions from the United States, as it would forbid competition with the grain of Russia, Austria, Hungary, and Roumania.

In view of the treaty recently consummated between Russia and Germany, under the provisions of which the breadstuffs of Russia are to be imported into Germany on the same terms as are conceded to the United States under our present treaty relations, the situation in Germany will become more serious and embarrassing.

My attention has been called to the report of our consul-general, Mr. Frank H. Mason, at Frankfort, one of the most intelligent, thoughtful, and in every way valuable members in our whole consular service, in which he takes up this entire question of the Russian treaty and its effect upon importations from the United States, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate at this time, and which I will ask to have read.

AMERICAN BREADSTUFFS AND THE RUSSO-GERMAN COMMERCIAL TREATY.

The pending treaty of commerce between Germany and Russia was signed by the commissioners representing both governments and published on the 10th of February. Although it has yet to be debated and ratified by the German Parliament, the attitude of the Imperial Government and the popular expression of commercial sentiment are so strongly in its favor that its adoption in substantially its published form would seem so probable that it may be interesting to inquire what effect the new conditions are likely to have upon the future export of American products, and notably breadstuffs, to Germany.

The present situation has been repeatedly described in previous reports of this series, but for convenience of deduction the rates of duty on imported breadstuffs may be concisely stated.

Previous to February 1, 1892, German imports of American and Russian wheat and rye were subject to the same general rates of duty—$1.19 per 100 kilograms, or $11.90 per metric ton of 2,240 pounds. The duty on flour of wheat or rye from both countries was $2.50 per 100 kilograms, or $25 per ton.

But on the date just named the United States were placed by treaty with Germany in the class of most-favored nations, so that thenceforward the duties on American wheat and rye were reduced to $8.33 and on flour to $17.30 per ton. Meanwhile similar imports from Russia continued to pay the general or standard duties as above stated until the 1st of August, 1893, when, in consequence of disagreements between the two governments, the rates of duty on all imports from Russia into Germany were summarily raised 50 per cent and became, respectively, $17.85 per ton on wheat and rye and $37.50 per ton on flour. Since August last there have been in force, therefore, three rates of duty on wheat and flour imports to this country, viz, the minimum rate accorded to most-favored nations, the standard rate applicable to breadstuffs from countries which enjoy no special treaty privileges, and finally the retaliatory maximum rate applicable to imports of Russian origin.

The new commercial treaty between Germany and Russia sweeps away all these discriminations, secures to imports from Russia the minimum tariff conceded to most-favored nations, and thus puts that country upon an equal footing with the United States in all that relates to their freedom of access to the markets of Germany. The effects of these changed conditions when applied to the whole list of imports are too remote and wide reaching to be yet estimated; but in respect to breadstuffs, the most important item of competition, there are certain results which may be already foreseen.

The basis for such a study is the record of German imports of wheat and rye during the past twenty-one years, a period which extends several years beyond the first enactment of grain duties in 1879 and includes the several changes and amendments to which those duties have been subject. The table following shows the total imports, in metric tons, of wheat and rye during each year since 1872, the average price in dollars per ton of each kind of grain in the Berlin market, and the various changes which have been made in the grain duties during the entire period.

A glance at these statistics will reveal several highly interesting facts: First, that there is in Germany, even during the years of most abundant harvests, a large deficit in breadstuffs which has to be filled by importation; second, that this deficit, although modified by various fluctuating influences, is, on the whole, increasing in close proportion to the growth of population; third, that the highest market values of wheat and rye at Berlin were in 1873, when both grains were imported free of duty, and the lowest values have been touched during the past year, when the highest duties were in force, so that the duties enacted at the demand of the agricultural class for the purpose of keeping up local values have failed to accomplish that result, for the obvious reason that the values of breadstuffs are governed in Germany, as elsewhere, by the world's grain market, and not by local conditions; fourth, that the highest total import—2,835,000 tons—was reached in 1879, the first year of the duty on wheat and rye, while the lowest was in 1886, when prices of both grains were considerably lower than in 1879; and finally, that, contrary to the rule of twenty years ago, the imports of wheat now far exceed in volume those of rye.

The principal opposition which the pending treaty with Russia has encountered in Germany has come from the agricultural classes, who assert that its adoption will be the final blow to the grain-growing interest in this country, and that, with the gates open to all principal grain-exporting countries at uniform and moderate rates of duty, the German farmers, with their high-priced land that must be constantly fertilized to remain productive, will no longer be able to maintain the competition.

However this may be, the fact seems obvious that under any conditions that are likely to prevail Germany will continue to need a large annual supply of imported cereals, and that these will continue to be furnished by the countries which have the most ready communications with Bremen, Hamburg, and Rotterdam, and which are able to produce and deliver wheat and rye most cheaply in the German markets. The interesting question is, where will the United States stand in this competition with Russia as an equally favored rival and with India, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic steadily increasing their area of wheat culture and their surplus production? The imports of the year just ended, when the prices of wheat and rye have touched the lowest figures known during the present generation, have a pertinent interest in this connection.

During the past year, therefore, with Russia crippled during five months by an all but prohibitory tariff, the United States furnished nearly one-half of all the wheat, about one-twelfth of the rye, and about one-sixth of the flour imported to Germany from all countries.

The practical question is, how serious will be the competition of Russia in these and other staple products should the pending treaty restore her to commercial advantages equal to those of the United States? Russia will, from the day that the new treaty takes effect, resume her old position as the source of supply of nine-tenths of the foreign rye used by Germany. The same will be true, in a greater or less degree, of raw flax, certain kinds of lumber and timber, lubricating oils, barley, flaxseed, and a number of animal and mineral products, in all of which the fields, forests, and mines of Russia supplement naturally and irresistibly the manufactures of Germany. Rye is the principal bread material for the Russian as well as the German peasant, and in the production of that cereal Russia need fear no competition.

With regard to wheat, the problem is much more complicated, for the reason, among others, that not only Russia, but India, Australia, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay will have to be taken into account. To raise and deliver a bushel of wheat in the United States costs, according to official estimates, about 50 cents. In India the cost per bushel is stated to be 35 cents, and the danger from that quarter is measured only by the limit to which the area of culture can be extended. In South America this point is not known to have been accurately determined, nor are the statistics of wheat export from Chile, Urugury, and the Argentine Republic generally accepted as trustworthy. But enough is known to warrant the belief that the wheat crop of India and South America is nearly, if not quite, equal to that of the United States, and in the Argentine Republic at least the area of cultivation is susceptible of indefinite extension.

In 1891, when wheat imports from Russia and the United States were subject to the same standard duty of $11.90 per ton, the total importation of Russian wheat into Germany amounted to 515,587 tons, against 144,678 tons from the United States.

In 1892 the duty on American wheat was reduced from February 1 to $8.33 per ton, and by reason of this advantage and less favorable crops in Russia, wheat imports from the United States to Germany rose to 630,213 tons, while those from Russia declined to 237,991 tons.

In 1893, as we have seen, the disadvantage of Russia was still further increased by the tariff war, which from the 1st of August raised the German import duty on Russian wheat to $17.85 per ton, or more than double the duty rate on wheat from the United States, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, and other most favored nations. Under these conditions our country contributed 314,928 tons of wheat, and 4,196 tons of flour to Germany, while Russia furnished only 21,636 tons of wheat, and 437 tons of flour.

During these years American wheat has been introduced throughout a large portion of the German Empire, where its qualities are now well understood and generally liked. While the restoration of Russia to reciprocal advantages will create a new and strong competiton for the German market, America will still find here a fair field and equal favor. The result of the competition will be another example of "the survival of the fittest."

FRANK H. MASON,
Consul-General.

FRANKFORT, February 16, 1894.

The same result will follow the abrogation of the treaty with Spain in the Cuban trade, and if the treaty with Brazil is terminated the wheat and flour of Uruguay and the Argentine Republic will drive ours out of the market. But, as I have said, reciprocity is now considered the most practical and popular policy in Europe, and the statesmen of that continent are wondering at the shortsightedness of the present Administration of the United States in trying to destroy what its predecessors had been so successful in building up.

Great Britain has recently made an important treaty with Spain, under which Spanish wines and Cuban tobacco are to be admitted at reduced rates of duty into the ports of the United Kingdom and the colonies, in exchange for which Spain reduced her tariff upon a large variety of manufactured merchandise from England. They include every form of household articles of iron and steel, cotton and linen fabrics, and yarn of all kind; woolen and silk goods, hats, boots and shoes, watches and jewelry, agricultural machinery and implements, mining and mechanical machinery, railway supplies, condensed milk, various forms of preserved food products, rubber goods, etc.

Besides her treaty with Great Britain, Spain has also recently made reciprocity treaties with the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland, and Sweden and Norway, and it is a common rumor among diplomatic circles of Europe that a similar treaty with Germany is now in progress of negotiation.

The treaty with Sweden and Norway is of the greatest importance to us, as it provides for the admission of codfish and lumber into Cuba and Puerto Rico under the same terms as if they came from the United States, and if our treaty with Spain be annulled we should lose this trade entirely.

Russia has also adopted the reciprocity policy, and in addition to the treaty with Germany, which is now pending ratification, has recently made one with France which will seriously affect the sale of our refined petroleum in the latter country, and Russia admits free and at a discriminating rate of duty all sorts of merchandise from France in exchange for this concession.

NO ONE HAS ASKED THE TERMINATION OF THE TREATIES.

But I have not learned, Mr. President, by any of the methods which public opinion is in the habit of expressing itself in this country, that there is any desire on the part of any person, or corporation, or community for the abrogation or termination of these reciprocity arrangements. I challenge any Senator upon this floor or any Representative of the people in the other House of Congress to produce or refer to any petition or memorial, or resolution, or even a private communication asking such legislation as is proposed.

On the contrary, the commercial organizations of the country, the manufacturing interests, and the mercantile houses which are engaged in the export trade are unanimous in their desire that the reciprocity policy be continued and extended to include all the nations for whose products we can exchange our agricultural and manufactured merchandise. If we are to reduce our duties upon imports from other lands, let us insist that the nations from which they come shall make corresponding reductions in favor of the articles they receive from us or let the reduction duties apply only to imports from such countries as are willing to do so.

Let us not have free trade, but fair trade. As we lessen the customs taxes that our people are required to pay let us increase the sales of their products by securing for them advantages in foreign markets. The reciprocity policy is the application of common commercial sense to foreign intercourse, and will prove as profitable to international commerce as it to private transaction between the citizens of the same community.

THOMAS JEFFERSON THE FATHER OF RECIPROCITY.

It may not be known to our friends on the other side of this Chamber, who are hastening with so much anxiety and so much folly to destroy the advantages that have been gained for the agriculturists and manufacturers of this country, that Thomas Jefferson, whom they honor with the paternity of their political organization and principles, was the father of reciprocity also. Mr. A. D. Anderson, in a recent communication to a local journal, has called attention to that interesting fact.

On the 16th of December, 1793, Thomas Jefferson, while Secretary of State, submitted a report to the House of Representatives, beginning as follows:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred by the House of Representatives the report of a committee on the written message of the President of the United States on the 14th of February 1791, with instructions to report to the Congress the nature and extent of the privileges and restrictions of the commercial intercourse of the United States with foreign nations, and the measures which he should think proper to be adopted for the improvement of the commerce and navigation of the same, has had the same under consideration and thereupon makes the following report.

In the report, which was a very elaborate one and published in the American State papers, is the following:

Such being the restrictions on the commerce and navigation of the United States, the question is in what way they may be best removed, modified, or counteracted. As to the commerce two methods occur: First, by friendly arrangements with the several nations with whom these restrictions exist; or, second, by the separate act of our own Legislature for countervailing their effect.

There can be no doubt but that of these two friendly arrangement is the most eligible.

Instead of embarrassing commerce under piles of regulating laws, duties, and prohibitions, could it be relieved from all its shackles in all parts of the world, could every country be employed in producing that which nature has best fitted it to produce, and each be free to exchange with others mutual surpluses for mutual wants, the greatest mass possible would then be produced by these things which contribute to human life and human happiness, the numbers of mankind would be increased, and their condition bettered.

Would even a single nation begin with the United States this system of free commerce, it would be advisable to begin it with that nation, since it is one by one only that it can be extended to all. Where the circumstances of either party render it expedient to levy a revenue, by way of impost or commerce, its freedom might be modified in that particular by mutual and equivalent measures, preserving it entire in all others.

* * * * * * *

But should any nation, contrary to our wishes, suppose it may better find its advantages by continuing its system of prohibition, duties, and regulations, it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce, and navigation by counter-prohibition, duties, and regulations also. Free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations, nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them.

* * * * * * *

The following principles being founded in reciprocity, appear perfectly just, and to offer no cause of complaint to any nation. When a nation imposes high duties on our productions, or prohibits them altogether, it may be proper for us to do the same by theirs: first burdening or excluding those productions which they bring here in competition with our own of the same kind; selecting next such manufactures as we take from them in greatest quantity, and which at the same time we could the soonest furnish to ourselves or obtain from other countries imposing on them duties lighter at first, but heavier and heavier afterwards, as other channels of supply open. Such duties having the effect of indirect encouragement to domestic manufacturers of the same kind, may induce the manufacturer to come himself into these States, where cheaper subsistence, equal laws, and a vent of his wares, free of duty, may insure him the highest profits from his skill and industry.

DEMOCRATIC APPROVAL OF THE RECIPROCITY POLICY.

When this policy was first proposed by the late James G. Blaine it was received with enthusiastic favor by the public press without regard to party prejudices, and the only motive that can be ascribed to those who now propose to repudiate it is to deprive the party which embodied the suggestion in the statutes of the credit to which it was entitled.

The following extracts will show the sentiment of the Democratic newspapers at the time the reciprocity policy was first proposed:

[Boston Herald.]

We certainly hope that Congress will have the good sense to adopt a measure of this kind, for we feel convinced that its effect would be to revolutionize the narrow and prejudiced views which have so long dominated our national trade policy.

The course advocated by Mr. Blaine is not only sound in itself, it is proof of a sagacity in politics on his part which merits recognition.

This policy is so sound and meritorious, it is so far in keeping with all that has been said of late about the necessity of the United States securing control of the trade of this continent, that if it is repudiated the act will be a signal instance of political shortsightedness.

The course which Mr. Blaine proposed is eminently judicious and practicable.

[Boston Post.]

So far as it goes Mr. Blaine's scheme is to be commended, but for what it gives we may be thankful, and for the concession of the great principle which will not be long delayed in its universal application when once it is established among the nations of the American hemisphere.

[Boston Globe.]

No class of men will more profoundly sympathize with Mr. Blaine or rejoice more in his success than the tariff reformer. It is true that they desire to go further than he has yet prepared the way, but no further than he has indicated it. They desire to see reciprocity in healthy and world-wide operation instead of confining its beneficent functions to the American continent.

As long as we fail to give full recognition to the principle of reciprocity in our commercial dealings with the countries of the earth, so long must we expect to be commercially ostracised and outlawed in the family of nations.

[Boston Pilot.]

The heavily burdened people of the United States do not desire further taxes, nor do they yearn for free trade. But if we are going to remove the tariff duties there would seem to be sound sense in Mr. Blaine's suggestion, that in doing so we secure material advantages for ourselves from the countries which will chiefly profit by that measure.

Blaine has a policy, and a good one, and if we mistake not a growing one.

[New York Evening Post.]

The Evening Post indorsed Mr. Blaine's plan, and recommends it to the favorable consideration of Congress, not because reciprocity is ideally the right thing, but because it promotes international trade, and thereby increases wealth, because it removes ignorant prejudices, and because it leads inevitably to the breaking down of trade barriers erected by selfish interests for private greed.

[New York Times.]

If these are really the views of Mr. Blaine they reflect credit upon his good sense, and if the intentions attributed to him are really his they show that his courage has not entirely oozed out during his confinement in the State Department.

The recommendation (to insert a clause in the tariff bill) is a good one, as being in behalf of a removal of some of our restrictions upon trade and in the direction of freer and more profitable intercourse with foreign nations. Any step in that direction would be progress.

[New York Sun.]

The programme which he proposes or hints at is fascinating, and it will lose nothing in the public eye from the recommendation given by his engaging personality. The hope or the dream of the commercial, if not of the political union of this continent, is in the minds of all Americans. The first steps toward making it a reality may soon be taken. Public opinion is ripening for it.

[New York World.]

The sugar schedule as it stands in the tariff bill as amended by the Senate committee is wholly in the interest of the sugar trust. The raw material of the refiner is to be free, but sugar that compete with his product are taxed It would be much better if Congress should adopt Mr. Blaine's suggestion to restore the duty on raw sugars, especially if such a course would enable him to negotiate treaties with the Pan-American Republics that would increase our trade with those countries.

As Mr. Blaine stated, reciprocity "would lead to the opening of new and profitable markets for the products of which we have so large a surplus, and thus invigorate every branch of agricultural and mechanical industry."

[New York Commercial Bulletin.]

No one can deny that the policy which Mr. Blaine outlined would be an exceedingly advantageous one for the country.

The wisdom of Mr. Blaine's plan of reciprocity between this country and the nations of the south is coming to be more and more appreciated by public men here the more it is considered.

[New York Herald.]

Harrison and Blaine, in their reciprocity policy, have come over to good old Democratic ground.

Mr. Blaine has dared to exhibit some common sense on matters which involve the welfare of sixty-five millions of people.

[New York Witness.]

All we have to say is that we are heartily in favor of that kind of policy, for it is the kind that will have the most favorable influence on our industries in general.

[New York Nation.]

We indorse Mr. Blaine's plan, and recommend it to the favorable consideration of Congress, not because reciprocity is ideally the right thing, but because it promotes international trade and thereby increases wealth, removes ignorant prejudices, and leads inevitably to the breaking down of trade barriers erected by selfish interests for private greed.

[New York Standard.]

Secretary Blaine recognized fully the value of reciprocal trade with our neighbors. We ought to control the whole trade of Mexico, Central and South America. There is nothing on earth, from a wooden clothespin to a mogul locomotive and the finest and most powerful dynamo which can not be made well in this country; made better than any goods can be made in Europe. Talk about trade. This avenue would open up cumulative manufacturing activity; open up more opportunities for labor; more opportunities for capital. These Spanish Americans have what we want. We have what they want. A mistaken view of trade and a narrow-minded policy have kept us from being masters of this Spanish-American trade.

Secretary Blaine sees the error, and he would have his countrymen take a new and profitable departure. This advice is sound and should be followed.

[New York Sunday News.]

There is a good deal to commend in Mr. Blaine's policy, and there is a good deal of sound sense in his argument.

[New York Christian Union.]

Believing as we do that the progress of civilization will be promoted by the gradual removal of all restrictions on trade, we welcome Mr. Blaine's advocacy of reciprocity.

[Harper's Weekly.]

Mr. Blaine's South American policy is reciprocity. It would admit the products of the southern republics free if they would admit ours upon the same terms. This would be free trade with South America, practically the same freedom of trade that prevails among the States of the Union. This is a simple and strong argument. Wherever markets can be opened for our redundant productions by a policy of reciprocity, upon the reasoning of Mr. Blaine's letter, that policy would be wise.

[Brooklyn Times.]

There is no doubt that the plans suggested by Mr. Blaine will prove effective.

[Brooklyn Eagle.]

To people of good common sense Mr. Blaine's suggestion appears to be a practical one. He does not believe in throwing away a magnificent opportunity to secure for American producers a splendid market for their wares.

[Brooklyn Citizen.]

Between the free countries on the north and south continents of America there is no danger of such injurious competition. Their staple products are those which can not be largely, if at all, produced in the United States, and for the manufactured goods which we produce so largely they are compelled to rely for their supply upon importations either from Europe or the United States. The same American doctrine of intelligent protection to home industry that impels us to raise barriers against the importation of cheap manufactured goods from Europe urges us to remove every barrier that obstructs trade between North and South America, and establish constant and cheap communication between the ports of the two continents.

[The Philadelphia Record.]

It must be said, however, in behalf of Mr. Blaine's policy of reciprocity, that it points in the direction of commercial freedom; and for this reason, if for no other, it deserves a friendly greeting from every friend of tariff reform.

By freely admitting the wool of South America, Secretary Blaine proposes to open in that region wider markets for the breadstuffs, provisions, and other exports of the United States, trade in which is now seriously obstructed by South American tariffs. Such a policy could not fail to afford some relief to the farmers of this country, and it should not be defeated by the exaggerated fears of a few wool merchants.

Thus far there is no material difference between the policy of the friends of tariff reform and that of Secretary Blaine. What he aims to accomplish in a limited degree through reciprocal tariff modifications, they would effect to a far wider extent by a general revision of the tariff, and especially by a removal of duties on all raw materials of industry from whatever quarter of the globe they might be drawn.

[Philadelphia Times.]

The emphatic utterances of Secretary Blaine regarding the McKinley bill in general and reciprocity in particular are attracting not a little attention, and there are many members of Congress, both Democratic and Republican, who believe that his scheme is not only a wise one, but that it should be adopted. Of course, the Democrats who think that way are more numerous than the Republicans.

[Baltimore Sun.]

The arguments which he advances in favor of reciprocity are good ones.

[Baltimore Herald.]

Mr. Blaine's letter to the President upon the general subject of trade with the Latin-American republics is a remarkable document. Indeed, it is doubtful whether any state paper submitted to Congress within the past decade equals this letter in interest and importance. It amounts to a revelation of existing trade conditions upon this continent, and is, besides, a significant statement concerning the influence of import duties upon commerce.

[Washington Post.]

It is a question that has come to stay; and the sooner it is settled on the plan suggested by Mr. Blaine the better for our people who have produce and goods to sell with no advantageous market for their disposal. It is doubtless a surprise and somewhat unpalatable, perhaps, in certain quarters to have this new issue projected into the tariff legislation of the present session, but it is an issue that can not be pooh-poohed out of sight, and Mr. Blaine is entitled to the thanks of the country for having brought it before Congress in such forcible and commanding shape.

Nothing is untimely or inopportune that is for the improved welfare of the people and the better development of their trade interests and. late though the Secretary of State may have been in calling public attention to the subject, it is still a living question. It may be overslaughed by the present Congress, but the issue is made, and it will not down until something has been done to put the commercial relations of the various countries of the western continent on a liberal reciprocal basis.

"Free sugar in the United States," however, as Mr. Blaine telegraphed to the millers' convention, "should be accompanied by free breadstuffs and provisions in Latin America." This is the key-note to the reciprocal system which he would bring about. Free wool in the United States would mean the removal of heavy duties upon other articles of export, the consumption of which in Latin America is now greatly restricted by the correspondingly increased price, and it is believed that the liberal policy thus indicated on the part of the United States would gradually lead to many concessions on the part of our southern neighbors, whose trade we seek to cultivate.

[Chicago Herald.]

As a believer in free and unfettered commerce, the Herald would welcome reciprocity or free trade with one nation, with ten nations, or with all nations.

That is strongly and concisely put, and it gives the American people something to think over. Heretofore their only idea with regard to a protective policy has been to protect American labor, and to that end they have adopted a general plan of exempting from duty articles not produced in this country. Mr. Blaine now shows them how a protective tariff may be used to encourage as well as protect American industry, by making it reciprocal with nations that may and should be good customers for our products.

Apparently, the immediate object of this letter is to dissuade Congress from putting sugar on the free list; but it also calls attention to the fact that we need a definite Pan-American policy, and that the present is exactly the time to formulate one. It is an opportunity that may not occur again.

But there is no prospect that Congress can find time for any such useful work at this session.

But Mr. Blaine, who has been studying the question of South American trade, evidently finds a condition that can not be cured by Government appropriations for steamship lines to South American ports. The remedy he believed is a Pan-American customs union under which the products of one country are admitted free of duty to another. No one will deny that this is an essential and important step.

[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

The proposition, it will be seen, is, in its broad features, as simple as it is practical and beneficent.

[Kansas City Times.]

Secretary James G. Blaine seems to be a pretty good sort of free trader himself. His reciprocity policy is only another name for just what the Democracy has been and is fighting for.

[New York World.]

Reciprocity with South America would naturally be the beginning of broader and more intimate relations with Europe. It would be the first step in the right direction. Protectionists who favor reciprocity, including Mr. Blaine probably, would not admit this, but the truth is that the movement is in obedience to the pressure upon home producers for a larger market, and the pressure will not be taken off until American producers and merchants are at liberty to sell and buy everywhere.

COMMERCIAL TREATIES THAT MIGHT BE MADE.

These extracts which might be multiplied until they would fill a volume, Mr. President, illustrate the sentiment of the people without reference to political preferences or prejudices, and I am sure an amendment to this bill would be received with almost unanimous popular favor which shall provide that the reduction of duties herein proposed shall apply only to articles imported from countries which make reciprocal concessions in favor of the products of the United States. That would be a double benefit. The consumers in this country would have the benefit of the reduction of duties upon imported goods they use, while the producers would have the advantage of reduced imposts upon their products in foreign lands. That would be fair trade.

RECIPROCITY WITH MEXICO.

It was only two years ago, Mr. President, that a Democratic committee of the House of Representatives made an excellent report pointing out in clear and concise language the great advantages the majority of the present Congress is trying to throw away. I refer, Mr. President, to the report of Mr. Andrew, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with regard to "Our trade relations with Mexico." It shows that every reason suggested by geographical location, similarity of institutions, and community of interests justifies all reasonable effort to promote commerce with our nearest neighbor, and what is true of our sister Republic on the south is even more true of the great colonies on our northern border, where much greater opportunities are being sacrificed without a single consideration that should and does enter the mind of every prudent and judicious man who studies commercial questions with the broad sense of securing the greatest good for the greatest number.

With a population of 12,000,000 of people and a foreign trade of nearly a hundred millions a year, with natural highways of commerce on both sides connecting our Pacific and Gulf ports with hers, with five great railways constructed at a cost of more than a hundred millions of American capital, and a fraternal desire for more intimate relations, Mexico affords one of the most profitable as well as one of the most natural markets for the agricultural and mechanical products of the United States, and offers in return the staples of the tropics which are necessary to and are demanded by the welfare of our own people. In the report to which I have alluded, Mr. Andrew says:

If the United States does not possess a practical monopoly of the markets of Mexico, it must be due to conditions of trade or of tariff legislation which should be studied in order to be removed. The natural advantages of the United States in the proximity of her fertile grain fields and her great factories, aided by her absolute control of the highways of commerce on land and her substantial control of those by sea, should make the southern republic one of our most accessible and profitable markets.

The Mexican people themselves have come to the assistance of nature in opening their markets to the United States. Mexico has been until recently without a safe harbor on the eastern coast. The Government has recently built a system of jetties like those at the mouths of the Mississippi and created a harbor at the port of Tampico extending for 30 miles. It is the only harbor on the eastern coast of Mexico where a vessel can unload at the docks, and has been built under the charge of one of the officers who assisted Capt. Eads in the work at the mouths of the Mississippi. There is now 18 feet of water over a bar where formerly there was but 6 feet, and the depth will soon be considerably increased.

Tampico will inevitably become, within a short time, the great commercial center of the southern republic. It is situated halfway between the present roadstead of Vera Cruz and the American line, is only two days' sail from Mobile, and even nearer to New Orleans, and is almost at the gates of the growing port of Galveston. Two railroads now connect Tampico with the interior. One is the Mexican Central Railway, almost wholly owned by Americans, and the other is the Monterey and Mexican Gulf. Concessions have been granted by the Mexican Government and the surveys have been made for a third railroad from Tampico to the City of Mexico, which will shorten the running time by almost one-half.

MEXICO HAS OFFERED US VERY LIBERAL CONCESSIONS.

The Government and people of Mexico have offered their markets to us with a generosity that I regret to say has not been fully appreciated or returned. So long ago as 1882, at the invitation of the President of that Republic, two commissioners, one of them being no less a personage than Gen. Grant, were sent to Mexico by direction of President Arthur to negotiate a reciprocity treaty which was concluded and finally ratified by this Senate, but which from a shortsighted policy, almost as fatal in its folly as that which is now being pursued, the House of Representatives refused to enact the legislation necessary to carry its stipulations into effect.

That treaty provided for almost an absolute interchange of products, free of import dues, between the two nations, and but for our own folly it would doubtless have resulted in closing all the custom-houses upon the Rio Grande and given our merchants and manufacturers a monopoly of the Mexican trade. But as a consequence of our neglect to take advantage of what was then offered, the merchants of Mexico still purchase nearly two-thirds of their imports in Europe, and are likely to do so until we arrange for an interchange of products under discriminating duties that other nations may not enjoy or obtain.

It is still possible, if the pending bill does not become a law, to reclaim what we have neglected. Mexico is still willing and anxious to meet us with a friendly and liberal spirit in a commercial treaty that will enlarge her markets for our merchandise provided we will receive her staple products on the same terms that were given Brazil and Cuba in the arrangements negotiated by the late Administration.

THE ATTITUDE OF PRESIDENT DIAZ.

A correspondent of the New York Commercial Bulletin, in a recent communication on this subject, says:

President Diaz is an advocate of absolute free trade between the two great republics of the western hemisphere. He and other leaders of the Liberal party have been studying the effects of such a system for sometime. They realize that free trade along the Rio Grande would mean a loss of revenue which Mexico would have to meet by raising revenue elsewhere. They are prepared for this and are working upon a plan which will at once raise the necessary revenue and develop the agricultural resources of Mexico without pursuing the restrictive policy of a high tariff against the United States. The proposition is being seriously discussed to levy a heavy tax upon all uncultivated land. It is proposed to leave exempt from taxation the arable land under cultivation, and thereby offer a premium to the farmers.

Those Mexicans who have studied closely the industrial possibilities of their country believe that her greatest future development lies along the line of agriculture rather than of mining or raising stock. The mining they regard as largely a speculative enterprise, and the raising of stock as subject to limitations. Vast areas of fertile land lie uncultivated all over the Republic, and if brought under the plow would make Mexico one of the greatest farming countries of the world. The progressive leaders believe that in this field, along with a reasonable development of necessary manufactures, lies the future prosperity of Mexico.

MEXICO DESIRES RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Similar statements have recently appeared in Mexican publications, which indicate that the Government is willing to change her entire revenue system provided she can secure unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, but the adoption of the pending measure in the statutes of this nation would make this entirely unnecessary, as we are about to give our neighbors that for which they have offered the most liberal concessions, without requiring the slightest consideration in return.

If this bill should pass there will be no further offers on the part of Mexico to admit our exports free of duty, or at rates below those imposed upon similar imports from other nations. The inducement will no longer exist. Nearly every product for which she has sought concessions in the past is placed upon our free list, or will be admitted into our ports at a duty lower than she has ever asked.

And what do we receive in return? Nothing. The opportunity we have been seeking for the extension of our sales among her people is absolutely thrown away. We give for nothing that for which she has been willing to pay the highest price; and she will continue to exact exorbitant duties upon our exports while we admit her products free.

One can scarcely discuss this subject with patience. It seems incredible that a legislative body like this should so thoughtlessly abandon and betray the interests of a people they have sworn to serve.

In exchange for the free admission of their coffee and sugar, their fruits and fiber plants, their wool and hides, their silver and lead ore, their horses and cattle and sheep, the Mexican Government would willingly open its ports to nearly ever product of our farms and forests, our fisheries, and mechanical industries; and particularly to those forms of manufactured merchandise for which we feel the greatest need of foreign markets, the surplus results of the labor and the genius of our artisans.

THE FOREIGN COMMERCE OF MEXICO.

The largest imports of Mexico, amounting to nearly fifty millions a year, and rapidly increasing in value, are cotton, woolen, and linen fabrics, glass and china, the myriad forms of manufactured iron and steel, including machinery and railway supplies, agricultural implements and machinery, lumber and furniture, glass and china, paper and stationery, drugs and medicines, and all sorts of articles that enter into household use. The greater portion of these imports come from Europe still, notwithstanding the construction of railway lines connecting the two republics and the introduction of American capital for the development of the natural resources of the country, the reason being that the wholesale merchants are mostly Europeans, who prefer to purchase their supplies in their own countries unless some inducement be offered to buy them elsewhere. A discriminating duty in favor of American goods, such as might be secured through a reciprocity treaty, would offer this inducement, and the trade would be diverted to the United States. The correspondent of the Bulletin continues:

The wealthier classes of Mexico are highly cultivated, luxurious in their tastes, and insist upon having the best of everything which ministers to the enjoyment of modern life. The poorer people of the country produce to a large extent what they need for themselves, but the introduction of railroads and of fine manufactured goods must inevitably raise the scale of living, even among the humblest, to the point of demanding as necessities many articles of manufacture which have been in the past in but little demand. The coarser grades of cotton cloths are already being manufactured on Mexican soil in Mexican mills. The market for the better grades of goods, now controlled by Great Britain, France, Germany, and Belgium, is, however, open to American manufacturers if they could obtain the advantage of discriminating duties. If, instead of discriminating duties, unrestricted reciprocity prevailed between this country and Mexico, there can be no doubt that the exercise of a little enterprise on the part of our manufacturers and our producers of food would soon give them almost absolute control of Mexican markets.

The cultivated classes of Mexico, however, will not be satisfied with inferior goods or a limited variety. It is the boast of Mexican merchants that they keep for sale everything which can be bought in London, Paris, or Berlin, and our merchants, in order to command absolutely Mexican trade, would have to meet the demands of a fastidious, cultivated, and wealthy people

THE REASON WHY WE HAVE NO TREATY WITH MEXICO

It may be asked why such a reciprocity arrangement as was negotiated with Brazil three years ago was not made with Mexico as well. The answer is found in what is known as the reciprocity section of the McKinley law, which was so limited in its scope as to forbid the Secretary of State to offer that nation the inducements it demanded as a consideration for concessions in favor of American goods. Mexico asked the repeal of the law recently enacted imposing a duty upon lead ores, and the free admission of her wools, which are of the coarser variety, used for the manufacture of carpets, and do not come in competition with the higher grades cultivated upon this side of the border. But by the present bill it is proposed to remove the duties from both these articles, which will afford the market Mexico has been seeking without requiring any concessions in our favor in return.

Mr. Ryan, the recent minister to Mexico, in a letter to the Secretary of State, said:

I trust I shall be pardoned for expressing the conviction, formed from such close and careful observation and study as I have been able to make since entering upon my duties here, that the people of the United States have very much to gain and little or nothing to lose by the most liberal trade relations with Mexico. If our Government agrees with me in this respect, then I beg to make the suggestion that the longer reciprocity negotiations are deferred the more difficult will be their consummation, because of the constant development of industries in this country that naturally create opposing interests.

INCREASE OF OUR EXPORTS TO MEXICO.

The statistics of our exports to Mexico furnish an interesting study and show a rapid increase notwithstanding the disadvantages under which commerce has been laboring:

	Fiscal year ending June 30—

EXPORTS FROM MEXICO FOR 1893.

The exports from Mexico during the last year (1893) of precious metals and merchandise were valued at $87,509,221, an increase of $12,041,506 over the previous year, which illustrates the remarkable development of the material resources of that country. There was a decrease in the value of the shipments of silver bullion, doubtless owing to the reduced price of that article, and also in the exports of tobacco, but in every other article there was a gain. The largest increase was in silver-bearing lead ores, which amounted to over $4,000,000; the next was in coffee, of which $2,050,000 more was exported than in 1892, and the next was in fiber plants, which show a gain of a million and a half.

COMPARATIVE EXPORTS OF MEXICO BY NATIONS.

The following is a comparative statement of exports from Mexico by nations for the fiscal years 1891–'92 and 1892–'93:

POSSIBILITIES OF TRADE WITH THE ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

During the session of the International American Conference, while the subject of reciprocity was under discussion the only opposition came from the delegates from Chile, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic, who recognized that the United States would not agree to admit their wools free of duty, no matter what might be offered in return. Secretary Blaine endeavored to have the coarse grades of wool included in the reciprocity amendment to the tariff act of 1890, as very little is raised in this country, and we require a great deal for the manufacture of carpets, but he failed because of the opposition of the wool men, who feared that it would be used to adulterate the finer grades in the manufacture of cheap clothing. And he especially urged a discriminating duty in favor of the wools of the Argentine Republic, which have always suffered unjustly under the tariff laws of the United States.

We tax wool by weight, and not by its value. The coarse wool raised in the Argentine Republic is much heavier than that from any other country, because it is saturated with grease and contains more dirt, and it also brings a lower price in the market, but the same duty has been imposed upon it as upon lighter, finer, and cleaner wools. The Argentines have regarded this as an injustice, and made it the subject of repeated complaints without relief. It would have injured no one to have admitted their wools at a lower rate of duty, nor would it have interfered with the domestic product to have admitted it free.

Feeling this as an injustice and a discrimination against their great staple, for the Argentine Republic has more sheep than any other country in the world, they have not encouraged trade with the United States, and some years 95 per cent of their enormous imports have been purchased in Europe. They have bought of us only such articles as they could not obtain as well elsewhere. But as a people and as a nation, they have always been ready to meet us half way in any equitable movement to improve the commercial relations between the two countries; and today they stand ready to negotiate a treaty that will be profitable to both, if it can be based upon the free admission of their wool.

OUR FORMER COMMERCE WITH ARGENTINE.

Forty years ago we had an important share in the foreign commerce of the Argentine Republic. The first importing house of any considerable capital was established at Buenos Ayres by a citizen of this country. An American built the first railroad there, and a monument has been erected to his honor. The first great sheep ranch was started by one of our countrymen, and for a time the merchants of New England controlled the trade of the Republic. But of late years the trade between the two countries, for the reasons I have cited, has been reduced to an annual average of less than 8 per cent of their foreign exchanges. In 1883 we furnished 6 per cent of their imports and took 5 per cent of their exports. In 1893 we furnished 8 per cent of their imports, and took only 4 per cent of their exports, while England, Germany, and France have shared their markets.

In a recent communication to the newspapers, Dr. Zeballos, the able statesman who now represents the Argentine Republic at this capital, says:

> The Argentine Republic might purchase from 25 to 30 per cent of its considerable gross importations from the United States, but is deterred from doing so by lack of rapid communication, general commercial relations, and want of banking facilities. On this account it is that in general the commerce between the Argentine Republic and the United States is carried on via England. Therefore, when Argentine trade buys the products of North America, the ships that carry it do not get return cargoes, because the American trade does not take Argentine articles. The navigation, therefore, between the two countries must go out of its natural course.
> In a single Argentine State, that of Santa Fe, at the last wheat harvest, December, 1893, to February, 1894, there were in use 1,300 thrashing machines from the United States. The taking off of the tariff upon the importation of foreign wools, which is provided for by the new American tariff bill, will soon make up for the sacrifice which it imposes upon the producers by the great and immediate advantages which the general economy of the United States will gain by the opening of one of the greatest kinds of industries. The trade of the Argentine Republic is constantly sought by all the manufacturing nations of Europe, because it is one of the growing countries of the age, which consumes more in proportion to the number of its inhabitants than any other, and this consumption is growing each year by the extraordinary increase of its population and by reason of its European immigration.

The population of the Argentine Republic has increased from 1,877,490 in 1869 to 5,124,300 in 1893. The cultivated area during that period has increased in a corresponding ratio. In 1878 but 31,243 tons of wheat were exported; in 1892 the exports were 1,395,294 tons. In 1878 the exports of corn were 193,996 tons; in 1892, 1,814,024 tons. During the last ten years the sheep have increased from seventy to one hundred millions; the cattle from sixteen to twenty-five millions, the horses from three to five millions, and the hogs from a nominal amount to three millions.

The immigrants arriving in 1883 were 73,210; in 1892 they were 385,554.

MAGNITUDE OF THE ARGENTINE FOREIGN TRADE.

The following table will show the magnitude of the foreign commerce of this remarkable nation:

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Year.	Imports.	Exports.
1873	$73,434,099	$47,396,291	1884	$94,056,144	$68,029,693

CHARACTER OF THE PRINCIPAL IMPORTS.

The following statement will show the character of the principal imports, and the amount of each for the year 1892:

Live cattle	$385,315
Paste substances, food	12,683,560
Wines and liquors	6,040,155
Tobacco	632,039
Cottons	30,618,336
Ready-made clothing and furnishings	4,302,824
Chemicals and pharmaceutical productions	4,026,640
Lumber and its appliances	3,712,355
Paper and its appliances	2,687,956
Leather and its appliances	622,112
Iron and its appliances	10,339,363
Construction materials	3,545,625
Metals and their appliances	1,140,753
Earthenware, glassware, and ceramic products	1,618,790
Fuel and lighting appliances	6,095,642
Manufactured articles	3,000,013

THE SHARE OF EACH NATION.

The following statement will show the share of imports furnished by each nation in 1893 compared with 1883:

	1883.	1893.
Germany	$7,023,051	$10,676,513
Belgium	3,261,077	6,646,838
Spain	3,790,760	2,179,259
United States	4,933,054	7,376,583
France*	15,418,917	10,425,865
Italy	3,480,321	8,412,941
England	30,695,963	35,835,492

* The French importation in 1889 was $30,257,407. The year 1892 must be considered an exceptional one.

The railway system of the Republic now aggregates about 10,000 miles, which has been constructed at a cost of $447,999,477.

The country has recently passed through a very serious financial depression, similar to that suffered by the United States in 1873, and due to similar causes—extravagance, speculation, and excessive enterprise. But its magnificent resources and the energy of its citizens are enabling it to recover its normal condition, and there is no land on earth which has greater promise for the future or a more solid foundation for national wealth and permanent prosperity.

ARGENTINE PRODUCTS, 1893.

The value of Argentine products in 1893 and the surplus for exportation were as follows:

	Product.	Exportation.
	Gold.	Gold.
Grain	$54,800,000	$24,400,000

Col. Howard Vincent, M. P., who has recently made a journey through South America, was given a formal reception by the people of Sheffield, England, on his return, and in the course of his response to the address of welcome referred to the Argentine Republic as follows:

I have told you before of the vast prairies of Canada, of the great sheep farms of Australia. But I must honestly say that country for country, land for land, Argentina knows no rival. Over an area ten times the size of these islands, there is untold power of food production. For 600 miles from ocean to mountain there is not a hill, hardly a tree. Over these great grass plains range 22,000,000 of cattle, 75,000,000 of sheep, 4,000,000 of horses, all capable of transport hither at trifling cost, dead or alive. There are twenty-seven railways, nearly all British owned, and rapidly on both sides of the track grass land is are being laid down in wheat, garnered without fear of frost or wet, and poured down the wharves of the Central Argentina into ships to render British agriculture more and more difficult.

By the negotiation of a reciprocity treaty similar to that which now exists with Brazil, we might gain a fair share of the trade of the Argentine Republic, and as the distinguished minister from that country suggests, increase our exports from four millions to twenty-five or thirty million dollars annually. But if we place wool on the free list without asking any return, that opportunity will be lost forever.

POSSIBILITIES OF TRADE WITH URUGUAY.

The Republic of Uruguay resembles in every respect its greater neighbor across the Rio de la Plata. Its products, its industries, its condition, and its resources are similar, and its foreign commerce is even larger per capita of population. By the latest census, taken in 1888, there were 648,299, and at present there are probably 800,000 people in the Republic engaged almost exclusively in agricultural and pastoral pursuits.

The imports of Uruguay average about $30,000,000 and the exports are usually valued about the same sum. They consist almost entirely of manufactured merchandise and include everything that enters into the consumption of a highly civilized country. Great Britain furnishes about 30 per cent, France and Germany about 15 per cent, and the United States only about 5 or 6 per cent annually. We send them little but lumber, petroleum, iron and steel, and agricultural implements. Their wearing apparel, their hardware, china, cutlery, machinery, and other goods are furnished by England and Germany and their luxuries by France.

The staple export of the country is wool, of which the greater part goes to Europe, and very little but their hides is sent here. The other exports are salted meat, tasajo, preserved meat, extracts of meat, tallow, horns, bones, hides, preserved and dried tongues, ostrich feathers, live stock, corn, flour, wheat, canary seed, bay, oats, bran, barley, flax, vermicelli, potatoes, stone, lime, granite, pavements, agate stone, etc.

The following table gives an idea of the exports and imports of the Republic from the year 1862 to the year 1891:

The trade and exterior commerce of the Republic in relation with its population has always been superior to that of the Argentine Republic and Chile.

The following table shows that out of the imported goods during the year 1891, there correspond to each inhabitant $13.50 more than to each inhabitant of the Argentine Republic, and $13.61 more than to each inhabitant of Chile. It shows also that each inhabitant exported $10.19 more than each inhabitant of the first country, and $14 more than each one of the second country:

No attempt has ever been made to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with Uruguay, but the Government and the people are very friendly in their disposition to the United States, and it might be possible to obtain valuable concessions in favor of our products if we would offer them an increased market for their wool.

THE COMMERCE OF CHILE.

Chile has been for years the most prosperous country in South America. Its chief resources and products are mineral, and have brought the people great wealth. The agricultural resources are limited, but have been highly improved, and for several years the wheat fields among the valleys of the Andes have furnished more flour than was necessary for the wants of the people, and left a considerable surplus for export to the neighboring countries along the Pacific coast. But the rapid increase of population, and the more profitable inducements offered by the mines, have reduced the supply for export, and Chile will soon find it necessary to seek food products from the harvest fields of the Argentine Republic across the Andes.

The population of the country was 2,665,926 by an official census, but its accuracy has been denied, as many peons avoided enumeration for the purpose of escaping military duty, and the actual number of the people is believed to be nearer three millions.

The chief exports are copper, silver, nitrates, and wool. The deposits of copper are believed to be inexhaustible, but the development of the mines is rapid, and has been profitable. The nitrate beds are also inexhaustible, and from an export tax upon this product the Government derives the greater portion of its revenue.

The exports average annually about $65,000,000, of which $55,000,000 are minerals, nitrates, copper, and silver, and $7,500,000 wool. The imports are usually about the same as the exports, and consist mainly of manufactured articles, wearing apparel, machinery, hardware, railway supplies, wines, and tobacco, drugs and medicines, etc. England has the greatest share of the trade, having furnished $28,000,000 or about 45 per cent last year; Germany comes next with $14,000,000; France $9,000,000, while the United States usually sends between three and four millions worth of machinery and agricultural implements, lumber and furniture, petroleum, and sundry other articles.

Valparaiso is the commercial center from which a large portion of the merchandise imported is distributed to the ports on the coast and the towns in the interior. The principal British imports are: Printed, white and unbleached cotton goods; woolen manufactures, carpets, candles, tea, boots and shoes, beer, spirits, etc. The total value of the imports of the Republic for the year 1892 was $61,752,500, as compared with $50,417,000 in 1891, and with $53,745,500 in 1890.

The total value of the exports from all ports in the Republic in 1892 was $50,829,000, as compared with $52,013,930 in 1891, and $54,143,185 in 1890. These figures show that there was an excess of imports over exports in 1892 to the amount of $10,923,500, as compared with an excess in favor of exports amounting to $1,596,930 in 1891, and $397,685 in 1890.

A POSSIBLE TREATY WITH AUSTRALASIA.

As far back as 1878 the British colonies of Australasia have been seeking commercial intimacy with the United States. In that year the chambers of commerce of Australia and New Zealand addressed a memorial to the Government of the United States, which in many respects is a most remarkable document, coming as it did from the subjects of another nation, with whom our own citizens had not intermingled to any degree, and from whom they could have received no inspiration or encouragement. It was a voluntary act on the part of a people who were then enjoying very much the same conditions that existed in the American colonies of Great Britain at the outbreak of the Revolutionary war.

This document is so peculiar, so significant, and so important that I may be pardoned for quoting a few extracts. The memorial was suggested by the experience of Australian visitors to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, and it reads:

Australian visitors were encouraged to hope that similar progress might await their own country, and they anticipated intimate and increasing commercial relations between the two countries, to their national advantage; but, to insure this result, they were impressed with the absolute necessity for the same unrestricted mutual interchange of products of the respective countries as now exists betwixt the Australasian colonies and the mother country; and certainly, without such unrestricted interchange, it is impossible commerce can attain its full development. * * *

Trade can not attain its natural development unless it is conducted on a basis mutually satisfactory to the countries engaged in it, and it can not be mutually satisfactory if one of the countries finds its products excluded from the markets of the other. As we desire free, cordial, and extending commercial relations betwixt our respective countries, we venture to ask your coöperation in getting removed the restrictions on the introduction of our staple article—wool—into your market, believing that the repeal of the duties, which are now so heavy as to be virtually prohibitory, will prove of as much advantage to American interests as to those of the colonies. * * *

You are, no doubt, aware that our products are chiefly pastoral and mineral, and that only to a small extent do manufactories exist amongst us. While our population can employ themselves profitably in developing the natural resources of the country, there is little inducement to them to devote their attention to manufacturing; but if their products are excluded from other markets they must, perforce, manufacture for themselves and limit the import of manufactured goods. Whether this be so or not, we hope you will agree with us that the interests of both countries will be best advanced by abolishing every obstacle to free commercial relations; and we appeal to you, as peculiarly interested in promoting the commerce of the United States, and intimately conversant with it in all its relations, to give us your cordial assistance and coöperation to this end.

WHAT THEY WILL GIVE IN EXCHANGE FOR FREE WOOL.

This memorial was brought to the attention of Congress, but no action was taken upon it, and no reply was made, for the reason that it was deemed inexpedient at that time to remove the duties imposed upon imported wool. The same people have made similar advances since, repeatedly, and four years ago, when the reciprocity policy was under consideration, this Government was again approached with the hope that we might be willing to make an equitable exchange of concessions for the purpose of promoting trade between the Australasian colonies and the United States, but the disposition of Congress was not favorable to the removal or any reduction of the tariff on wool. But now that it is proposed to place wool upon the free list, it would not be unfriendly or unprofitable to offer the Australians an opportunity to make some concessions in favor of the agricultural and manufactured products of the United States, which I am advised would be received in the most cordial spirit, and result in consummation of a treaty that would extend our markets in a most profitable manner, and afford an opportunity for our manufacturers to dispose of a great portion of their surplus.

The Australasian colonies represent a population of 4,285,297 souls, engaged almost exclusively in pastoral pursuits, without manufacturing facilities. They possess great wealth, which has rapidly accumulated, and live in all the luxury that modern taste demands. The people are almost exclusively white, descended from English, Scotch, and Irish ancestry, and their requirements are similar to those of the people of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. There are seven colonies, and the following table shows their population and their foreign commerce according to the latest figures attainable:

Colonies.	Population.	1891.
		Imports.	Exports.
New South Wales	132,234	£25,383,397	£25,944,020
New Zealand	626,658	6,503,849	9,566,397
Queensland	393,718	5,079,004	8,305,387

Tasmania	146,667	2,051,964	1,440,418
Victoria	1,140,405	21,711,608	16,006,743
West Australia	49,782	1,280,093	799,466

VALUE OF THE AUSTRALASIAN COMMERCE.

The imports of New South Wales for 1891, the latest year available, were divided as follows: Great Britain, £10,580,230; the other Australasian colonies, £6,803,974; the United States, £1,277,032; other foreign countries, £1,632,001. The imports of New Zealand were divided as follows: England, £4,369,633; other Australasian colonies, £1,013,549; the United States, £361,795. The balance was from India, China, Japan.

The commerce of Queensland was divided about like that of the other colonies. Only about 5 per cent of the trade of South Australia is with foreign countries, the remainder is with Great Britain and the other Australian colonies. Tasmania had no imports except from Great Britain and other Australasian colonies. Of the imports into Victoria, £8,953,599 were from Great Britain; £785,602 from the United States. The principal articles of import were coal, cotton, woolen, and silk goods, wearing apparel, iron and steel, live stock, sugar and molasses, lumber, furniture, and household goods, hardware and cutlery, machinery, stationery, oil, railway supplies, and agricultural implements, all of which with be furnished by the United States. Great Britain furnished nearly all the imports into West Australia.

Taking the colony of New South Wales as an example of the seven, the statistics of commerce show a wonderful expansion. In 1871 the imports were $48,045,000, the exports $56,225,000, an aggregate commerce of $104,270,000. Since then it has increased more than 150 per cent. In no other country in the world containing a population of about 1,000,000, or in any more populous country, is commerce to be found so large, or proportionately so large. The commerce "per head" is several times as large as that of the United States, and if we cut off that portion of the New South Wales trade which is transacted with the other colonies, the statement is still true, though in a lesser degree.

The aggregate imports and exports of New South Wales in 1891 were fifty-one and a quarter million pounds sterling, of which twenty-two and three-quarter millions represented trade with Australasia, and twenty-eight and a half millions outside Australasia, the total imports being twenty-five and a quarter millions, and the total exports twenty-six millions. Naturally, the largest commerce is with Great Britain, but there is already a considerable trade with the United States.

So eager have the people been to promote their trade with us, that for the last twelve or fifteen years two of the Governments have paid an annual subsidy to an American steamship line to maintain communication between Sidney and other ports and San Francisco, although this Government has given that line no aid.

EXPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES TO THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES.

The following table shows the exports from the United States to the Australasian colonies during the last fiscal year:

Agricultural implements	$294,429
Books, maps, engraving, etc	63,987
Breadstuffs:
Barley	65
Wheat	2,100

Timber, sawed	31,437
Other lumber and timber	37,732
Manufactures of wood	230,940
All other articles	631,309
Total domestic merchandise	7,818,130

An examination of this table will show the extent and the character of the market that may be secured for the manufactures of the United States by extending the reciprocity policy to the Australasian colonies. But the pending bill, if it becomes a law, rejects and abandons that opportunity forever. It is not reasonable to expect that they will discriminate in their tariff laws, against their own mother country unless they have some inducement to do so, and that inducement is removed if wool is placed upon the free list without asking concessions in return.

COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

No government ever threw away a greater opportunity to promote its foreign trade and secure commercial advantages for its citizens than is being sacrificed by the pending bill. Not only are the reciprocity treaties that were made by the last Administration to be absolutely and peremptorily revoked without consulting the rights and wishes of the other parties to the agreements, but the duties upon a long list of imported merchandise are to be removed and reduced without even giving the countries which will enjoy the benefits a chance to offer us some concessions in return.

The Canadian Government has for years been trying to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States in order to secure a better market for her agricultural products. A commission came two years ago from Ottawa to confer with Mr. Blaine on this subject, and made some liberal offers as a basis for such an arrangement, but Mr. Blaine was compelled to inform them that under the McKinley law his authority was limited and that he could not promise to yield anything except the duties upon sugar, hides, rubber, coffee, and other tropical products, which, of course, had no interest for the Canadians. Nor was he willing to make a general commercial treaty, because he did not believe that the Senate would ratify any measure that permitted Nova Scotia's coal and lumber and Canadian hay, grain, poultry, vegetables, cheese, and other farm products to come over the border in direct competition with those raised in New England, New York, and the Northwestern States.

The Canadians were willing to offer almost anything to secure a market for their surplus "garden truck." They promised to reduce the tariff upon our cotton and woolen goods and other fabrics, our hardware and cutlery, and admit these and other manufactured articles at rates of duty that similar merchandise from Great Britain, their mother country, could not enjoy, so that the American manufacturers might almost monopolize the markets of between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 people. But while Mr. Blaine was himself in favor of making that sort of a trade, and believed that it would result in the greatest good to the greatest number, he was firm in his conviction that the negotiation of such a treaty would be useless, because the two-thirds of the Senators necessary for its ratification would never agree to remove the protective duty upon the New England hay and potatoes, the Vermont horses, the New York butter and cheese, the lumber of Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, and Washington, and the wheat and barley of Minnesota, and Dakota.

WHAT THIS BILL GIVES TO THE CANADIAN FARMER.

But now the pending bill gives to the Canadian farmer, lumberman, and fisherman nearly everything their government sought for them two years ago, free of all conditions, and without demanding or expecting in return any of the concessions that the Dominion authorities were offering so freely and would still be so willing to give. In other words, the magnificent advantages that might be secured for our manufacturers in Canadian markets are simply thrown away. It is not strange that a Dominion paper said of the new tariff bill that "it could not have been better for the Canadian trade if it had been prepared in Ottawa instead of Washington."

The pending bill permits Canadian milk, fruits, beans, pease, bacon, beef, mutton, pork, lard, hams, fresh fish and fish for bait, sawed timber, logs, lumber, laths, shingles, staves, and all other kinds of lumber, plants, trees, vines, shrubs, salt, agricultural implements of all kinds, wool, buckwheat, corn, cornmeal, oats, rye, wheat, and wheat flour to come over the border entirely free of duty. It reduces the duties on potatoes, butter, cheese, poultry, barley, eggs, apples, and other articles to a rate which will permit the Canadian farmers to come into the markets of the United States and compete with our own.

There is immense rejoicing all over Canada because of this remarkable and unexpected generosity on the part of the United States. The Government organs are trying to repress this enthusiasm lest its significance may be realized by the American Congressmen and suggest to them what advantages are being thrown away, but they are so important to the commercial prosperity of Canada that if a clause should be added to the Wilson bill providing that these changes in our tariff shall not take place unless equivalent concessions are made in favor of our products there would be an agent of the Dominion government in Washington ready to sign an agreement in forty-eight hours.

SACRIFICE OF THE AMERICAN FISHING INTERESTS.

But the most important and improvident sacrifice of American interests made in the bill is the clause admitting fresh fish free of duty; and that will bring disaster upon the fishing fleets not only upon the Atlantic coast, but from one end of the Great Lakes to the other. For years the United States has been fighting to protect its fishermen. That was one of the issues involved in the war of 1812, and our ablest diplomacy has been engaged in the contest for the rights and privileges guaranteed them under our treaties with England. But by the Wilson bill the whole case is thrown away. Every inducement that we have had to persuade the Canadians to give our fishermen a show, every advantage that we have had over them is surrendered by the Wilson bill. The process of freezing fish in solid cakes of ice has caused the old methods of preserving them with salt to be abandoned, so that nothing but fresh fish now come to market.

Canada has persistently refused to permit our fishermen to enter her ports, even to buy bait of her own people, without having first paid a heavy license. She has prohibited them from landing in her harbors and shipping their fish across her territory in bond to the United States. She has done everything possible to prevent our fishermen from enjoying the use of neutral waters and to destroy their trade, and yet, in the light of all this, we throw open our ports to the Canadian fisherman, who can come and sell his fish in our markets just as freely as our own fishermen and just as freely as he can sell them at home.

With one-half of these concessions we could have secured from Canada entire freedom from all discrimination, and the same rights for our fishermen in her ports that her fishermen are to be given in ours. She would have been delighted to give them, for it would have been exchanging the market of 5,000,000 for the market of 65,000,000 people.

WHY NOT COMPLETE RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA?

All trade arrangements which have been made with Canada in past years—the reciprocity treaty of 1854 and subsequent attempts of a similar character—included only agricultural products which offered no advantages to us. Canada is an agricultural country, even more so than this, but its market for manufactured goods is of great value, and an arrangement of complete reciprocity would be of a decided advantage.

If in one hundred millions of imports purchased by Canada each year, the United States were able to furnish forty-five millions in that market in spite of the duties imposed upon them, competing with the English, who sold goods of nearly similar value, how much greater share of this trade would our people enjoy if they could send their merchandise into Canada as freely as they now do from one State to another, while the English manufacturers and merchants would have to submit to the tariff when they landed, amounting to from 25 to 40 per cent? But, Mr. President, the people of the United States should never permit any more one-sided arrangements under which we admit their products free while ours are taxed in their custom-houses. And the improvident policy of the pending bill will allow the Canadians to enjoy our markets while our manufacturers are practically excluded from theirs.

There is a paragraph in this bill which provides that all farm implements imported from any country which lays an import duty upon similar articles from the United States shall be subject to the duty existing prior to the passage of this act. That means Canada, and the proviso was inserted at the suggestion of the manufacturers of agricultural machinery. It would be a great benefit to all the farmers and manufacturers of the United States if that provision could be extended so as to cover all the schedules of the pending bill. It will be time enough to talk of free lumber, free salt, free fish, and free vegetables when Canada removes the duties she imposes upon those articles.

TENDENCY OF THE CANADIAN TRADE.

The laws of nature and the laws of trade require Canada to come to the markets of the United States to purchase what she requires and to sell what she has to dispose of, and in spite of the tremendous influences exercised by the officials and commercial organizations of England, in spite of the enormous amount of English capital invested in the Dominion, in spite of the restraint that is placed upon the people by the Government, and in spite of the heavy duties they levy upon our products, nearly half of their trade is with us. Their exports usually reach the sum of $100,000,000.

Of this Great Britain takes about one-half, the United States about 40 per cent, the West Indies 3 per cent, and the balance is divided between other countries in Europe. The imports, by the last returns, amounted to $113,000,000. Of this the United States furnished $55,000,000, Great Britain $42,000,000, Germany $3,000,000, France $2,000,000, and so on. Can there be any question that, this market before us, it would be to the interest of our people to have free admission there for the sale of their goods in exchange for what we are now giving Canada without any consideration?

The price of labor in Canada is somewhat lower than in the United States, particularly in British Columbia, where Chinamen are employed to a considerable extent in the manufacture of lumber and in other industries, and it is said that our farmers and manufacturers might suffer by bringing the results of such labor into competition with our own, but that seems to me, sir, all the more reason why, if Congress proposes to remove our duties upon imports from Canada, that we should require something from them in return.

But as a matter of fact that population of Canada is small; the people are widely scattered; the capital is scarce; enterprise is not encouraged as it is in the United States; labor is not so well paid; the people are not so highly educated, and there has not been that steady prosperous growth that we have witnessed in our own agricultural districts, and if a commercial treaty on reciprocal concessions should be negotiated between Canada and the United States and bring greater degree of prosperity to our neighbors, it would have a direct result upon the extension of our commerce, and the ended and enlarged sales of our merchandise, as the prosperity of our Western farmers has enhanced the wealth of the manufacturers of the East. The opening of the great agricultural regions of Canada and the profitable market for their products will widen our market and give new regions for American enterprise and energy to conquer.

ENGLAND MUST CONSENT TO A TREATY.

There is no question that England will consent to any commercial arrangement that may be negotiated between the United States and Canada, although she will do it reluctantly, as she did in the case of her colonies in the West Indies. In 1874, when a reciprocity treaty was being negotiated by Sir Edward Thornton at Washington, the English Government instructed him to modify it at the suggestion of the Canadian ministry and make such additions as the Canadians desired. He did so, and made out a long list of articles manufactured in the United States which were to be received into Canada free of duty, so that it was practically free trade. Yet not one of those articles was to be received from England upon the same terms.

The draft of this treaty was sent to Lord Derby, who approved it, and the English Government established a valuable precedent by consenting to an arrangement under which American merchandise was admitted free to the British colony when a tariff from 25 to 50 per cent was imposed upon the same kind of merchandise coming from England. But even should the home government resist the proposition the reciprocity party in Canada is so strong and the desire for annexation to the United States is so eager that it would be compelled to make the concessions demanded rather than face a disappointed and resentful people.

Canada imposes a heavy duty upon the articles she received from the United States. She imposes a 35 per cent duty upon our agricultural implements, axes, popcorn, and other articles. She taxes coal 60 cents a ton; apples, 40 cents a barrel; barley, 15 cents a bushel; oats and rye, 10 cents; cornmeal, 40 cents a barrel; wheat flour, 75 cents a barrel; Indian corn, 7½ cents a bushel; eggs, 5 cents a dozen; hogs, 2 cents a pound; jams, jellies, and preserves, 5 cents a can; fresh fish, 1 cent a pound; salted fish, 50 cents a hundredweight; cheese, 3 cents a pound; cattle, sheep, and other animals, 30 per cent; vegetables 25 per cent; fruits and poultry 30 per cent; horses 20 per cent, and other articles that we are admitting free, at even higher rates.

Ever since the people of the United States achieved their independence, a hundred and eighteen years ago, there has been constant friction between them and their brethren across the northern border. It has always arisen from commercial jealousy and interference from one with the industrial pursuits of the other. My distinguished friend on the other side of the Chamber [Mr. MORGAN] has only recently returned from the performance of an honorable duty of adjusting one of the most serious and complicated of these differences, but I may suggest, Mr. President, that all further trouble can be avoided by a commercial arrangement with the colonies of the Dominion under which the relations between these two people of the same blood and stock shall be as free as those between residents of our several States.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND ITS SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

The small share of New Orleans in the commerce between the United States and the Latin-American countries has always been the cause of surprise and comment. From the geographical situation of that city, in relation to the great producing and consuming section of the United States, as well as to the southern republics and colonies, one would suppose that the metropolis of the Gulf ought to command the greater part of both the export and the import trade. She lies only four days distant from the northern ports of Central and South America, less than one-half of the sailing time to New York, and enjoys communication by rail or water with every manufacturing and commercial center in the South and the West.

The distance from New York and Chicago, and New Orleans and Chicago is about the same; but the distance from Chicago to the isthmus, the great distributing point from the southern trade, via New Orleans, is only about half as great as via New York. Nevertheless, nine-tenths of the merchandise that is furnished by the Northwest to the Southern markets, both the agricultural and mechanical products, is shipped halfway across the continent by rail or lake to the Atlantic, and from New York southward, instead along the longitudinal line which nature has marked for man to follow.

The region tributary to New Orleans embraces over one-third of the total area of the United States, and furnishes 15,000 miles of navigable waters and is settled by nearly 30,000,000 people. It contains 70 per cent of the swine, nearly 60 per cent of the milch cows, 55 per cent of the cattle, and 40 per cent of the forest lands found in the entire country; producing, also, four-fifths of the corn and two-thirds of the wheat. The two crops mentioned are valued at $800,000,000 annually, and the live stock has an average value of $470,000,000.

The great cotton belt of the United States, in which is raised 3,500,000,000 pounds of raw material yearly, is naturally tributary to New Orleans, the chief outlet for the exports, amounting to 2,500,000,000 pounds, valued at $250,000,000. Of late years, also the manufacture of cotton has taken a great leap in the Southern States, their mills, which now produce $50,000,000 worth of goods annually, have trebled their capacity and the value of their products within a decade.

Ten years ago New England produced 70 per cent of the cotton goods, but the proportion is considerably less. Since 1880 the cotton mills of the South have increased from 180 to 230, and the spindles from 667,000 to 2,065,800, and the value of their products threefold.

ENORMOUS DEVELOPMENT IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

The coal fields of the Mississippi basin cover an area of 175,000 square miles, about one-fourth that of Mexico, and produce 85,000,000 tons of coal annually. In the Southern States iron and coal are generally found together in quantities, which fact is having too much to do with the astonishing increase of iron manufactures which has taken place in this section within the past decade. The Upper Lake region furnishes the Northern States with the bulk of the ore which they consume. In the production of pig iron Alabama now stands third in the United States; Illinois is fourth, Pennsylvania and Ohio first and second. Of the 9,500,000 tons produced throughout the country, the States of the Mississippi basin are credited with over 80 per cent.

In the manufacture of steel (including rails) Pennsylvania and Illinois alone produce four-fifths of the total output of 4,500,000 tons. Furthermore, the Mississippi basin is steadily advancing to supremacy formerly enjoyed by the more Eastern States as manufacturers.

Minneapolis is the greatest milling center in the world. Milwaukee, Chicago, and St. Louis are famous manufacturers. The breweries of Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis are the largest in the universe. Chicago is the grand center for the manufacture of machinery and agricultural implements. Michigan furniture has a world-wide fame.

Ten years ago of the $5,300,000,000 which represented the total value of the country's manufactures, the Mississippi basin produced nearly two-thirds. The proportion now reaches 70 per cent. A decade ago it was producing three-fourths of the flour (valued at $585,185,000), four-fifths of the agricultural implements and wagons ($133,600,000), and about one-half of the malt liquor ($101,000,000), while the lumber product ($270,000,000) was a Northwestern and Southern monopoly. In 1890 these totals had been increased by fully 30 per cent, the country tributary to the Mississippi Valley earning three-fourths of the increase.

THE CAUSE OF THE PHENOMENON.

This phenomenon is said to be due to the rigid quarantine regulations of New Orleans, which prohibit the entrance of steamers to the port from the southern countries during five or six months of the year without long and expensive delays. Several attempts have been made to secure modification of these regulations under a system of inspection at ports of departure, by which those vessels which bring clean bills of health from American inspectors may be able to land their cargoes without detention at quarantine, but the Louisiana State Board of Health declined to relax their rules even for the benefit of steamers that come from noninfected ports.

The Illinois Central and Southern Pacific Railways have been ready for several years to establish lines of steamships between New Orleans and the northern ports of Central and South America, provided such modifications could be secured, but have been compelled to abandon the projects, and let the trade go the other way.

THE TRADE OUGHT TO GO SOUTHWARD.

Two countries that draw a large proportion of their supplies from Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, and Alabama, and which supply fully 50 per cent of the goods imported from Latin America to the same localities, there are several projects of great importance at present under consideration.

These are the railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, the completion of the railroad from Guatemala City to the Caribbean Sea, the Nicaragua Canal, and the completion of the railway across Costa Rica. Most of these projects are well under way toward completion, and it is not unlikely that the next year or two will see most of them completed. The successful building of any one of these will mean the opening to the manufacturers of the Mississippi Valley of markets of the west coast of Mexico, Central America, and South America, which have been controlled for a great number of years by the merchants of Germany, Great Britain, France, and Italy, and while it would be too much to expect that all of its trade would be diverted to the United States upon the completion of one of these means of interoceanic transportation, at the same time the nearer the market the more possibility there is for the increase of business.

Under present conditions the west coast of South America is nearer commercially to Europe than it is to the markets of the United States, with the sole exception of the port of San Francisco. Lines of steamers are handling the freight from these ports around Cape Horn to Europe for less rates than are charged to bring these goods via the Isthmus of Panama to the United States. This state of affairs will be modified by the construction of any one of these means of communication, and a glance at the map will show that as a direct line from Chicago south will pass through Yucatan, Honduras, and Salvador, leaving to its eastward the Republics of Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and all of the west coast of South America, so the business of these countries eventually will reach its natural markets, the Mississippi Valley, and be distributed through the natural lines of transportation.

At the present time there are some 330 houses located in New York City engaged in commerce with the Latin-American countries. In New Orleans there are about 25 houses engaged in the same commerce with those countries. Taking into consideration the respective populations of the two cities it will be seen what the possibilities of increase of trade are in New Orleans and while the majority of the commission houses in New Orleans are not as powerful, as rich, nor do they do as large a business with the Latin-American countries, at the same time the probabilities seem to me far greater in favor of an increase in New Orleans with the whole Mississippi Valley to draw from than they are in the East.

Mr. President, this whole question of reciprocity broadens and deepens the more it is considered and discussed. The results of the adoption of this policy have, as I think I have shown, already been most gratifying and satisfactory, but slight as to what they may and will be under the direction of intelligent and permanent legislation and the impulse and guidance of wise and aggressive administration.

What has already taken place under this policy is but the forerunner of what must surely follow—the budding or blossom of a rich and abundant fruitage in the future.

Yet we are called upon to throw all to the winds, and with one fell swoop to destroy not only all that has been thus far accomplished, but to defer the hope of reëntering upon the same lines for a long time to come.

While other countries, and especially many of those to which we look for markets and trade, are adopting this policy among themselves as an advance in commerce and civilization, we are not only to abandon all but to place ourselves in an attitude where it can be recovered only under great difficulties.

This country, of all others, occupies the vantage ground in securing results growing from reciprocal relations with others. The phenomenal resources of the country, giving such great purchasing power and making us the largest consumers of and customers for the products, both in the way of luxuries and necessities, imported from other countries, places the key of the situation in the hands of our Government and enables it to almost absolutely dictate such terms as will secure for her people new and extended markets.

Yet it is now deliberately proposed to surrender this key and all the power that it represents.

Our free-trade friends, believing that there should be no restriction whatever placed upon commerce and trade with other countries, indulge in the illusive fallacy that the demand of European countries for our agricultural and food products is largely limited by the restrictions placed upon the importations of their manufactured goods.

In my judgment, there is absolutely nothing whatever in this proposition. Great Britain would not purchase a bushel of wheat, nor a barrel of flour, nor a pound of pork more from us if all tariff laws were stricken from our statutes. Great Britain buys whatever she requires where she can secure it at the lowest prices. The laws of commerce and trade are as rigid and unchangeable as "the laws of the Medes and Persians."

With the people of Great Britain, as other countries, it is not a matter of friendship, amity, or good neighborhood, but absolutely a cold-blooded business proposition. They take our wheat as against Russia, Austra-Hungary, India, or Australia, or other wheat-producing regions if they can secure it on better terms; and so with our pork, beef, butter, and cheese, and other products that we export so largely; and the same is true with Germany and France.

Germany for a long time refused to take our pork product upon the pretext that it was diseased, and continued to do so until they saw that its people were to be deprived of our market for their beet sugar. How long do you suppose that Germany will receive our pork under the present duties, with the duty on sugar restored by our Government? Who supposes for a moment that Germany will longer take our pork on present terms should the reciprocity provisions of the law of 1890 be repealed? Why, Mr. President, I learn that already a bill has been introduced into the German Reichstag, placing a heavy duty on our cotton-seed oil, large quantities of which we have been exporting to Germany without any restriction whatever. Our exports of cotton-seed oil in 1892 reached over a million of gallons, and in value about $600,000.

Should the present treaty provisions with Germany remain intact, and the present law remain unrepealed, a remedy would be quickly found to relieve the exporters of cotton-seed oil to Germany.

France had hitherto placed a very high duty on wheat and flour, and other agricultural products, but in the very face of this proposed legislation, where the duties on many French importations are to be reduced, or still worse, put on the free list, the French Chamber of Deputies has recently increased the duty upon wheat exported into France from 5 to 7 francs per hectoliter, which will absolutely prevent the exportation of a bushel of wheat or a barrel of flour into France; showing again how absolutely idle is the claim that our foreign exportations are lessened on account of our tariff laws.

Even at the present time the French Government is so anxious to protect its own industries that it has placed a discriminating duty, as between flour and wheat, so that it is even now impossible to export a barrel of flour into France. Who for a moment supposes that in case the principle involved in the present reciprocity legislation is maintained our Government can not find a remedy for this discrimination against our agricultural products? Why should we not place restrictive duties on the wines, brandy, and silks, and the multitude of articles that we import from France until they accord to us fair play by the removal of restrictive duties on our agricultural products?

IN CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, I presume it is safe to assume that this remarkable bill, or something substantially like it, now pending in the Senate, will, with all its incongruities and inconsistencies, be enacted into law. The Wilson bill, as coming from the House, had the merit, at least, of responding to some extent to the declarations and the alleged principles of the Democratic party.

I presume there is no one who will have the hardihood even to claim that the bill now before the Senate does anything of the kind. The bill as reported from the Finance Committee, has not even this merit. It repudiates in every line and every paragraph almost, the declarations of the Chicago platform in favor of a tariff for revenue, as amplified by Democratic speakers in and out of Congress, and by the Democratic press, generally of the country.

But in the bill as coming from the House, and the one reported to the Senate from the Finance Committee, there is evidently the one common purpose, and that of prostrating and destroying the great industries of the country, without raising the revenue necessary for the support of the Government, or at least not raising it by means resorted to for raising such revenue hitherto invoked for that purpose.

It is fortunate, no doubt, for the Democratic party, if not for the country, that in both Houses of Congress it can stand on this common platform.

Mr. President, from what I learn, I imagine there will be no further attempt made by the party in either House of Congress to pass any bill having in view the vindication of Democratic declarations or principles, but to pass any kind of a bill upon which can be placed the Democratic coat of arms.

Therefore, Mr. President, I assume that this bill, with all its absurdities and enormities, is to become a law, and that necessary concessions are to be made to secure such a result.

The sugar trust and sugar refiners have been reconciled; the sugar producers have been stampeded from the position taken early in the session and cowed into submission; the whisky trust and the distillers are jubilant at their prospects, and a sop has been thrown to the coal and iron ore interests. So that those representing such interests are supposed to be in line.

And beyond all, the bill is to receive the support of the "solid South." Hence it is safe to assume that a bill akin to this, at least, will become a law.

But, Mr. President, as a lover of my country and a believer in its institutions and destiny, I look forward to this proposed legislation with apprehension and alarm. It can not bring good results; it can but prove disastrous to the best interests of the country.

I wish our friends on the other side might call a halt, that they might pause in their mad purpose and abandon the ill-advised course upon which they have entered. Let them not forget that "Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat," but even at this late hour let them reflect and consider that the interests of the country, and the whole country, are more sacred than those of any party or any section. But if they do not, as I fear they will not, they must not for a moment think that this is the end.

They can rest assured that the people of the country are not to stand by and see all their great industries wrecked and destroyed; their markets taken from them, and the doors closed to securing the new ones; labor degraded and civilization turned backward, without a determined protest.

Should you succeed in enacting this legislation, we must appeal to the people of the country, a higher tribunal than the Senate or Congress of the United States, and from which there is no appeal.

Of the ultimate result there can be no doubt. The premonitory mutterings as indicated in the elections throughout the country in the past few months are but a prelude to the storm that is gathering.

The firing on Fort Sumter united the Northern States in defense of the Union.

The passage of this bill in anything like its present form will again unite them in the protection of their industries and material interests; in preserving their markets, maintaining and elevating their standard of labor, and securing for the future the grandest civilization that has ever existed in the history of the world.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me one moment?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. By permission of the Senator from Oregon, I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to consider the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Florida, if he does not succeed in disposing of the bill during the morning hour, to continue with it during the day?

Mr. CALL. I certainly do not wish to antagonize any consent agreement which has been heretofore made.

Mr. DOLPH. I am asking the question because, while I am not very familiar with the provisions of the present bill, I have for some years, since I have been in the Senate, given some attention to the subject of fortifications, and should like to be present when the bill is considered and disposed of.

Mr. CALL. If it will suit the convenience of the Senate I shall call up the bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from Florida will take notice of the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] gave notice of his desire to address the Senate immediately after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose the Senator from Florida simply refers to the morning hour and does not expect to occupy the time of the Senate after 1 o'clock.

Mr. CALL. Certainly not.

Mr. HARRIS. That will not interfere with the Senator from Texas or any other Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish to say, with the permission of the two Senators who are on the floor, that I desire to submit some observations upon the fortifications appropriation bill, and I had requested that notice might be given me before it should be taken up. The Senator from Florida informed me that it had been decided to take up the bill to-morrow; but it did not then occur to me that under the unanimous agreement of the Senate to proceed from 1 o'clock to 5 o'clock with the tariff bill it would be possible to go on with the fortifications bill for any considerable length of time. I am certain, from what I know of the views I desire to submit to the Senate, that it will be impossible to make any progress with the bill before 1 o'clock to-morrow, and it will be a mere form to take it up, because I shall require more time than would be allowed to make a beginning in the suggestions I have to make on that bill, and, certainly, if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is not so much fatigued with the speech he is making on the tariff bill that he can not commence the discussion on the fortifications bill, its consideration will take the whole day. I suggest that there be consent kindly given by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that a day may be given to the fortifications bill when it is taken up. It will be useless, I know, to take it up to-morrow between 12 and 1 o'clock.

Mr. QUAY. I merely ask for information whether there is not a special order for to-morrow for an executive session to consider the contested Florida cases immediately after the morning business is closed? I have a recollection of that sort, but I am not certain. If that be the case, it seems to me it will interfere with the consideration of the appropriation bill mentioned by the senior Senator from Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no recollection of anything of that kind.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think there was any special order. I think there was a suggestion of postponing a matter in executive session until perhaps that day; but that does not make a special order to any extent or in anyway whatever.

Mr. PASCO. If it be proper to refer to the matter in open session, there was a unanimous agreement of the kind stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] entered into at one of the sessions last week. I should not myself have been the first to refer to it.

Mr. HARRIS. A unanimous agreement that the particular matter referred to should be considered at a given time?

Mr. PASCO. Yes, to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CALL. I have given the notice, and will let the proceeding take its course.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH resumed the floor in continuation of the speech begun by him on the 20th instant. After having spoken twenty minutes—

Mr. QUAY (at 5 o'clock p. m.) Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the hour has arrived at which under the agreement the discussion of the pending bill is to terminate for the day.

Mr. DOLPH. I am right in the midst of a table, but I do not want to violate the agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator to withdraw his remarks to the point where he began to read the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall do that. I will withdraw what I have said in stating the table and not print it in the RECORD. I shall not divide the table, but will repeat that portion of it when I resume my remarks.

[Mr. DOLPH'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. GRAY. I wish to say, what has been said before, that there is nothing in the agreement, in its letter or in its spirit, to prevent any Senator from continuing the debate after 5 o'clock. But it is perfectly apparent, of course, and it has been apparent here for two weeks, that the other side do not intend that the debate shall continue any longer than possible, and that the time shall be consumed and wasted.

Mr. QUAY. I know nothing as to the disposition on this side of the Chamber, but for myself I have conscientious scruples against continuing the debate after 5 o'clock.

Mr. GRAY. I believe the Senator has.

Mr. QUAY. And I understand, the other side of the Chamber desire an executive session.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Delaware is very unkind to suggest that time should be wasted. He knows I gave him a great deal of time on Saturday, and that I was very liberal.

Mr. GRAY. I want to return the compliment by giving the Senator plenty of time this afternoon.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. The object is too apparent on the other side in their manner of conducting this debate.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Oregon——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had recognized the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me a moment?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware. I do not think this side of the Chamber should be censured for confining the debate to the terms agreed upon. It was an amicable arrangement that the debate should proceed from 1 o'clock until 5; and now the Senator from Delaware seems to complain of the Senators on this side of the Chamber because they ask that the discussion may be confined each day to those hours. Whether it was in the language of the agreement or not, it was certainly perfectly well understood that the discussion would cease at 5 o'clock, and that the Senate would then proceed to the consideration of other business. Now the Senator from Delaware reproaches the Senators on this side of the Chamber because they are not willing to go on after 5 o'clock, and says that it is wasting time. Certainly there has never been any more time than has been needed after 5 o'clock for other business and for executive sessions.

Mr. GRAY. Nobody on this side misunderstands the Senator from New Hampshire, and the country does not misunderstand him. The tactics of the other side are perfectly apparent.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 24, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. HEPBURN. I interpose an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa objects. The question then is on approving the Journal.

The question being taken; there were, on a division (called for by Mr. HEPBURN)—ayes 66, noes 3.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers to act during the call of the yeas and nays the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER].

Mr. STORER. The point of order, or objection, was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to appointing the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STORER. I have no objection to serving; but I thought the Speaker might be under a misapprehension as to who made the point.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will please act as one of the tellers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and Mr. HEPBURN having taken their places at the desk as tellers, the question was taken; and there were—yeas 212, nays 0, answered "present" 6, not voting 135; as follows:

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my name recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the House during the roll call and failed to hear his name?

Mr. PAGE. I can not say that I was, during the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent, then.

Mr. PAGE. Can I not be recorded as present and not voting?

The SPEAKER. Not after the completion of the roll call.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State concerning a dispatch from the United States minister at Honolulu and reply thereto.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C., April 2, 1894.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Bureau of Statistics, requesting authority to print the annual statistical abstract of foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. This communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter should be referred to the Committee on Printing. It seems to be a subject which refers exclusively to printing.

The SPEAKER. This is an estimate submitted for the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then it is not the communication I thought it was.

The SPEAKER. It is a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting one from the Bureau of Statistics, in respect to authority to print the annual statistical abstract.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, referring as it does to the printing of the annual abstract, I think it should go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Secretary of the Treasury sends it as an estimate for the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then it is not properly indorsed on the back, I should think.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HINES] asks leave of absence, for a few days, on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Assistant Attorney-General, transmitting two judgments rendered against the United States arising from Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the following cases: John Bray, Jacob Grim, and J. F. Pierce vs. The United States; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SALE OF RAILWAY TICKETS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 443) to provide for the sale of new tickets by the railway companies of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, no reports being submitted.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for consideration the regular order of business for this day. This day being set apart for business from the Committee on the District of Columbia, I desire to call up that business.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that District business is not the regular order. We are entitled to the morning hour for the consideration of bills before District business.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any authority in support of that position?

Mr. MCRAE. The rule, I think, is so plain that there can be no question about it. I have never known it questioned until the gentleman from Missouri questioned it in this Congress. There may have been no decision upon the subject, but it has been the practice of the House, and I think there is no doubt about the meaning of the rule from its language.

Mr. HEARD. I only desire to say that I never heard this question presented or never heard the proposition suggested until made by the gentleman from Arkansas a short time ago. The Chair stated then, it being a new question, that it would take the matter under advisement. I have no captious objection to make; if the Chair holds it to be a proper construction to be put on the rule I am willing to yield. Otherwise I call up for consideration the District business.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the question of order raised?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that the District business is not in order, under the rule, until after the second morning hour for the consideration of business.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, clause 2 of of Rule XXIV, seems to settle the question. That rule provides that—

On all other days than the first and third Mondays in each month, as soon as the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees,

And so forth.

So that the regular order, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] called for it a few moments ago, would have been District business, and not the call of committees, even, for reports.

The SPEAKER. That rule relates to suspension day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I beg pardon. That is so.

Mr. MCRAE. It appears to be very conclusive that on other mornings we take the regular order, calling the committees, unless the privileged motion, to go into committee for the consideration of appropriation bills, is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Rule XXVI, Mr. Speaker, provides that—

The second and fourth Mondays in each month shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

The entire day under that rule, it seems to me, would be set apart for the consideration of business from the District Committee, and it has always been so held since I have been a member of Congress. There has never been a time when the second and fourth Mondays were not given to the District of Columbia when demanded. It seems to me this is not the time to depart from the precedent that we have been following so long.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is very much mistaken about the precedent. While I am not now able to find any decision, I do not think that the committee, until this Congress, has ever insisted that it had the right to take away the second morning hour. My recollection is that the custom is the reverse of what the gentleman says, and the rule which the gentleman himself has cited, which only excepts the first and third Mondays from order of business in Rule XXIV, appears to me to be conclusive upon the point that upon all other days the fourth clause of this rule shall be executed. Only the first and third Mondays are excepted from the fifth clause, so that upon the second, fourth, and fifth Mondays we are entitled to have the hour for business as we are on all other days, unless a privileged motion is made to go into Committee of the Whole House, under clause 9 of Rule XVI.

The setting apart of the second and fourth Mondays for District business does not take away the first or second morning hour. This only allows such business after the House has proceeded with the regular order of business down to and including clause 6 of Rule XXIV. You can not find any authority for calling the committees for reports unless you find it in the second clause of Rule XXIV, and on these days we are entitled to the morning hour just as we are on all days. Clause 4 requires that after the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order for one hour. So it follows that when he calls the committees for reports the next business in order is to call them for business.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this setting apart of the second and fourth Mondays is analogous to setting apart Friday of each week for the Private Calendar, and on Friday of each week it has always been the custom to dispense with the second morning hour for business. There is never a second morning hour for the consideration of bills on Friday. And the call of committees is simply for reports of a private character.

Mr. MCRAE. The third paragraph of clause 6 of Rule XXIV expressly provides that after the morning hour the motion may be made on Friday. There is no such provision in the rule relating to the District of Columbia. The gentleman is mistaken in the statement that on Fridays only private bills can be reported. That was the old rule, but that has been changed, and now public bills can be reported and may be considered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. At one time, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned, we all understand that the second morning hour for the consideration of business called up by committees was not limited to sixty minutes. That was the old hour. It was called an hour for the consideration of business, but it did not end in sixty minutes. It continued the entire day out, unless the House decided otherwise. Such was the ruling in the Fifty-first Congress, and always prior to that time when that rule obtained. Now, I should like to know of what use it would have been to set apart the second and fourth Mondays for District day if you could take up business in the second morning hour under that old rule and consume the entire day in consideration of business in the second morning hour. It seems to me that all the rulings and precedents have been the other way.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the rule of construction which always applies in cases of this kind is that the rules should be so construed as to give effect to all the rules in the book, if possible, and where there is a conflict which is irreconcilable, the last enactment should control. But taking this code of rules as a body, we find two rules referring to this day. The one is clause 2 of Rule XXIV, which says:

On all days other than the first and third Mondays in each month, as soon as business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of—

This is one of those other days.

As soon as the business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees.

We have had that, and therefore we have given effect to that part of this rule. Now, in Rule XXVI, clause 2, we find the further provision that—

The second and fourth Mondays in each month shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

Now, this is consideration of business and must take effect at this time, and as against all other matters of consideration. We have simply called the committees as provided under the third clause; and it seems to me if the Committee on the District of Columbia now claims the right it has under clause 2 of Rule XXVI, it is entitled to have its business considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. While there appears to be some conflict in these rules which have been cited, yet the Chair thinks they may be so construed as to be in harmony with each other and with the intent and purpose of the House in establishing the rules. The first clause of Rule XXVI reads:

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by the House.

That is the language of the rule. If there were no other provision in the rule relating to Friday than the one just read in Rule XXVI the same doubt might arise that now arises as to the second and fourth Mondays, if claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia; but there is another provision in the rule as to Friday, which illustrates the purpose and intent of the first clause of Rule XXVI. The third paragraph of clause 6 of Rule XXIV provides—

On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar.

Now, Friday is set apart by the rule for the consideration of private business; but another rule says that you can only reach that after the morning hour by a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Strictly speaking, we have but one morning hour; that is the hour for the call of committees for reports. The other is an hour for the consideration of measures, and is not designated generally in the rules as a morning hour, but in practice we call it so. It is a time for the consideration of measures. Now, the Chair does not think it was the intention to put the Committee of the District of Columbia in any less favorable position as to the consideration of its business than was done with reference to private business before the House. Indeed, the second clause of Rule XXVI seems to be designed to protect this committee, as it does not protect the other committees of the House. On Friday the private business may be disposed of by a vote of the House so that public business can be proceeded with. Not so as to the business with the Committee on the District of Columbia. The second clause of Rule XXVI provides—

2. The second and fourth Mondays in each month shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

There is no provision, as in the case of private bills, for dispensing with this business and proceeding to other business. It has been held by predecessors in the chair that the only way to dispose of this claim of the Committee on the District of Columbia is to raise the question of consideration on every single bill that they may call up; in other words, that the day was dedicated and set apart to the consideration of their business, and the only way that the House could avoid it would be to raise the question of consideration on every bill; and gentlemen who have been here some time have seen that done often. When the committee would call up a bill, the question of consideration would be raised, bill by bill. So that practically this day seems to be dedicated and assigned to the business of that committee.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas claims that, while this is true, their day does not begin until after the second morning hour. While this would be putting this committee in a less favorable position than the committee having charge of business before the House on Fridays, on the Private Calendar, the Chair is inclined to construe the rule as to the time when the District Committee may call up its business is the same time as that at which on Friday a motion may be made to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, to-wit: after the call of committees for reports. Therefore the Chair holds it is in order on the second and fourth Mondays after the call of committees for reports to call up for consideration business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6171) relating to the change of the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, which bill was under consideration on the last District day, and was laid over by agreement of gentlemen in order that agreement might be effected between those who entertained different opinions of it.

The SPEAKER. Is it in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HEARD. It is in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company.

Mr. HEARD. The bill has been read once.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I trust no action will be taken until copies of this bill can be put upon the desk of members, so that we may know how to pass upon the bill.

Mr. HEARD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is not a new bill. It is the same bill as previously presented.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But we ought to have copies of the bill before any action is taken.

Mr. HEARD. Copies of the bill can be had in the usual way, at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There does not seem to be any copies of it. I have called for one and have not been able to get it.

Mr. HEARD. I yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object. I want to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this bill has been read and has been considered for two days.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What is the reason we can not have copies of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes they have been sent for.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, if it will save any controversy I have no objection to having the bill read again, but I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] does not insist upon that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee was recognized.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Before we begin the consideration of this bill in the House I want to know whether the rules of the Committee of the Whole apply, so that the bill can be amended and put in proper shape.

The SPEAKER. They do not.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I shall have to object to the bill being considered in the House unless the rules of the Committee of the Whole can be applied to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the bill has already been considered for two days.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But not agreed upon; and with the understanding when we ceased its consideration on the last District day that some very important amendments were to be proposed.

Mr. HEARD. They are to be.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the point that a bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole must be made before consideration of it begins.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this bill by unanimous consent is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and has been so considered on two District days.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair has no knowledge of that agreement. The gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. DOCKERY], who presided when this bill was last under consideration, will please take the chair.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before the Speaker leaves the chair I desire to know if it would be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill even though it has been partly considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have read the rule which governs that point. The Clerk will read clause 3 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires that the point must be made before the consideration of the measure has commenced; but the Chair understands that this bill has been before the House on two District days, and has been considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The bill, therefore, is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the five-minute rule obtains and the rule as to offering amendments as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. With the same opportunity for amendment as though the bill were being considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. With the same opportunity, except that the previous question may be demanded in the House, which could not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The statement of the Chair covers the point upon which I desire information, and I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. Has the bill been read under the five-minute rule?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has been read down to the second section.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some misunderstanding about that. The gentleman from Missouri told me a moment ago that there was still to be some general debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is a mistake. General debate was closed by unanimous consent, and the bill was read down to the second section.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I so understood the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there an amendment pending?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. COOMBS. There are amendments pending, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There are no amendments to the first section. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] is to the third section of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill, the Chair understands, has been read under the five-minute rule down to the second section?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has, and there is no amendment pending.

The SPEAKER. Then the Clerk will report the second section.

Mr. HEPBURN. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee in what part of this bill the provision comes as to the time of completing the work?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There has been no amendment offered as to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] and agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is in the first section.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] states that he desires to offer an amendment to the first section. While I think that I might technically object, as the first section has been passed, I do not do so. Let the gentleman offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). The gentleman from Iowa will send up his amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move, in line 22 of page 2, to strike out "two" and insert "one," so as to read "within one year thereafter."

The amendment was read by the Clerk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentleman from Iowa that the bill as it has been prepared requires this company to complete this change of motive power on the Ninth street line within one year; and it is then provided that within two years after that the change shall be completed on the main line. Now the gentleman, as I understand, proposes that on the main line this change shall be completed within one year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think that will be a very short time; but I am perfectly willing to let the amendment pass without any controversy.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I want to call attention to the fact that the amendment as proposed will give two years from the passage of this act for the conversion of the east and west line into an electric line. I think that is entirely too long a time. The bill allows one year from the time of its passage for the conversion of the Ninth street line into an electric line, and allows two years from the finishing of that line for the conversion of the east and west line, making three years which the company will have from the date of the passage of the act for converting the east and west line into an electric line. Now, Mr. Speaker, one year is enough to change this whole system into an electric line. Therefore I move to amend the amendment——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Insert one month, and then it will allow one year and one month for the change.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I will be more liberal than that. I will move to amend the amendment by striking out "one year" and inserting "six months," so as to give this company eighteen months in which to make the change on the east and west line and one year on the Ninth street line.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why can not the change be made simultaneously on the two lines?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The only difference, if I may be indulged——

Mr. WASHINGTON. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "one year" and inserting "six months."

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the reason given for asking so much time for converting the east and west line into an electric line is that this company proposes to experiment for another twelve months on the Ninth street line, claiming that the Buda-Pesth system is not yet perfect. Why, sir, there has been in operation in this city for more than a year a railroad line running from Seventh street along U to Nineteenth which is considered by all experts and practical railroad men as a perfectly working road, no longer an experiment. I insist that this Metropolitan Company, possessing so valuable a franchise, can float its bonds at the present time with the greatest ease for the conversion of its entire line within a reasonable time. Twelve months on the north and south line would be more than reasonable.

Why, sir, the whole work on the Ninth street line could be completed in four months from the passage of this act. One reason they ask for more time is that they say they have a suit pending in court in regard to a forfeiture of their charter, which it is now proposed by a compromise to refer to the court of appeals——

Mr. HEARD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Very well.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman does not want to create an erroneous impression. Now, he says the reason this company asks for a year is because of the suit which is pending. I wish to say that is not the reason. The reason is that gentlemen who appeared before the committee—engineers who propose to build this road—stated emphatically that it would take six months to get ready for putting in these electric appliances, and would take a year to complete the work.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then I suggest that they ought to discharge those engineers and employ competent ones if they make that statement.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yielded to my friend from Missouri for a question, but instead of that he has controverted a statement of mine and made a speech on the question.

Mr. HEARD. No; I merely made a statement.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, I have authority for my statement that this Ninth street line could be converted into an underground Buda-Pesth system inside of four months, and that authority is one of the attorneys himself of this road, which information he gave to me in the hall out there not exceeding twenty minutes ago.

The fact of the matter is that the emissaries of this road have been coming here before Congress for three years trying to humbug Congress and deceive the public in this District as to the work and as to their compliance with the law. But one of their attorneys stated to me within twenty minutes past that this road would be able to convert the Ninth street line into the underground system in four months. I said, "If that be true, why is it that you ask a year for this work?" He replied, "Because we have a suit pending, steps having been taken to forfeit the charter, as well as a question as to some taxes. If these questions were settled we could do the work in four months."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is not the gentleman from Tennessee exhibiting a little feeling over the matter?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I can not hear the gentleman from Indiana, but hope he is not trying to be facetious.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Not at all; but as the gentleman appeared to be excited, I was trying to get at the bottom of his excitement.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything whatever about the "emissaries" who have been hanging around the Halls of this House trying to humbug Congress and influence legislation. They seem to have found my friend from Tennessee from his own statement. I have not seen any of them, nor do I know anything about them since they were before our committee, at which time it was stated by Messrs. Wright and Mysenberg, who represent the Buda-Pesth system, and who proposed to take the contract for converting this line, that in their judgment it would take six months to get ready the materials for this work, and they could complete it inside of a year. This is the statement of the engineers of the company before our committee, and I do not know anything which has been said to the contrary by anyone who is competent to determine the facts. That is the authority I have for my statement, and I regard it as good authority.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How long is the Ninth street line from one end to the other of this Metropolitan Railroad?

Mr. HEARD. Something over 3¼ miles, I think.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Three miles and three-quarters.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is exactly it. My colleague is correct. Now, how long would it take an ordinary force of hands to dig a double trench 3¼ miles long and put in the necessary supports for the crossties and rails that are already in place?

Mr. HEARD. My friend from Tennessee discloses the fact by his inquiry that he does not understand my point. These gentlemen, I will tell him again, stated that if they got the contract for this work it would take them six months to get the material on the ground to begin putting in this work; but that after that was done, they would be able to prepare the trench, put in the appliances, and complete the work in four months; but as a matter of safety, in order to provide against contingencies of weather and other obstacles that might embarrass the work, they asked a little longer time than that.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri whether it would not be exceedingly inconvenient for all purposes of business on that street if the entire work should be completed along its entire distance in four months?

Mr. HEARD. Well, I do not know, but I should think it would be.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Would it not be less inconvenient to the people to complete the work in four months than to have it going on for a year and a half?

Mr. HERMANN. If it extended over the longer time a part of it could be done and finished before other parts of the street would be opened.

Mr. HEARD. I think there was nothing unreasonable in the suggestion made by these gentlemen before the committee. It is altogether possible that they may get the work done in the time fixed by the gentleman's amendment. At all events, if they can not get it all in, Congress could relieve them by granting an extension of time if necessary. And while I do not know that the eighteen months would be sufficient, yet I do not see any special objection to fixing that time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the situation of this section at the present time is this: That under the original proposition embodied in the bill one year is allowed for the completion of the work on the main line, and two years additional upon all lines other than the main line. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] moved an amendment striking out two years and inserting one year, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] moved to amend the amendment by striking out one year and inserting six months. So if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is adopted it will give the company one year and six months from the time the bill becomes a law to make the improvement suggested here. Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], if I understand correctly his position, states that he sees no objection to limiting the company to eighteen months.

Mr. HEARD. I say that it may be a reasonable limit. I do not know. If it is not, however, the matter can be considered, and no doubt will be fairly considered, by Congress. I apprehend it would be time enough, but do not undertake to say.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then, if I understand, the gentleman has no objection to the amendment fixing the limit at six months in addition to the one year. Is there any objection to that I ask?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am waiting for the gentleman to conclude.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] in charge of the bill if he personally has any objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. None in the world. I propose to accept the amendment if we can go on and have a vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I be permitted to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In just a moment. I desire to say a word further on that, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me that the time proposed by the gentleman who offered the last amendment is exceedingly liberal. If this were in any other city than Washington, the entire improvements suggested in this bill could be made within four months' time. The main line is less than 4 miles in length, and with a force of hands such as this company ought to command, they certainly could make every improvement that is suggested here within ninety days, and that, too, without disturbing the public travel or the public in any manner whatever. It is perfectly childish to say that this company should be allowed the time that was originally suggested here in which to make these improvements.

I sympathize with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], who made the suggestion that the managers of this railroad company are attempting to ignore Congress and the public, and are simply looking out for their private interests alone. It is our duty to look after the interests of the public, and to compel this contumacious railway company not only to make the improvements that are suggested in the bill, but to make them within a limited time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, so far as I am concerned, I believe the road will do this work inside of eighteen months. The only reason given for greater extension of time is that there is no specific motor now known by which they can go to work and operate this road. If there was, they could put it into operation in less than eighteen months, but I believe it can be done in eighteen months, and therefore I make no objection to the proposed amendment, and ask that a vote be taken.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the amendment I offered, and in its place substitute the following:

Strike out all after the word "act," in line 14, on page 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move as a substitute for the motion now pending the following:

Strike out all of section 1, after the word "act," in line 14 of page 2.

Under the provisions of the bill as it now stands this company would have a period of three years after the approval of the act in which to complete the improvement——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will allow the Clerk to state the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Your amendment accomplishes just what his does.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; it makes it all to be done in one year.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "act," in line 14, page 2, strike out the following language: "On the streets, avenues, and at the places following, to wit: Beginning at Four-and-a-half street and P street southwest; running thence north on Four-and-a-half street to Missouri avenue; thence west on Missouri avenue to Sixth street; thence north on Sixth street to B street; thence west on B street to Ninth street; thence north on Ninth street to Florida avenue; thence northwesterly on Florida avenue to Tenth street: And provided further, That within two years thereafter the change to an underground system shall be completed upon all the residue of the lines of said company, including an extension thereof on East Capitol street from Ninth street east to Thirteenth street east, around both sides of Lincoln Square."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under the provisions of the bill as it reads now, on the main east and west line of this Metropolitan road they will have three years in which to complete this work. That road is about 4 miles long. Three years would give 939 working days in which to lay 1,280 rods of this improvement, or a rod and a quarter a day. Now, it is nonsense for gentlemen to talk about there being a necessity for that great length of time. A rod and a quarter a day for a great corporation like this in a work of this kind!

We have had an object lesson here in reference to another improvement, on the Seventh street line, where half that distance was accomplished in three or four months. A company that wanted to accomplish results succeeded in doing so in that time; and you must remember there were much greater difficulties in engineering than upon this line. It seems to me they could undoubtedly within a year's time make the entire improvement. That will have given them, from the time that Congress first ordered this change of system, six years and six months in which to have accomplished the command of Congress. I think that is long enough.

Mr. PICKLER. As I understand, the different gentlemen having different views as to this bill came to some practical agreement two weeks ago as to the disposition of the matter. If that is so, I should like to hear a statement of the agreement.

Mr. HEPBURN. That was with regard to another proposition. I understand from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] he has an amendment that he supposes will cover that matter.

Mr. PICKLER. I should be glad to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] or some other gentleman state what the whole proposition now is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That has no relation to this feature of the bill. That does not come in now.

Mr. HEPBURN. That proposition, as I understand it, was with reference to the indebtedness or the manner of disposing of the indebtedness.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, is not that in this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; but in another section.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter, and it seems to me that we ought to vote on it advisedly and not extend the time for this work, as we shall do if we adopt these provisions, to eight years from the time when the improvement was first ordered by Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman is speaking of the bill as it originally stood, but the amendments make the time eighteen months, and that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I believe the work could be done in a year if the company had the motive power fixed and could go right ahead.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman can advise himself any day he chooses of the fact that a road a mile and an eighth long, operated by the underground electric system, has existed in this city for nearly a year, and that during that period it has not been interrupted for a solitary moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My friend ought not to make that broad statement, for I know, as a matter of fact, that it has been interrupted, and that the cars have stopped in the middle of the street. It may, however, be a successful motive power, I do not say that it is not, but I am told there have been failures elsewhere. However, if the work can be completed in a year I believe these gentlemen intend to complete it in a year, and I will make no opposition to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HEPBURN was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the next section.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is still another amendment that I desire to offer to that section.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You have it nearly stricken out now.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the fourteenth line of section 1 the following words: "And, in default of such completion, all acts or parts of acts chartering or extending the said road are hereby repealed."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The object of that amendment, I suppose, is to make it certain that this company will carry out in good faith the provisions of this bill. Now, there is no question that the company can make the improvements proposed in the first section within ninety days. I venture the suggestion that if this were in the city of Chicago the work would be done within thirty days from the time it was commenced, and if it were in any other city than this it could be done within from thirty to sixty days.

Now, if we allow twelve months for this company it seems to me that this is giving them latitude enough; and if this amendment is adopted it is notice to the gentlemen who own and operate this road that their charter will be taken away if the improvement which Congress has for several years been seeking to have made is not completed within the time fixed in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman regard the phraseology of that amendment as being fortunate?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not express any opinion as to that.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "act," in line 14, page 2, the following words: "Provided, There shall be completed an extension thereof on East Capitol street from Ninth street to Thirteenth street east and around both sides of Lincoln Square."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no objection to that amendment.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said company is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its bonds, secured by a mortgage on its franchises and other property, to such amount as may be necessary to pay the cost of the work to be done and of the materials required and the expenses incident to the change to be made as provided in this act, but not in excess of such cost.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Add at the end of line 7: "And said bonds shall not be sold or disposed of at less than their face or par value."

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the object of that amendment——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to invalidate or in anywise affect the suit now pending in any court of the District of Columbia against the said company for the forfeiture of its charter for nonperformance of its duty in respect of paving the spaces between its tracks and 2 feet beyond its exterior rails and the nonpayment of the cost thereof, but the said proceedings may be prosecuted to final judgment as though this act had not been passed; and this act shall not be taken or held to be a waiver of any existing right or cause of forfeiture asserted in the said proceeding: And provided further, That if in said proceeding it shall be adjudged that the charter of said company be forfeited then such judgment may, and shall be, fully canceled and vacated by the payment by said company to the District of Columbia of the sum of $147,507.05 within ninety days from the rendition of said judgment, and thereupon the said company shall be vested with all the corporate rights, powers, and subject to all the duties and obligations conferred or imposed upon it by its original charter and the amendments thereof.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the third section being reached, I desire to say that this is the section upon which debate was had on the preceding days when this bill was under consideration, the section which involves the question of indebtedness of this company to the District. When the bill was under consideration two weeks ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL], who is a member of the District Committee, made a statement to the House which seemed to meet its approval, and suggested that an amendment be drafted referring this question of indebtedness to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, with full power to investigate and ascertain what amount, if any, was due from this railroad company to the District.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all the gentlemen who had participated in the debate on the previous day agreed that with a proper amendment, making this reference to the court of appeals, the opposition would cease on that ground. With that understanding, I withdrew the bill two weeks ago to-day and the District Committee undertook to prepare, and have prepared, an amendment which they think covers this case exactly. This amendment was prepared by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT], who had been opposing the bill up to this time, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB]. It was prepared in the presence and with the approval of Mr. Birney, the United States district attorney, representing the Government of the United States, and by Mr. Thomas, the attorney of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, representing the interest of the District.

It was accepted by those three gentlemen, approved by these attorneys representing the various interests, and was then submitted to the full Committee on the District of Columbia at a meeting of that committee, and it has the unanimous approval of the committee. It is agreed to, then, by the railroad and its attorneys; it is agreed to by the Committee on the District of Columbia; it is agreed to by everybody who has examined it, so far as I know; and with this statement I ask the Clerk to read that which is agreed upon. It is a substitute for the third section of the bill. There are a number of the printed forms, if members will send out to the document room for them. They will find it in the bill H. R. 6727.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a substitute for the third section of the bill, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I offer it on behalf of my colleagues [Mr. ABBOTT, Mr. COGSWELL, and Mr. COBB], and it is indorsed by the entire committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That a transcript of the record of the case of the District of Columbia against the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, at law, numbered 22458, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, together with the original papers and record entries therein, duly certified, shall, by appropriate orders duly entered of record, be transferred and delivered to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, which said court of appeals is hereby vested with original authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine said case without a jury upon the pleas and issues and proofs therein other than the pleas and issues relating to the statute of limitation, and to determine from and upon said record and pleadings and proofs therein contained, and such other proof in the course of said hearing as said court may determine to be necessary in order to dispose of the case upon its merits, what, if any, indebtedness is due to the District of Columbia from the said railroad company in respect of the cause of action stated in the declarations filed in said case, and to enter judgment against said company in favor of the District of Columbia for any sum or sums of money that said court of appeals shall find due from said company in respect of said cause of action, for the amount of which said judgment execution may issue out of said court, and said judgment shall immediately become a lien upon all the property of said company, to be enforced in the manner now provided by law for the enforcement of other liens, and shall be paid within ninety days from the date thereof: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until said company shall file in said court of appeals its consent in writing to the aforesaid transfer of the said case, and also a waiver of all its rights and defenses under the statute of limitation. And also a waiver of all rights, benefits, advantages, and defenses that it has or may have by reason of the decision and judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States made and entered in said case: Provided, That the judgment of the said court of appeals shall be final and that there shall be no appeal therefrom: And provided further, That the cost of said transfer and of the hearing of said case in the court of appeals shall be paid by said railroad company.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a very carefully considered amendment. It protects the interest of the Government and of the District, and it makes the railroad pay all the cost of transfer, whether successful or not, and pay the judgment in ninety days if it is given against the road. It makes them waive the plea of the statute of limitations, and leaves that court to consider the case upon its merits, and to take any more proof, in order to reach the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. And it waives the question of notice?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It leaves the matter to be taken up by the court in such a way as to reach the proof in order to attain the ends of justice.

Mr. HEPBURN. Was this entirely satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was, and to Mr. ABBOTT, who had the matter in charge.

Mr. REED. Has it all been submitted?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think so.

Mr. NORTHWAY. This is to take effect at a certain period. It may not be six months.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is to take effect at a certain period.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then the year may be consumed before it is to take effect.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no; it is to take effect on the passage of the act. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. May I ask the gentleman whether the proposition he now makes absolutely does away with the latter part of section 3, commencing with "And provided further?"

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read the words?

Mr. WARNER. It is quite a long section.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This section takes the place of that section.

Mr. WARNER. And leaves nothing whatever of the third section of the original bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Wait a while; there are several amendments to be offered. This is offered by the committee, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] has an amendment pending to the third section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment to the original text?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is a substitute for the third section, and of course——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the amendment was sent up and read for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There would be no amendment pending, of course.

Mr. COOMBS. My amendment was a substitute for the whole bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York offer it now as an amendment to the original text?

Mr. COOMBS. No. The amendment I offered was a substitute for the whole bill, which entirely changes section 3.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. COOMBS. I am not mistaken.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All that was offered was that the company should pay a certain sum of money, and as presented it was not in order.

Mr. COOMBS. Let the gentleman look at the RECORD and he will see.

Mr. HEARD. I make the point of order that it could not come in at this time. The gentleman's substitute could not be considered until the committee had opportunity to perfect the text of the bill. If the gentleman has offered an amendment which would be considered as a substitute, according to his own theory it is out of order, as I have stated, until the committee shall have had opportunity to perfect the text of their bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But, Mr. Speaker, the statement was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] when there was no amendment pending to the third section. Now, the agreement which was made by the gentleman in charge of this bill with several other members of this House is not an agreement which binds this House. It is simply a conclusion that has been reached by the gentlemen who were in that conference. There are grave reasons to my mind why this section offered as a substitute should not be adopted in its present form, and with the leave of the House I will state briefly some of those objections. Now, if I am correctly informed, when this trouble arose between the Metropolitan Railroad Company and the District of Columbia——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will please suspend a moment. The Chair desires to ascertain whether this proposition was offered as an amendment or as a substitute. The Chair will state that before the agreement was made by unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole some amendments have been offered under the rules——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] had certainly offered an amendment——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To the first section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the first section. But before the making of any agreement, the only amendments which could be offered were an amendment, an amendment to the amendment, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute. The Chair does not remember what amendments had been offered before this agreement was reached.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, I will say that I have tried to keep track of these matters all the time. There was at first general debate on this bill; and the gentleman from Massachusetts stated in general debate that he desired to offer the amendment, inserting the word "electric" in the first section. He also stated that he proposed to offer an amendment to the third section as it then stood. But that was in general debate. Afterward, when the general debate had closed and the House, at my request, took up the bill for consideration as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, the first section was read, and the gentleman from Massachusetts offered his first amendment to the first section. There could be no amendment offered in general debate. Anything that may have been stated or read at that time would not be pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly an amendment could be offered in the time of any gentleman——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But such an amendment would not be pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not in the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all. Notice simply could be given that the amendments would be offered. The bill would not be open to amendment in general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair will state that under the uniform practice of the House amendments could have been offered to this bill—an amendment, an amendment to the amendment, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But no such amendments were offered. When the first section was read, after we had entered upon the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts offered his amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS]—I remember it distinctly—was that before this bill should take effect the company should pay $147,000 into the Treasury. Now, Mr. Speaker, that would not be a substitute for a bill extending the time within which this company shall change its motive power.

Mr. COOMBS. Now, may I be allowed to make my statement? The gentleman from Tennessee has made his with great force.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is only endeavoring to ascertain the facts.

Mr. COOMBS. I want the Chair to have my statement of the case. There were two amendments pending to the bill. I was informed that no other amendment could then be made, but that a substitute for the whole bill would be in order. I therefore sent up to the desk the bill with the third section struck out and a provision substituted for that section, intending that the whole bill as thus sent up should be a substitute for the other, that being the only way at the time for me to get the matter before the House. There were two amendments pending at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] offer his proposition as a substitute for the entire bill?

Mr. COOMBS. The third section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no distinct recollection with regard to this matter; and the clerks advise the Chair that this substitute was not offered——

Mr. COOMBS. Then they did not understand me at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The question is, what did the gentleman from New York offer? I have asked the gentleman to state what he offered. He says that so far as the first section is concerned he offered the identical provision of this bill; and so as to the second section; but that as to the third section he offered a substitute. Now, let that substitute for the third section be presented; and when it is presented our substitute is first in order, being offered by the committee; and if it be voted down, the gentleman's substitute may be in order. But the gentleman's statement is that so far as regards the first and second sections he offered the bill as already before the House, and that the only change proposed by his amendment was in the third section.

Mr. COOMBS. But it was a very material amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I agree that the amendment was very material; but I want this point of order settled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no point of order involved. It is simply a question of fact.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York does not controvert it.

Mr. COOMBS. The Chair can readily understand that there was no opportunity for me to offer another amendment to the bill, and all I could do was to offer a substitute for it. That I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A substitute for what?

Mr. COOMBS. For the whole bill, leaving the first and second sections as they were, and changing merely the third.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's own statement shows that he offered a substitute for the entire bill. That would not have been in order at the time for a vote until the completion of the bill. The third section of the bill is under consideration, and the Committee on the District of Columbia offer a substitute for that section. As soon as the text of the bill is perfected a substitute for the whole bill will be in order. The gentleman from New York offered his substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. COOMBS. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee's substitute, then, is first in order.

Mr. PICKLER. As I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, this bill is being read by sections for amendment. Now, could the gentleman from New York, after we had passed over the first and second sections and reached the third section, offer a substitute for the entire bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was done before the agreement was entered into, by unanimous consent, to consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us have a perfect understanding as to the parliamentary status. My understanding was that, when the matter was up on the day the gentleman from New York offered his amendment, it was an amendment to section 3, and required the railroad company to pay into the treasury of the District of Columbia $147,000 before this bill could take effect. My view of the situation, then, is this: I had prepared an amendment which was almost identical in phraseology with that offered by the gentleman from New York, but when he got the attention of the Chairman and offered his amendment, in looking it over I saw that it covered substantially the grounds of the amendment that I desired to offer, so that I did not offer mine formally. The situation, then, is such that we are entitled to a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to section 3. And what I wish to know from the Chairman is this, can we now have a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from New York to section 3?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Section 3 is pending, and to that section a substitute has been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee representing the committee. The original text is open to amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then I will offer as an amendment to the substitute of the committee the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and have it pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the question be stated clearly from the desk. Gentlemen offer amendments and then proceed to debate them, which proceeding generally results in confusion.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. My amendment is an amendment to the substitute of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is offered to section 3 as printed in the original bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But I offer this amendment to the the substitute proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Illinois send up his amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I offer this as a substitute for the substitute of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be in order at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I should have stated as an amendment to the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois now offers the following amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said company shall, within ninety days after the passage of this bill, pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $147,507.05; and in case of the failure of said company to pay said amount within the time herein specified, all rights under this bill shall be forfeited, and this act held for naught.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order I make is this: If the Chair will turn to page 2863 of the RECORD he will find that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] moved to strike out section 3 and insert the following:

Provided no right or privilege shall accrue to said company under this act until said company shall have paid into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the District of Columbia the sum of $147,507.05.

This amendment was offered as a substitute for section 3. Now, the Committee on the District of Columbia have the right to perfect the text of the bill, and have a right to offer an amendment to section 3, and they have offered this compromise substitute agreed upon in the manner I have stated, and it is first to be voted upon.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They offer this as the third section of the bill, and if the gentleman from New York now proposes to offer what has been read as a substitute for the pending amendment of the committee, why of course he would have a right to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to offer what has been read as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. An amendment to the substitute offered by the committee?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then it is not germane. The substitute we have offered leaves the matter to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia to ascertain what indebtedness there is and requires them to pay if there is any found.

This amendment that he offers is not germane to that amendment, and I make that point of order; because if that amendment is agreed to, it does away with the substitute that it is proposed to amend, and would not fit at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can very easily make it "fit," by moving to strike out.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But he has not done that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is what I do, Mr. Speaker. I offer it in the manner suggested by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposition as the gentleman offers it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words of the substitute, and insert the following language: That the said company shall, within ninety days after the passage of this bill, pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $147,507.05; and in case of the failure of said company to pay said amount within the time herein specified, all rights under this bill shall be forfeited, and this act held for naught.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, before I offered the amendment that has just been read by the Clerk, I rose to state some objections that occurred to me to the substitute that has been prepared by this self-constituted committee, and that has been read at the Clerk's desk.

It proposes to give this company a retrial on a case that was fully determined against it in the nisi prius court here in the District of Columbia, under which it was required to pay into the treasury of the District of Columbia over $147,000.

Now, the objection that I have to the substitute of the committee is, that one of the original propositions in the way of defense that was urged by the railroad company against the original suit was that it had no legal notice of the improvements that were made along the line of the street over which the road ran, and hence should not be held liable for the expense that was incurred.

In other words, the railroad company admitted practically in its pleadings that the city had expended $147,000, for which the company would have been liable if it had had legal notice. In addition to that they also urged the plea of the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon this question, limited their judgment to the one question alone of the limitations of law, barring the right of the District to recover. It is proposed in the amendment that is offered to eliminate that defense, but it is not proposed to eliminate the defense of want of notice.

Now, I submit that before this railroad company is permitted to have the privileges and advantages that will accrue to it under this legislation, that it shall not only withdraw the plea of the statute of limitations—which is a dishonest plea in itself, an immoral plea, and one that is never offered except by those who desire to win by a defense which is almost akin to fraud—but withdraw also the plea of want of notice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman as a lawyer state here, in the presence of lawyers, that the plea of the statute of limitations is a plea that is never interposed except for the purposes of fraud?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The plea of the statute of limitations is regarded as a dishonest plea.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman know that the principal ground for the statute of limitations is the prevention of fraud, because it is presumed that after a certain length of time changes may occur, witnesses may die or leave the jurisdiction—that it is interposed upon the ground that the claim is a stale one?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a statute of repose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Put it on that ground; a statute of repose is very different from a statute of fraud.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It is never interposed by a man who wants to pay his honest debts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask that I have five minutes more time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We have debated this matter for three weeks, and I shall have to object to any extension beyond five minutes, to anybody.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Can I not have a little further time to explain my opposition? I have been interrupted in my remarks by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the gentleman from Illinois have five minutes further time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes further.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Illinois will be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana asked me several questions as to when the plea of the statute of limitations is interposed. It is always interposed to defeat a claim, not upon its merits, but upon a technicality, and is always looked upon with disfavor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. By whom?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Men who are honest and fair and aboveboard in their transactions never interpose a plea of that kind.

Now, this railroad company in this so-called understanding has agreed to withdraw this plea; and I submit, coupled with that, it should also withdraw the defense of want of legal notice respecting the improvements that were made over and along these streets by the District of Columbia. I see no reason why this case should not be litigated upon its merits by withdrawing both these pleas, which are purely technical.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But if the gentleman will pardon me, his amendment does not go to that. His amendment rests on the demand of a certain sum of money.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am not speaking of my amendment at this moment, but am attempting to show that the committee substitute should not be adopted unless amended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this whole question has been before Congress two or three different times. I have before me the statutes of the United States, where in 1891 this identical question was before Congress, and this railroad company was then required to pay this judgment, with interest and costs, within a limited time or else its charter should be forfeited. The sum at that time was stated to be over $147,000. Now, instead of doing that, the railroad company went into the courts to defeat the will of Congress. It went into the court and fought this claim, not upon its merits, as I have said, but upon various technicalities. It now comes back here with what gentlemen are pleased to call a compromise, a compromise which means a practical surrender to the company.

It seems to me that when it is within the power of Congress to settle this whole question, it is infinitely better for us to adopt the amendment that I propose, to compel this railroad company to pay into the Treasury of the District of Columbia the $147,000, than to permit it again to go into the courts of this District and relitigate this question. That Congress was satisfied that it ought to pay is solemly expressed in the statute before me. Why should we attempt to repeal or modify that expression of Congress by the adoption of the section which is proposed by the gentleman here to-day? I say, Mr. Speaker, as I said the other day, that this franchise of this company that is forfeited is worth half a million dollars. If it were put up at auction it would bring that to-day.

This railroad company is to get all these privileges, all these rights that are suggested in this bill by the payment of the paltry sum of $147,000; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that instead of going any further along the line suggested by the Committee on the District of Columbia, we had better cut the Gordian knot by the adoption of the amendment I have suggested and let the question end there; and if this company then fails to pay this amount of money within the time specified, let some other company have, on such terms as the House shall grant, the authority of constructing and maintaining a railroad along and over the streets now occupied by this company.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that when this bill first came up I was opposed to it. Being a member of the District Committee, I opposed the passage of the bill as it was originally presented. Subsequently, when the representative of this railroad company and members of the committee showed a disposition to have the question settled by an appeal to a court composed of men of learning and ability, I consented that we should confer original jurisdiction upon that court to hear and determine this case upon its merits. The railroad company was willing to submit its case to the court of appeals, and the District of Columbia, through its United States attorney and through the District attorney, consented that it should be so referred, by conferring upon that court original jurisdiction to try the case upon its merits according to the original transcript of the record as filed in the Supreme Court of the District, or to take new evidence if the court desired. I see nothing improper in that.

I do not believe, as a matter of law, that the Congress of the United States has power to assess a railroad company in any certain sum. I know that the supreme court of the District of Columbia did assess $147,000 against this railroad company on a fair and regular trial, and I was in favor of the company paying that amount of money into the treasury of the District; but after investigating all the cases that bear upon the subject I do not believe it is within the power of Congress to assess a railroad company or an individual in any certain sum of money. That is not the lawful way to proceed in this matter; and as the company were willing to submit the case upon its merits, to be settled according to the rights of the respective parties, I consented to this amendment, which I assisted in preparing, and I believe that it will protect the Government fully in all its rights.

With regard to the question of notice, I beg to say to my friend from Illinois that I believe the record itself contains sufficient notice to the railroad company; but if it does not, I am willing to accept an amendment providing that the company shall waive the plea as to notice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, do not you think that ought to be inserted in the amendment, in order to save all doubt?

Mr. ABBOTT. I believe, as I have already said, that the record itself contains all the notice necessary.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I doubt that; but even so, why not put this provision in the amendment?

Mr. ABBOTT. There is a letter from the president of the company to the Commissioners, in which he says that the company would like to have the privilege of putting down their crossties in advance of the paving of those streets. That letter is in the record, and is in itself evidence of notice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If you believe that, and the representatives of the railroad company assent to that proposition in their conversation with you, why not put the matter beyond dispute by inserting in your amendment a provision requiring the company to waive the question of notice?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Because the attorney of the United States does not want it in there, and neither does the attorney of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The attorney of the United States has no more to do with the question than we have—indeed, not near so much.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, these learned attorneys, who are familiar with the case from the beginning, do not desire any such provision.

Mr. STALLINGS. It could not hurt anything to put it in there, could it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not know about that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. This is a matter which is before Congress, and it is the duty of Congress to protect the public interest, and such a stipulation would protect them in that particular at least.

Mr. ABBOTT. You, as a lawyer, know that an act done officially, under the authority of a public charter like that of this company, would be in itself sufficient evidence of notice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Very well; but why not make the company so stipulate, and thus put the matter beyond debate?

Mr. ABBOTT. So far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then, why do not you gentlemen who have agreed upon this amendment insert that provision?

Mr. ABBOTT. I think it is absolutely unnecessary, because the record itself contains full notice. I can not imagine how the courts could possibly hold that the railroad company was ignorant of the facts, in view of the letters in the record showing that they had notice, and that they asked the privilege of putting down their crossties in advance of the paving of those streets.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Was it not one of the defenses of the railroad company that they had not had a legal notice?

Mr. ABBOTT. They did make that point, and the District met it with the evidence of which I have spoken.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, if the company made that defense, and if you desire to eliminate it from the case hereafter, why not require them to stipulate to waive the question of notice?

Mr. ABBOTT. As I have said, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. HEARD, by unanimous consent, Mr. ABBOTT'S time was extended for five minutes.

Mr. TERRY. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to this language in the amendment which he says he has agreed to: "Jurisdiction to hear and determine said case without a jury, upon the pleas and issues and proofs therein, other than the pleas and issues relating to the statute of limitations." That reserves to this company the right to plead the want of notice, and unless you exclude that by an express provision, I think the point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is well taken; for you expressly provide that the suit shall be heard and determined upon the pleas and issues in the case other than the statute of limitations.

Mr. ABBOTT. I want to say to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] that the agreement was that this case might be tried as an original case by the court of appeals. That court, under existing law, has not original jurisdiction of the case; but by this bill we propose to confer such jurisdiction, to try the case on its merits as it was tried in the courts below. We did not intend to make a new case for the court of appeals; we did not intend to bring in any new issues. But the railroad company asked us (and I think it was fair and right) that the case might be tried as it was before.

Mr. TERRY. Was not the allegation of want of notice one of the pleas when the case was tried before?

Mr. ABBOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TERRY. And you expressly reserve to the company the right to that plea by this bill?

Mr. ABBOTT. We reserve to them every right which they had in the courts below. I would not deprive them of any such right. I am willing that there shall be a fair and honest trial of the case on its merits according to the record.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Right there I hope the gentleman will allow me a moment. The officer whose duty it was to give the railroad company this notice was one of the largest stockholders in the company; and it is claimed that he did not give the company legal notice; that was one of the company's defenses. Now, in order to avoid that technicality it seems to me this House ought to eliminate that matter from the new case which is to be prepared, by saying in this amendment that the company waives all question as to notice before this improvement was made.

Mr. ABBOTT. My friend will remember that this case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, where judgment was rendered in favor of the railroad company on account of the bar of the statute of limitations.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That was the only point discussed.

Mr. ABBOTT. That was the only point decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, according to the present recommendation of the committee, this case is to be tried again just as it was tried before the supreme court of the District of Columbia. We do not desire to make a new case. If this company owes the United States this money I am in favor of making it pay; but by your amendment you can not adjudicate the case, but settle it here without a hearing.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am speaking of your amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT. By your amendment you undertake to adjudicate the question here in Congress; and this House is not a court; we can not adjudicate the rights of these parties; and unless we forced the company to waive its right to interpose the plea of the statute of limitations we could never have it adjudicated at all. As a representative of the interests of the people I was in favor of having this matter adjudicated upon its merits.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think the gentleman and I can understand each other. Here is the point I make: The railroad company, in addition to the plea of the statute of limitations, interposed the defense that no legal notice had been served on it prior to the making of the improvements which would require it to make payment. I understand that was one of their pleas.

Mr. ABBOTT. I admit that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, the officer of the Government who should have given the railroad company this notice was the largest stockholder in the company. If the company did not receive legal notice, it was because one of the stockholders of the company, whose duty it was to give notice, kept that notice back.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How do you know that?

Mr. ABBOTT. The record does show notice; and it shows that the president of the company addressed the board of public works on that very question. The company, as I believe, did have notice. But if it should appear that they did not have notice, and if this sum of money was assessed against the railroad company without legal notice, that was a wrong from which they ought not to suffer. I do not propose to deprive the company of any right it may have, except the bar of the statute of limitations.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Texas answer me one question?

Mr. ABBOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. It seems that we have now reduced this controversy to a question as to notice. Now, the question of notice about a matter of litigation does not go to the merits. I think the gentleman will concede that. Now, what is the objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman on the other side?

Mr. ABBOTT. I have said that there is none, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. COX. It is said here that the company desires to have this controversy settled on its merits. Now, why should they object to waiving the point of notice which they have relied on before?

Mr. ABBOTT. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. COX. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ABBOTT. But I want to ask the gentleman this question, as a lawyer: If a judgment should be rendered in the circuit court or any other court of the State of Tennessee against him, without notice having been served upon him of the filing of the suit or the character of the suit, would he think it right in me to deprive him of his defense on that ground in such a suit?

Mr. COX. As a matter of course, I would answer "no."

Mr. ABBOTT. Of course you would.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. Just one more question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed one minute longer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the gentleman from Texas will have the additional time.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Now your controversy lies on the statute of limitations and the question of notice?

Mr. ABBOTT. No; the limitation is waived.

Mr. COX. I desire now to ask my friend from Texas as a lawyer if he does not know that the question of notice does not go to the merits, but is a matter of detail?

Mr. ABBOTT. I will state to the gentleman that a notice is necessary. I admit that it is proper; and I contend that the record in this case shows a notice to the railroad company. If the gentleman will examine the record in the case he is bound to admit that proper notice was given to them and that they had full knowledge of the existence of the orders of the court.

Mr. COX. As a question of fact I would ask whether the notice was given or not. I do not pretend to say. But I do not see, and that is the point to which I wish to ask the gentleman's attention, why the railroad company objects to waiving the question of notice?

Mr. ABBOTT. I do not know that they do object.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer. I am a layman. I have no prejudices against corporations. I acknowledge and appreciate their value in many ways. But I want corporations to stand, in relation to their rights, just exactly beside the individual citizen, and no better. That is what I am contending for in this case, and have been contending for for the three days that this matter has been before the House.

It is not denied that these assessments were made for improvements, and those against private citizens have been paid by them. Those citizens who did not pay their assessments had their property advertised and sold. This railroad company managed to slip out of immediate payment, in that they did not stand on an equality with the citizens. They have managed to elude payment for all of these years; and now at this late day they come and ask that the interests of the District of Columbia shall be again put in peril by a new trial. There is no suggestion on this floor that the other trial was not a fair one. There have been two trials and both have been fair.

Mr. ABBOTT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. COOMBS. I can not yield for an interruption.

Mr. COGSWELL. But the gentleman is away off. You are not stating the facts of the case accurately.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentlemen can correct in their own time, if they think there is any misapprehension as to what is at issue. When this case was brought up on appeal, it was laid aside, and the judgment was vacated simply on the plea of the statute of limitation.

Mr. Speaker, I need not go into that point. That has been covered by gentlemen here who are conversant with the law. But what I want is simply this: If that assessment was right and proper for the private citizens of the District to pay, it was right and proper for the railroad company to pay. The citizens paid it or suffered for their failure. The railroad company eluded it, and now I do not want Congress to help them elude it any longer.

A question has been raised here that the railroad company did not occupy some of the streets for which they were assessed. That may be, but the company had the privilege of occupying the streets; they retained their rights to do so, and these rights have grown steadily and largely in value. Their rights grew in value by these very improvements made in the streets as well as by the improvement of adjacent property.

As I said at the beginning, sir, I do not want to appear here as an oppressor of a corporation; but I do not want to be here either as an apologist for a corporation which seems to have eluded its just responsibilities to the District. I do not want Congress to help them by giving another chance to avoid the payment of what they owe. I think we should insist upon their payment of the assessments before granting them any additional privileges, thus forcing them to stand upon the same ground as private individuals.

Mr. NORTHWAY was recognized.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word further, and for that purpose move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio, and will then recognize the gentleman from Texas later.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the members of this House who favored compelling this company to pay $147,000 into the Treasury; but since there has been an understanding that it should be reported back to the committee to see if an agreement could be entered into between those persons who are directly interested in it, and inasmuch as such an agreement has been reached to all intents and purposes, I shall favor the adoption of the report of the committee as the best settlement of the matter.

I do not believe that it is proper to stand here and say that the District has not been represented when its officers have assented to the agreement. As well may a person say that the people of this country had not been represented when Congress has assented to a particular character of legislation.

Now, it appears that this is the unanimous report of the committee. There is one objection to the whole of it, and it is the one to which the attention of the committee has been called. This provision compels the company to waive one technical plea, to wit, the plea of the statute of limitations. The want of notice is another technical plea. Why not compel them to waive all technical pleas and go at once to the merits of the case? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] asks a very pertinent question. Why not compel them to waive both of these technical pleas and go at once to the merits of the case?

With the merits of the case I have nothing to do. The District of Columbia has assented to this. The United States consents to it, Congress consents to it, and I can see no harm to come to anybody; but I do believe that we should compel this company to waive both technical pleas, the one of notice as well as the statute of limitations.

Now, one other thing that I want to call the attention of the committee to. It is not for the purpose of offering an amendment, but to ask the attention of the committee to see whether I am right or not. They say:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect until said company shall file in said court of appeals its consent in writing, etc.

Suppose they do not file their consent under six months. There is no law to compel them to do anything, and the rights of the people are in abeyance. When will the law take effect? Not until the company has done something. But suppose they want to gain time, and fail to file their consent for six months? Can they be compelled to do anything, and what becomes of the rights of the District of Columbia during that time?

I think that idea should be stricken out of this act. It ought not to be allowed to take effect upon some act to be done by the railroad company, but they ought to be compelled to do something, and the act should not hang upon their consent; for they may not consent within six months or a year, and if they do not, what becomes of the rights of the District? I know it is provided that the year shall commence to run upon the approval of the act, but if it does not take effect until the company shall do something, to wit, until they file some record in the court; then what becomes of the rights of the District? I do not believe we should have in an act of Congress anything under which such a complication might arise.

Mr. HEARD. Does the gentleman hold that the putting of this condition into this law prevents the act from taking effect?

Mr. NORTHWAY. It says so:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect, etc.

Mr. HEARD. That is, as to the benefits to be given to the company.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. HEARD. I ask the gentleman for his construction of that law.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am calling the attention of the committee to it. I fear there would be a double construction here, which would make trouble, and it ought to be stricken out, so that there could be no question about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do not strike it out, but make them file their acceptance.

Mr. COX. In the agreement that is made between the conflicting interests the statute of limitations is waived. There is no trouble in understanding the legal result of that. Another question is presented, as to whether the company had the proper legal notice. That point is not waived. That is just as technical as the statute of limitations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will my colleague explain what notice he understands was not given?

Mr. COX. I understand that a certain notice was required to be given to the company, and the company claim they did not get that. As to the character of the notice, I do not pretend to say.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. COX. You shall have it. If it is a notice that is important, why then it is exactly like the statute of limitations in its results. If it is a notice that is unimportant, why is there objection to waiving it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me just a moment right there?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to call attention to what occurred two weeks ago to-day upon this very subject. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. COGSWELL. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if, at the next District day, we present an amendment which shall leave this to the court of appeals, sufficiently guarded, will that satisfy his opposition to the bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. So far as I am concerned, it will. If there can be an adjudication of the real merits of this matter——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of the indebtedness?

Mr. HEPBURN. Of the indebtedness, without the interposition of any technical defense, for the want of notice or the statute of limitations, etc.

Mr. COX. Now, let me ask my friend if this want of notice, whatever may be its character, is an important question in the litigation, and you have submitted the matter to your arbitrator, the court of appeals of the District of Columbia suppose the case goes up there and the railroad makes its defense upon the question of notice—it has waived the plea of the statute of limitations, it is true—but it makes this question, as I said, of notice, that it has not been brought properly before the court, or some other question of that kind, that is a bar to the action. Then, I submit to my colleague from Tennessee, how is it possible to ever reach the merits of the case?

Suppose the court decides in favor of want of proper notice, you will never reach the merits of the case; and then as a result the railroad company gains the suit upon a technicality and the District of Columbia is defeated upon a technicality which is equivalent to the statute of limitations, because it is a bar to the action. Now, then, if it is important, why not waive it and go to the merits? If it is unimportant, you would be willing to waive it. That is the only question in my mind.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if I am wrong in making a statement of facts upon which my judgment and opposition to this bill shall rest. Is it or not a fact that some years ago this company was chartered and certain conditions imposed as a consideration for the charter; that it should perform those conditions without technicality, or what at that time was unquestionably the intent of the power that gave the charter? That it did not comply with the conditions of this charter as granted between the people of the District and this Government as a part taxpayer is the contention that has arisen.

The rights of corporate interests in every legislative body unfortunately, in this country, find too many ready advocates, and the people, alas, are seldom heard. If the people of this District went into the courts and were heard, and the courts decided that in equity and justice they were right, and this railroad corporation, through mere technicalities and the delay that follows unfortunately in the practice of the law, has been able to take advantage of the people of the District and the Government as a co-taxpayer, in refusing to pay what it agreed to at the time, it is a bad time for it to come to this House and ask for relief. It will be a dangerous thing for this Congress to pass a bill favoring a corporation which refuses to do its duty under the contract it made with the people of this District.

Look at the latter section of the bill. It presents to me the wooden horse at Troy; and I am not one of those who trust the Greeks when they bring gift horses; and I am one of those who refuse, as a member of this body, to make any agreement as a condition precedent for giving away the rights of the people, or exercising the power of a member of the Legislature for the interest of any corporation against the rights of the people. There is clearly an attempt on the part of this corporation and its friends on the floor of this House to dicker with the Congress of the United States; to say to the Congress of the United States, if you give us what we want we will do something you want.

We ought to say to them, if you will do what the people of the District of Columbia want and what we had a right to expect, then we will give you what you ask. But I believe it is a safe rule always to keep what you have until you get what you want. In this matter I believe the Congress of the United States should keep what they have, the right to deal with this company beyond the technicalities which it has covered itself with as a defense against the rights of the people. I am opposed to this measure in every form until that corporation is brought to its senses.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in his remarks said he wanted to ask questions about something in the bill. Will the gentleman now state his question?

Mr. DUNN. I have asked the questions already in my speech. Is not there a contention between the people and this corporation about the payment of $147,000 claimed to be due? Is that a fact?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There has been a suit about that.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But that is a suit which has been decided long since, and in favor of the company.

Mr. DUNN. On a technicality?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was decided on a plea of the statute of limitations.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, yes; well, then——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The merits of the pleas have never been tried. Now, this bill is a general proposition to submit the question anew to the court, eliminating the plea of the statute of limitations, and letting the court try the merits of the pleas that never have been tried.

Mr. DUNN. There is not a man who has read the case and studied it carefully who does not know that in equity and justice the people of the District of Columbia are entitled to the money they claim from this company; and if the railroad company defended itself upon a technicality against the rightful claim of the people, it is our duty to protect the people and to so frame this bill as to prevent the corporation from interposing another technicality to again deprive them of their rights.

Let us say to this corporation: "Until you have performed all your duties, eliminated all your technicalities, and served the people as you have undertaken to do when you got your charter, and as you ought to do in justice, we will grant you no facilities for covering yourselves again under any technical plea, or forwarding your private interest at the expense of the people of this District."

Mr. ABBOTT. A want to say this to the gentleman from New Jersey: It is true that there was a judgment rendered by the courts of the District of Columbia against this railroad company for a hundred and forty-seven thousand and some odd dollars, and that judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the District. That is true, and I was opposed to the passage of any bill for the relief of this company until they shall have complied with what was right and proper under that judgment.

Mr. DUNN. Then why do not we take that ground here now?

Mr. ABBOTT. I will ask the gentleman as a lawyer whether he holds that we can, by a legislative act, affirm or revive a judgment that has been overruled by the Supreme Court of the United States and again make it valid and binding?

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman wants me to answer that question I tell him that, having the legislative power in our hands, we can compel this corporation to do justice to the people, by withholding what they want until they consent to do justice. That is the whole case.

Mr. ABBOTT. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does he not know that the court of appeals of the District of Columbia is composed of honorable men, men of character and ability, men learned in the law, and if this is a right and proper claim is he not willing to submit it to the decision of those men?

Why should we deny to this railroad company, or to any citizen or corporation, the right to be heard in the courts and to interpose whatever meritorious defense they may have? I admit that the plea of the statute of limitations is not a meritorious defense, and I know that the company took advantage of that plea to defeat the claim of the District for this indebtedness and took the case out of court on that ground; but I again ask the gentleman why not submit this case on its merits to the judgment of these three honorable lawyers, men selected because of their ability and their learning in the law?

What have we to do here with reviving a judgment which, so far as the law is concerned, is now dead, so that no execution can be issued upon it? We have no claim against this railroad company except what I believe is an equitable one, for I believe the company owes this money. I do not hesitate to say that; but we have no power to reach them in that matter by legislation.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, we have; by defeating their measures here.

Mr. ABBOTT. We have no power unless to submit the matter to the decision of arbitrators, and this amendment means simply that, when we confer original jurisdiction upon this court of appeals to hear and determine the case upon its merits. Now, I would like to know whether the gentleman himself, if there was a judgment rendered against him without notice, would not contest it?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Suppose the gentleman knew as a matter of fact that he was sued, but there was a technical defect in the summons, if you were going to give him a rehearing would you not take away from him the right to present a technical defense on the ground of a defect in the summons?

Mr. ABBOTT. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he will examine the record in 4 Mackay's Reports he can not help being convinced that there was notice to the company.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the company did plead want of notice?

Mr. ABBOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, does not the very fact that they did make that plea, although they had actual knowledge of the matter, show that they are expecting to avoid judgment upon that or some other technical ground?

Mr. ABBOTT. Would you, as a lawyer, insist that you or any other party could be brought into court without proper notice, and if you had not received such notice would you waive that plea? I think we ought not to ask them to waive anything but the plea of the statute of limitations; we ought simply to require them to agree to retry the case on the record, on the same record as before, and not upon the record as we might desire it to be, for if we were to insist upon their waiving anything more than their plea of the statute of limitations we might as well declare at once that we rendered judgment against them.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman admit that this corporation owe the District of Columbia this money?

Mr. ABBOTT. I think they owe the money.

Mr. DUNN. What have they ever done in regard to making an equitable settlement? Have they done anything whatever? They have simply sat down and said "We want to have our way," and now gentlemen here seem to be willing to help them by disarming the people of the District in the prosecution of this claim.

Mr. ABBOTT. I have already said that the company pleaded the statute of limitations and defeated the claim in that way.

Mr. DUNN. Well, I say to you from all that I can read and hear of the conduct of the company in this matter——

Mr. ABBOTT. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, but I can not give him all my time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent Mr. ABBOTT'S time was extended for three minutes.

Mr. ABBOTT. I am sincerely of opinion that the railroad company is indebted to the District of Columbia. I was of that opinion before. When I was on the floor two weeks ago I took that position. But if we propose now to refer this matter to the courts to be settled and determined according to the merits of the case, why not adopt a proposition which does so in fact? I would not say to the gentleman from New Jersey, if a judgment had been rendered against him without notice, that the judgment should be final and binding upon him. So, if this railroad company was not served with notice, then, as a matter of justice, it ought to be allowed to interpose this as a defense. I believe the company was served with notice. The record shows it; the report in Fourth Mackey shows it. But if there is any good ground for this defense at all, let the company have the advantage of it. Let it try the case upon the merits as shown by the record—not as the merits may appear to the mind of Congress.

As I have said, I believe that the railroad company owes this money. That has been, and is still, my opinion. But what objection is there to the proposition we now make to confer upon the court of appeals original jurisdiction to try and determine this case upon the record? And if we undertake to adopt such a proposition let us not eliminate a part of the record and say that the court must try the case upon the record with a part eliminated?

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman admits that the railroad company owes the money?

Mr. ABBOTT. I think so.

Mr. DUNN. That being so, what objection can there be to our saying to this company: "Before you can obtain any new legislation here for your benefit you must agree that the District of Columbia shall not be subjected to the uncertainty and cost of another suit to establish a matter that has already been passed upon."

Mr. ABBOTT. My friend should understand that the United States district attorney and the attorney for the District of Columbia have both assented to this proposition. They are both willing that the case shall be submitted in the manner we now propose to the court of appeals. Let me say also that the claim is not for $147,000. That was the amount of the judgment. The claim is for $161,000. The United States, or the authorities of the District, contend that the company is indebted in that amount. We propose now to submit all these issues to the court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to the substitute proposed by the committee.

The amendment of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois was again read.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of justice and fairness, as between this company and the District of Columbia, this amendment ought not to be adopted. No man on this floor can say with the certainty which we ought to feel in such matters that the amount named in the amendment is the amount of the indebtedness of this company to the District. No man here can say with certainty whether the amount named is too small or too large, or whether any amount at all is due. I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations which put upon an appropriation bill the amendment providing that a specified sum should be paid by this company, in default of which it should forfeit its charter. But since that time, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I have learned more about this case; and I say that no one listening day in and day out, week in and week out, as we have done, to a discussion of the merits of this case, can fairly say that we can determine in this way how much this company owes.

This amendment, if adopted, is fraught with mischief and injustice. If this company is indebted in any sum to the District of Columbia we want the company to pay every cent that it owes. On the other hand, if it does not owe anything, this committee does not want to compel it to pay anything.

Mr. HULICK. What amount less than $147,000 does this company claim that it owes? Does it claim that it does not owe that amount?

Mr. COGSWELL. The company claims that it has a defense against the whole assessment.

Mr. HULICK. And that there is nothing due?

Mr. COGSWELL. And that there is nothing due.

Mr. HULICK. Now, one more question——

Mr. COGSWELL. The gentleman is taking a good deal of my time; and I have only five minutes.

Mr. HULICK. Is the opposition of the company to the payment of this money based upon the technical defense of want of notice or upon some equitable ground?

Mr. COGSWELL. It is based upon some eight or ten pleas involving the merits of the transaction. Among those pleas, I believe, is that of want of notice.

Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago we went over this whole matter; and, as I supposed, we adjourned with the understanding that we could agree upon some amendment which would allow the bill to go through. The people of this District want quick transportation along the route of this road; they want the substitution of some other motive power than horses.

There are two sides to this question. There is one side, the public convenience, which demands some sort of legislation upon the subject. It demands that this road shall be compelled to change its motive power. On the other hand, you have got to give the road some sort of legislation to enable them to do it.

Now, I will say as a member of the committee, believing that something is due the District of Columbia, after I heard the full and fair explanation made by the road, it left me in doubt, as it left every other member of that committee in doubt, what the amount was. They came forward and said they had won their case in the Supreme Court of the United States on the plea of the statute of limitations. I did not take kindly to that plea, although it is sufficient if established.

I think it is an unmanly, unfair, and cowardly plea. But they said they would waive that, and would go into the court of appeals of this District and accept its decision as final in this matter, and would let the court, after an investigation of the facts, state what amount they owed the District, if they owed anything; that such amount should be a lien on their property, and that they would pay it in ninety days; and I supposed we had agreed on such an understanding when this matter was up for consideration before, and we took the suggestion, which I happened to make, into the committee room; we had the road, we had the Government attorney, we had the District attorney present with the committee, and all agreed upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

I say now, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of fairness and justice that we can not adopt the particular amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in relation to the argument of my friend from Massachusetts. I have no doubt whatever, of course, about the sincerity and honesty of his opinions or motives or of the expression that he has given here in opposition to the amendment I have offered. But I am as firmly convinced from the lights I have that my amendment should prevail as he is that the amendment should be defeated and that of the gentleman from Tennessee adopted. And I desire to call the attention of the Chair and the members of this House to a statement that Mr. Justice Bradley, of the Supreme Court of the United States, made in reference to this very subject when it was under consideration before that court. He said:

This was an action brought by the District of Columbia in November, 1880, to recover from the Metropolitan Railroad Company the sum of $162,622.52. The alleged cause of action was work done and materials furnished by the plaintiff—that is, the District of Columbia—in paving streets and avenues in the city of Washington at various times in the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875, upon and in consequence of the neglect of the defendant—this railroad company—to do said work and furnish said materials in accordance with its duty as prescribed by its charter.

Mr. COX. By its charter?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes; that is the language of Judge Bradley—"prescribed by its charter."

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will see that this question between the District of Columbia and the railroad company has been pending for twenty-three years. Twenty-three years ago the company declined to go on and make certain improvements as required by the authorities of the District of Columbia. In 1880—or rather I should say prior to 1880—a suit was commenced against it in the District court here, and a decision was had on the merits of the case. The District court overruled the plea of the statute of limitations, and the question of want of legal notice, and heard the case on its merits. After mature deliberation by that court, giving full consideration to every defense that was urged by the company, a judgment for $147,000 was rendered against it.

Now, if the company had been controlled in any degree with the spirit of fairness which has been expressed by my friend from Massachusetts on the floor to-day, it would twelve or fourteen years ago have paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia this judgment which was rendered against it. But instead of that, it appealed the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and urged the technical defense of the statute of limitations. In this decision from which I have read, the court ignored the defense on the merits, ignored every question of merit, and decided it solely on the statute of limitations.

Now, this question in 1890 and 1891 was again before Congress. At that time everything that could be urged in favor of the railroad company was presented to Congress, and after mature deliberation, by a formal enactment that is now a part of the statutes of this country, this railroad company was required to pay into the Treasury this judgment rendered against it some fourteen years ago, or in case of failure to forfeit its charter. What did the company do? Instead of complying with the expressed will of Congress, it again went into the courts of the District, and to-day is seeking to invalidate this expressed will of the House and the Senate. Now I say, Mr. Speaker, that when this company comes into this body, as it does to-day, asking for an extension of its charter, asking for additional privileges that it can not exercise under its present charter, before we vote such privileges and such authority we should compel it to pay this judgment, as expressed in my amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope we can now have a vote. I have not spoken upon this amendment to-day. We have had speeches upon it heretofore, four weeks ago to-day, and two weeks ago to-day. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has made this speech two or three times, and nearly every part of it has been controverted by gentlemen of the Committee on the District of Columbia who have examined this question from its very foundation to its top. I undertake to say that the gentleman has not stated the facts in the case fairly and exactly, in accordance with the equities of it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not going into a reargument of the question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman point out in what respect my statement is incorrect?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is incorrect in a number of particulars.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I say my statement is borne out by the record.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I decline to yield to the gentleman. He has occupied the floor three or four times to-day.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is no reason why you should misrepresent me.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I undertake to say that the gentleman has not been entirely fair in his statement of the case. He says this company has been disputing this debt for more than twenty years. That is not correct.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The record shows it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It does not show anything of the kind. He himself said the suit was begun in 1880. This work was done in 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875, and there was no suit brought until 1878. This suit that the gentleman describes has never been tried upon its merits. There was a trial in the court below, in which the court erred in its judgment, not only upon the merits of the case, but upon the plea of the statute of limitations. The whole question was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court reversed the court below, but only rendered a decision upon the statute of limitations, because it was not necessary to go to the pleas touching the merits when it found the plea of the statute of limitations in favor of the company. Now, Mr. Speaker, without taking more time, I move the previous question upon this amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Was there a judgment rendered in the court below?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We have debated this question now three times. We want to get to other District matters, and I demand the previous question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withhold that motion a moment, to allow me to make a correction of a statement that has been reiterated here two or three times, as to what the understanding was two weeks ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In reference to that notice?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes. It will only take a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That question does not arise upon this amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but let me make this statement——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will withdraw my demand for the previous question, in order to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. I quote again from the RECORD:

> Mr. COGSWELL. * * * Now, I understand there is to be submitted a proposition—it was originally suggested by the corporation itself—that jurisdiction be given to the new court of appeals to consider a case which shall be made up, leaving it to that court to determine whether this company owes the District anything and if anything how much, and that the amount found due by the court shall be paid by this company before this legislation takes effect.
>
> Mr. HEARD. The plea of the statute of limitations being barred and there being filed also a written waiver of all rights accruing to the company by virtue of the judgment rendered heretofore.
>
> Mr. HEPBURN. Does that also waive this question of notice?
> Mr. COGSWELL. As I understand, it does.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, if my friend will draw an amendment which will be in order after this amendment is voted on, waiving the notice, there will be no objection to it. The gentleman has set himself right.

Mr. HEPBURN. I only state this in justice to myself, because if you had brought in such an amendment as you suggested I would have felt bound by that agreement; but you have not done it, and therefore I felt at liberty to take the course I have taken to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I supposed our amendment covered all the points. I now demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] demands the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand it on the pending amendment, not on the substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the pending amendment to the substitute?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEARD. Is it the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] that is now offered?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is the amendment of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HEARD. Is it not substantially the same thing?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. Is not that offered as a substitute for the substitute proposition of the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Substantially, that is the fact.

Mr. HEARD. Therefore, a vote for this substitute disposes of the charter.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If my amendment is adopted it requires the company to pay the judgment, and gives it the privilege it asks.

Mr. HEPBURN. And suppose that is voted down, then this is a proposition conferring the privileges upon them now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am willing to have an amendment offered.

Mr. STORER. I ask that the pending amendment be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment to the substitute was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the previous question on this amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COOMBS. Wait a moment—I would like to hear it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has just been read.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is in doubt. As many as are in favor of the amendment to the substitute will rise and be counted.

The House again divided; and there were ayes 60, noes 78.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois and Mr. COOMBS. No quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 113, answered "present" 2, and not voting 129; as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues, Messrs. MORGAN, HATCH, and others, be excused on account of their attending the funeral of Maj. Frank Nesbitt.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Montana, Mr. HARTMAN, be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the Clerk read a pair this morning between the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. OUTHWAITE, and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will announce the additional pairs.

Mr. BURROWS. If I am paired I desire to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the gentleman from Michigan will be permitted to withdraw his vote.

There was no objection.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the rest of the day:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. LOCKWOOD with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.

Mr. MUTCHLER with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina with Mr. RAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS with Mr. LACEY, on this vote.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a very close vote, and the Chair asks that the House be in order, that members may know how they are recorded.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 109, and the nays are 113. The nays have it, and the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On line 13 of the substitute, after the word "limitation," insert the following language: "Or plea of failure of notice to said company of any act required of it."

Line 13, after the word "case," insert the following language: "Assuming that due and proper notice has been given to said company of all acts required in the premises."

Line 32, page 4, after the word "limitation," insert the following language: "And from want of notice as hereinbefore provided."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not object to that amendment, Mr. Speaker, and now I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The understanding was that we should have an opportunity to perfect the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not desire to take advantage of any gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to have all the "understandings" that seem to have been agreed upon by certain gentlemen sent up and read at the Clerk's desk, so that we might all understand them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment as a new section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That on and after one year from the approval of this act the Metropolitan Railroad Company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $500 for each and every car operated by horses on any line owned or controlled by the said company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not an amendment to the pending section.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I will offer it as a proviso to the pending section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be offered as a proviso.

Mr. WASHINGTON. On reflection, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to give notice that I shall offer it as an additional section, because it will come in much better in that way than by being tacked on as an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his amendment for the present, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As an amendment to the third section?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; as an additional section.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to section 3.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 3, line 23, after the word "that," strike out the words "this act shall not take affect until," and insert the word "unless."

Page 4, after the word "case," in line 35, insert "within thirty days after the approval of this act, then all rights granted to said company by this Congress shall cease and be determined."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute as amended was then adopted.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer my amendment to come in as an additional section of the bill.

The amendment was again read, as above printed.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to make just one statement in regard to this amendment. It is offered simply to insure action in good faith on the part of the company in carrying out the work for which authority is given by this act. It provides that if they do not make the change of motive power within twelve months, they shall be fined $500 a year for every car that they continue to operate by horses. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment offered as an additional section.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 35, noes 52.

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer as an additional section the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the District Commissioners shall have power to permit the use of the tracks of the Metropolitan Railroad Company by other railroad companies in the said District upon such terms and conditions as said Commissioners shall deem just, to the end that the greater convenience of the public may be subserved without the duplication or unnecessary increase of railroad tracks in the business and residence portions of the cities of Washington and Georgetown. If either party is dissatisfied with the compensation for such use so fixed by the Commissioners, the compensation may be determined by the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, under the practice which has now prevailed for some years, wherever Congress grants a charter for a street railroad, that charter invariably contains a provision that where the line of road thus authorized to be constructed coincides with that of any other company the two companies shall use the same tracks. But here is a proposition to legislate in a general way that the District Commissioners shall have the power to give the use of the track of this company to any company at any time. Now, I submit that in view of the uniform practice of Congress on this subject the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] ought not to ask the enactment of a provision the direct effect of which (whatever may be its object) will be, I think, to impair seriously the credit of the company against which this legislation is directed.

With such a provision held over this Metropolitan Company no one can calculate as to the probable receipts from the operation of this road, because it can not be known how much the business of the road may be interfered with by the granting to other companies permission to use its tracks.

For ten years at least, to my knowledge, it has been the practice of Congress in chartering new lines to provide that the tracks wherever they coincided with those of another company might be used by the two companies in common under a proper arrangement as to compensation. It seems to me this matter as it is now left in the hands of Congress, is sufficiently provided for; and that while entrusted to Congress it is in better hands than if the power were given in this general way to the District Commissioners. I believe that the right should remain with Congress to say what shall be the route of a road which is to be chartered and what shall be its rights with reference to the streets of the city. It seems to me that the present course of legislation on this subject is broad enough and fair enough.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] applies only to the new companies. Why not extend a similar provision to these old companies? If a new company is chartered, as the gentleman says, a provision is inserted in its charter that its track shall be used——

Mr. HEARD. My friend does not understand me. I say it is the practice of Congress, and has been ever since I have been a member, that where the line of a new company which Congress charters coincides with that of an existing company, the new company is allowed the right, under reasonable regulations, to use the track of the existing company. During the last two Congresses we have passed probably half a dozen bills permitting the tracks of one company to be used by another, and three or four of them applied to the tracks of the Metropolitan Company.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will state the object that I hope to accomplish by this amendment. Here are certain streets within the limits of the city upon which car lines are now operated. There are suburban roads connecting with these lines. Under the present system every passenger upon one of these suburban roads must change cars when he gets to the city limits. He not only pays an additional charge for transportation, but, no matter how inclement the weather may be, he must change cars; and oftentimes the connections are by no means close.

Now, I think it would be only fair to require all these roads to carry the cars of connecting lines, corresponding with the manner in which we require the general commerce of the country to be conducted. I would not withhold proper compensation. I have no hesitation in saying that each company should be compensated for every new servitude that is put upon its road; but with this provision for compensation I see no reason why this system should not be adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not familiar with this subject, and therefore I would like to ask this question: Would there not be difficulty in permitting the cars of a suburban road propelled by horse power to use the tracks of a line within the city propelled by electricity?

Mr. HEPBURN. Of course it would not be applicable in a case of that kind, and the Commissioners certainly would not permit such a thing to be done. It would be destructive to the electric roads.

Mr. BLAIR. But is it not true that the suburban cars are all drawn by horses?

Mr. HEPBURN. No: on the contrary, so far as I am aware, none of them are. Electricity is the motive power on all, so far as I know, of the suburban roads, just the same that we expect to have on this road.

Mr. BLAIR. You should provide, then, that the motive power is the same in each case.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think this is sufficiently explicit as it is; but if the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment of that kind I shall not object to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If my friend from Iowa will indulge me for a moment I think I may be able to satisfy him that the amendment of the gentleman should not prevail, and for this reason: The amendment proposes to leave the matter of regulating the running of other cars on the tracks of this road to the Commissioners. There is no other line connecting with this one at present, no suburban road. I am in sympathy with the general object the gentleman has in view, but I do not think he will be able to accomplish it in this manner.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this amendment should prevail you will find, I think, that proper connections will soon be made with these roads.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But that can only be done by act of Congress. The District Commissioners could not give that consent; and if the Metropolitan road and the surburban roads desire to extend their tracks so as to make such a connection they can not do it merely by the act of the Commissioners. They must come to Congress and get the right to occupy the streets for such purpose; and when they do come and ask permission to come into the city by any of our streets or avenues we have a right to make them come on the tracks of any other line we choose to give them authority to use. But this amendment would be futile, because the District Commissioners have no power to regulate or provide for the construction of new roads.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think every road that has been chartered has been given authority to make the necessary turn-outs and connections. Now, I know of one road that certainly crosses three or four other street railroads in this city, and I think there is no question but that road would make connection with this one under the present legislation.

Congress has the right to compel this road or any of the others to carry the cars of connecting lines over its tracks. Of course I do not want it done without compensation, but I take it that the purpose of this character of legislation is to accommodate the people of the District of Columbia and that we should enact legislation in their interest rather than in the interest of the corporations.

I am not averse to securing the interest of the corporations, but I do not want it done to the disparagement of the interest of the citizens. I think our first duty is to legislate in their behalf; and I can see no reason why this company should not be required to allow other lines on making compensation for the service to run their cars over its tracks.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit if you make a law applicable alone to this line, it would be an act of injustice to it as compared to the others.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am perfectly willing that my friend from Tennessee shall offer an amendment to the amendment making it applicable to all the others.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with him, in a measure, in this matter, and if he will introduce a bill the Committee on the District of Columbia can report it in a week, and we can take it up on the next District day—a general bill providing for a system of transfers applicable to all of these roads.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should be very glad to avail myself of the services of the gentleman from Tennessee in securing such legislation, but now as we are providing legislation, and have an opportunity to do what is right to the people here—when there is no possible question of the right to do it, for here is a road seeking privileges—if we put this provision on this road there will be no question to litigate about hereafter. Let us do it now, and I will assist the gentleman in securing the enactment of the general legislation he says is possible at a later date.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall apply to all street railway companies now or hereafter operating within the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. That will accomplish the end I have in view. I accept that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEPBURN, as modified, it was adopted.

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now move the previous question on the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Pending that I wish to offer an amendment to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the Chair allow me to read the rule in that connection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order pending a demand for the previous question, or after the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bill. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later to submit his motion.

The question now is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I now move to recommit the bill with the following instructions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit with instructions to report a general bill applicable to all street railway corporations seeking franchises, renewal of franchises, extension of franchises, increase of franchises, or amendment of charters, providing for the sale at public auction for terms of years to the highest bidders, after due advertisement of all such street railway franchises, to be hereafter exercised within the District, subject to provisions for existing equities.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order against the motion to recommit, that it would not be in order as an amendment, and therefore can not be in order as a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I desire to submit the question to the consideration of the Chair. I think it is in order, and I do not know why it is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not in order to amend a private bill by a general proposition. The Chair therefore holds that this motion to recommit is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It seems to me that it is germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. COOMBS), there were—ayes 111, noes 28.

Accordingly, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 66) providing additional clerical force for the Librarian of Congress.

A bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Halteman.

Joint resolution (S. R. 77) providing for the placing of a tablet upon the Capitol to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the building, September 18, 1793.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3713) to provide for the division of the eastern district of Michigan into the northern and southern divisions, and for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States therein, and for other purposes.

GAMBLING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 6109, for which the committee desire to offer as a substitute the bill H. R. 6725.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill H. R. 6109 must be first reported.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill H. R. 6725 for the bill H. R. 6109.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the original bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6109) to amend an act approved January 31, 1883, entitled "An act to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia."

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 31st day of January, 1883, entitled "An act to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia," shall not apply to bookmaking at the spring and fall meetings of any jockey club or other racing association conducted beyond three-fourths of one mile from the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown: Provided, however, That such meetings occur between the 1st day of March and the 15th day of December, and do not exceed the period of eighteen days each.

The SPEAKER. For this bill the gentleman from Missouri desires to offer a substitute.

Mr. HEARD. I desire in the name of the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask unanimous consent to offer as a substitute for the bill which has just been read the bill H. R. 6725.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to offer a substitute. The Clerk will report the substitute which the gentleman from Missouri offers for the bill which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 31st day of January, 1883, being chapter 40 of the laws of the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, shall not apply to bookmaking at any regular meeting of any jockey club or racing association in the District of Columbia conducted on mile tracks and beyond three-fourths of a mile from the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and between the 1st day of April and the 30th day of November; said club or association to be limited to one spring or summer meeting and one fall meeting of not more than eighteen days each in any one year.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] offer an amendment to the substitute?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] offers the following amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "of" in line 7, of section 1, the following words: "The Brightwood Driving Club, at Brightwood, or;" so that it will read: "At any regular meeting of The Brightwood Driving Club, at Brightwood, or any jockey club or racing association, etc."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I suppose this matter is open for general debate yet?

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman desires to speak, of course.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] will explain how this bill more effectually prevents gambling in the District. It will not take more than a minute, I suppose.

Mr. CRAIN. In respect to the amendment I have offered, I have only to say that the Brightwood Driving Club has been in existence for forty-five years. Its track is a half-mile track. I have submitted the amendment to the chairman of the committee, and also to the gentleman whom I suppose to have charge of the bill, and it is acceptable to them. Therefore I presume, if the bill itself is passed, this amendment will be acceptable to the House.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that the changes made by this proposed legislation are to shorten the time in which racing may be carried on, and to limit it to mile tracks. Those are the two substantial changes proposed in the bill. With reference to the pending bill, some of the newspapers in the city have published editorial statements to the effect that the bill would allow racing at any time during the whole year. The purpose of the clubs interested is not to authorize racing at any and all times of the season, but for a period not exceeding eighteen days on any one track during any one year.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there anything in the law now preventing racing on the track?

Mr. HEARD. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa to explain the bill, as he is more familiar with the subject than I am.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if there is anything in the law now to prevent racing horses on the track?

Mr. HAYES. I think not.

Mr. BURROWS. Then what is the object of the bill?

Mr. HAYES. I will explain that.

In 1883 Congress passed a law in regard to gambling, and I think that if anybody will fairly construe the law that they passed at that time they will find it was not intended in anywise to reach legitimate racing or have any reference to it, and I will read that law:

That every person who shall in the District of Columbia set up or keep any gambling table, or any house, vessel, or place on land or water for the purpose of gaming, or gambling device commonly called A. B. C., faro bank, E. O., roulette, equality, keno, thimbles, or "little joker," or any kind of gambling table or gambling device adapted, devised, and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property, or who shall induce, entice, or permit any person to bet or play at or upon any such gaming table or gambling device, or on the side or against the keeper thereof, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than ten years.

Now, I think that it must be perfectly apparent to every one that this was not in anyway aimed at legitimate horse racing or possibly, for that matter, at any other kind. But along about in 1891 there got to be a great deal of abuse and nuisance here in the city, growing out of pool rooms not connected, however, with the racing in the District, or at least with not that idea or purpose, but for the purpose of engaging in the pool business upon races conducted upon tracks all over the United States. The act of that year grew out of the evil of these pool rooms, conducted in relation to races all over the country, and not only in regard to racing, but also as to baseball and every kind of amusement and sport, for that matter.

It was therefore found essential to pass another law to make clear the intent of the law. The intent and object of this law is to do precisely what this present law was intended to do; and any one who hears this law read will see that that was the object and that there was no intention by Congress to pass the law different in substance from what is now sought to be done. That law passed in 1891 reads as follows, and it is the law to-day:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, or within said District within 1 mile of the boundaries of said cities, to bet, gamble, or make books or pools on the result of any trotting race or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election or any contest of any kind, or game of baseball.

It will be seen that this does precisely what, or at least it was the intention to do precisely what is desired to do now—to fix the limit within which these poolrooms and gambling places should be, and to state where they could be conducted, if at all, so far as the racing and baseball were concerned in the District of Columbia, but it was not the intention to in anywise limit the legitimate races or the making of books upon those races outside the cities of Washington and Georgetown and in the District of Columbia. Now, so far as this last law is concerned, I am informed that it met the approval of President Harrison, that it was made by his advice, that it was suggested by him, he having just previous to that vetoed a bill which he did not consider a proper one, in that it drew distinctions and simply excepted or designated a single association; in other words, that it was class legislation. At least this law met his approval, and I am advised it was suggested by him, if not actually drawn by him.

Now, the simple fact is, that the courts have given a construction to that act which I do not believe is a correct one. I believe they violated the plain provision of the first statute that I read in saying that it applies to horse races. I believe they violate the plain provision of the last act when they say that it does not make an exception of horse-racing. The ground upon which they put it is that, while it says certain things, it does not repeal any provision in the first section, and that does apply to horse-racing; but it would be very much better, instead of so construing the act of Congress so as to change the idea of Congress, to consult and carry out the intent of Congress which was evident in the passage of those two laws. Now, then, the two associations that desire this legislation in this District are composed of the very best men in it.

The Commissioners of the District entirely approve the legislation, and I have letters here on file directed to the committee so showing. The people in the localities where the tracks are situated have presented a petition signed by 250 persons, and, as I understand, they are very reputable citizens and comprise the best men of Bennings, where the track is. The press of the city, or at least the Post—I can not speak for the others, as I have not read them—approves and desires it. The people want it; and it is not for the encouragement of gambling. It makes no change in the existing law except to show that this provision heretofore enacted was not intended to reach any such thing as horse-racing and did not apply to it; and it affirmatively says nothing in regard to what would be legal and right or otherwise in regard to horse-racing or anything of the kind.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, as I understand you, all you are seeking is that there shall be two race meetings allowed each year.

Mr. HAYES. In the spring and the fall.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. And that they shall be limited to eighteen days?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; eighteen days at each meeting.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Eighteen days, spring and fall?

Mr. BURROWS. Now, can not you run horses for eighteen days without this legislation?

Mr. HAYES. I will say in reply to that, that the courts of the District——

Mr. BURROWS. Never mind the courts. Can you not have the races without this legislation?

Mr. HAYES. According to the courts, no. According to my own judgment of the law, yes. This bill is simply intended to put the matter beyond controversy.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not think my friend quite understands my question. Suppose you do not modify the law, is there anything to hinder having horse racing for the periods here specified?

Mr. HAYES. Only as I say.

Mr. BURROWS. How?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If it is a good thing at the seasons provided in this bill; why not have it in winter also?

Mr. HAYES. Oh, because it would be likely to lead to abuses if it were permitted generally.

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me ask the gentleman a question. There is now a prohibition, is there not, against bookmaking and gambling of all kinds in this District?

Mr. HAYES. In the cities of Georgetown and Washington and up to a limit of one mile, yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. And this bill is for the purpose of allowing gambling in certain spots in the District, is it not?

Mr. HAYES. Not at all. It is simply to leave it where it was before, and where it was evidently intended to be left by the law of 1891, but where, by reason of a failure in that act to provide for any repeal or modification of preëxisting laws, the courts have held that it is not left.

Mr. COCKRAN. Without reference to what the courts may or may not have held, what I want to know is whether the practical effect of this bill will not be to allow bookmaking and pool selling for a certain number of days at certain tracks in this District.

Mr. HAYES. It is simply intended to say that a law passed in 1883 shall not apply to it. Whether it would apply or not is a question about which there may be some dispute.

Mr. COCKRAN. But you do not propose to create a dispute by your legislation?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir. We propose to put the matter beyond dispute.

Mr. COCKRAN. Consequently your legislation is intended to make it clear that bookmaking and pool selling will be permitted at certain times in the year on certain tracks in this District.

Mr. HAYES. No pool selling.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, bookmaking.

Mr. HAYES. The simple purpose of this bill is to give effect to the law of 1891, just as it reads and as it was intended to operate, although the courts have construed it otherwise, by reason, as I understand, of the failure of words of repeal or modification of preëxisting law.

Mr. COCKRAN. Apart from the act of 1891 or the action of the courts, or any other action.

The practical effect of this proposed legislation is intended to be to permit bookmaking at certain tracks in this District within certain periods of each year?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir. Outside of these two laws it would stand just as it stands under the common law.

Mr. COCKRAN. But, taking those two laws into account, how is it? The purpose of this proposed legislation is not to revive the common law, is it? Because if that were the object there would not be any mention of the number of days. Every day is alike in the eye of the common law, is it not?

Mr. HAYES. I suppose so.

Mr. COCKRAN. Consequently, when you propose to allow bookmaking for a certain number of days during the year at certain special tracks, the object of your legislation must be to give special privileges?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I object to the question as leading. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAYES. There is no connection, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly I will. I want to get light, and now I shall get it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, you will get probably more than you expect. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it is precisely the same as the Ives pool bill which now stands upon the statute book of the State of New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes, it is; and that is the reason I am asking these questions about it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And I want to say that that law gives universal satisfaction to the best class of people in our city. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Including the gentleman's colleague [Mr. COCKRAN] himself?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, including the gentleman himself. The gentleman has never objected to it before. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. I have always objected.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, you have not. That law gives satisfaction to the Sheepshead Bay race track, to the Coney Island race track, to the Jerome Park race track, and to all the best tracks in the State of New York, and I have never yet heard of any person or persons express a desire for repealing that law.

Mr. HAYES. I will ask whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has got all the answer he desired?

Mr. COCKRAN. I have obtained a great deal of additional light; and I would like to know whether the gentleman accepts these explanations as showing the character of this bill?

Mr. HAYES. I do not know anything about the Ives pool law or any such matters in the State of New York. I do not know whether the gentleman approves such a measure or not. I do not deny what the gentleman says, for I do not know anything about those matters.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the purpose of this legislation it is to give certain privileges in the way of gambling to certain race tracks. Now, I have not any objection myself—at least none that I care to discuss now—to the general principle of bookmaking, but I never could recognize the propriety of allowing persons to make bets upon one spot, treating bookmaking in that place as the legitimate exercise of a commercial instinct, while making it felony to do the same thing within a stone's throw of that spot. The Ives pool law in New York has legalized pool selling and bookmaking on certain race tracks, and my colleague [Mr. CAMPBELL] says that law is highly approved by the Coney Island race track, the Jerome Park race track, and every other race track in New York——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of good reputation.

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; every race track "of good reputation." I will add that; and I may say that I know of no race track that is not "of good reputation:" they are "all, all honorable" race tracks! [Laughter.]

But I do know that the Ives pool law of the State of New York is a measure of doubtful constitutionality. It is a measure which the race tracks have never yet been willing to submit to the arbitrament of a court. I do say that it is repugnant to the sense of justice of every person whose conception of law is based on the principles of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, to find that a thing which is made felony by the law in one spot is made innocent in another. I do know that men have been arrested in the city of New York for registering a bet, and for that act have been exposed to the pains and penalties of felony when they could have recorded the same bet within three-quarters of a mile of where they stood and have defied the law, or at least have secured exemption from its operations.

In this matter, as in reference to other propositions to change our statutes, I stand upon the principle of the absolute equality before the law of all citizens everywhere.

If it be proper to bet at Bennings, it is equally proper to bet on Capitol Hill. If it be proper to make betting a felony in this District, I do not recognize the right of Congress to license felony anywhere, and I protest emphatically against a measure which enables a private corporation to license felony. This measure allows me, if I pay admission to a race track, to indulge in the luxury of betting, and in the freest exercise of the betting instinct. I am opposed to granting to any institution or corporation or individual any license or privilege or exemption under the criminal law which can not be extended equally to all other citizens. For that reason I hope this measure will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to enter into any controversy as to what may have taken place in the State of New York under any law of this kind, for I do not know anything about the matter. Neither do I care to dwell upon the reasons which I have stated why I think this bill ought to pass. I do, however, want to deny emphatically and entirely the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] that there ought to be any particular "free trade" in bookmaking or that it might not be deleterious in one place while it would be in another.

In other words, I can very well imagine that it might be to the detriment of public morals and against the interests of the people of the city of Washington to allow bookmaking or pool selling generally in the District; whereas it might be entirely harmless and only an incident of legitimate racing, an incident to the legitimate racing of horses of high blood, to allow such things for a few specified days upon some race track outside of the city limits and away from the great bulk of population. And as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] suggests, it is the custom all over the country to recognize by law such a distinction. That is the way that the Legislatures of the States are generally dealing with this question. They are minimizing the evils of gambling while at the same time not striking a blow at the great industry of raising blooded horses.

Mr. QUIGG. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMPBELL] correctly stated what you intend to accomplish by this bill?

Mr. HAYES. Well, the gentleman has stated so much that I do not know that I can answer the question. I have tried to answer all of the objections that have been raised.

Mr. QUIGG. Why is it, let me ask, that you seem to be so reluctant to say what the bill really is?

Mr. HAYES. Well, that is simply the result of your not understanding what I have said, and not from any reluctance on my part to state the object of the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Is that so?

Mr. HAYES. I have stated time and time again just what the result will be if the bill is adopted; I have stated the reasons back of it, the interests that exist in the District calling for this action, and the wishes of the citizens of the District who desire the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely; and you stated also, if I understood you correctly, that there was something in the law according to the courts which prohibited eighteen days of horse racing in this District.

Mr. HAYES. If you understood me so you understood me incorrectly, or else I failed to make myself understood.

Mr. QUIGG. Is it eighteen days of gambling or eighteen days of horse racing?

Mr. HAYES. Eighteen days of horse racing.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman accept an amendment providing for eighteen days' horse racing and striking out all of the rest of the gambling paraphernalia?

Mr. HAYES. There is no gambling paraphernalia about it to be stricken out.

Mr. COCKRAN. Would the gentleman object to making it distinct and clear that it is a permission to have horse racing for eighteen days in the year?

Mr. HAYES. That is simply a desire to get away from the question. I do not care to occupy the time of the House in going over the ground again. Gentlemen are trying to get away from the only question presented.

Mr. QUIGG. Is not the gentleman himself getting away from it?

Mr. HAYES. No, sir. I have explained clearly and fully the reason, if gentlemen had listened to it, for this enactment. I have stated the construction put upon it by the courts, and called attention to what was desired to be done. What they desire to do in that regard is simply to have the privilege of two tracks in the District of Columbia on which they may conduct eighteen days of fall and spring racing with the ordinary and usual accompaniments, whatever you may choose to call them, that take place on such occasions.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa seems to have some difficulty in explaining the real purposes of the bill. I hold in my hand the views of the minority of the committee, as expressed in the Senate on this bill, and I ask that the Clerk shall read it.

Mr. HEARD. That is not this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. No; but the only change is in the title of the bill, to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia. That is the Senate bill. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the minority.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on the District of Columbia, beg leave to respectfully dissent from the favorable report on the bill (S. 1680) "to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia," for the following reasons:

On the 31st day of January, 1883, an act was approved which provides—

"That every person who shall in the District of Columbia set up or keep any gambling table, or any house, vessel, or place on land or water for the purpose of gaming, or gambling device commonly called A B C, faro-bank, E O, roulette, equality, keno, thimbles, or 'little joker,' or any kind of gambling table or gambling device adapted, devised, and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property, or who shall induce, entice, or permit any person to bet or play at or upon any such gaming table or gambling device, or on the side or against the keeper thereof, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than ten years."

That law is still in force, and doubtless does much towards suppressing gambling in the District of Columbia.

On the 2d day of March, 1891, an act was approved entitled "An act to prevent bookmaking and pool selling in the District of Columbia," the first section of which provides—

"That it shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, or within 1 mile of the boundaries of said cities, to bet, gamble, or make books or pools on the result of any trotting race or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election or any contest of any kind, or game of baseball."

It is claimed that it was the intention of the last-named act to permit bookmaking and pool-selling on race tracks located more than 1 mile from the boundaries of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the language of the act seems to justify that construction. It did not, however, modify or repeal the act of January 31, 1883, and bookmaking and pool-selling continue to be prohibited under that act. The present bill in its amended form will modify the act in question sufficiently to permit gambling on race tracks situated 1 mile from the boundaries of said cities.

We are of opinion that the principle embodied in the act of January 31, 1883, is a wholesome and wise provision. It absolutely prohibits gambling by cards and otherwise in all parts of the District of Columbia. The poor man who is caught at a game of policy, keno, roulette, or any other of the well-known devices of the common gambling fraternity, is punished severely; but in the face of that the present bill, misnamed "A bill to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia," proposes to legalize gambling on race tracks in the interests of the rich and the professional sporting element of the community. We believe the proposed legislation is vicious in principle, and for that reason dissent from the report of the committee, and recommend that adverse action be taken on the bill when it comes before the Senate for consideration.

J. H. GALLINGER,
REDFIELD PROCTOR.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire the House, if it will indulge me for a minute, to know exactly what is the position of the committee on the pending bill, and then I shall move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments. I only wish to say that the bill (H. R. 6109) was sent by the District Commissioners to me, as chairman of the District Committee, with the request that it be introduced in the House. I complied with their request. Subsequently we found on examination that one point which the Commissioners said they wished to accomplish would not be accomplished by the bill. That is to say, the language of the bill they sent failed to make it of general application, as they expected and desired. Therefore we modified the bill as proposed by the Commissioners, and submitted such modified bill to them for their approval. They examined it and returned it with their approval.

The Commissioners in their letter say:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 6, 1891.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners return herewith H. R. bill 6109 "to amend an act approved January 31, 1883, entitled, 'An act to more effectually suppress gambling in the District of Columbia,'" which was referred to them at your instance for their views thereon. This bill is a modification of H. R. 5891, and was prepared by the Commissioners, and recommended by them for adoption in lieu of said bill. The Commissioners are in favor of its enactment.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

HON. JOHN T. HEARD,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

It is a matter which the Commissioners are presumed—and as far as I am concerned I take it for granted that it is true—that the Commissioners know what the people of the District of Columbia desire on this subject, and I am willing to follow their suggestions with regard to the regulations necessary in connection with it. The committee in that spirit presented this bill—the Commissioners' bill—to carry out their wishes, believing that they properly represent the wishes of the people of the District.

I now move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 40.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. HEARD. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will allow me to get an amendment on the bill I will waive the point of a quorum.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is now in the form which the friends of the bill desire, and if the opposition is sufficient to defeat the bill let it go, for I have no assurance that the bill will be at all satisfactory if the amendment I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires to propose to it should be adopted, and I prefer to let the bill as it stands be voted on by the House. I desire in the interest of the remaining business of the District of Columbia on the Calendar to get this bill disposed of in such way as may please the House. The House is fully advised upon it. Let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered. The question is first on the amendment to the substitute, offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. The Clerk will report that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "of," in line 7 of section 1, the following words: "The Brightwood Driving Club at Brightwood, or"

So that it will read:

"Shall not apply to bookmaking at any regular meeting of the Brightwood Driving Club at Brightwood, or any jockey club or racing association," etc.

Mr. HEARD. The committee are willing to accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri as amended.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEARD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 63.

Accordingly the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEARD. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 87.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. HAYES demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint tellers, unless the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw that for a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Then the noes have it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If the point is withdrawn, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of no quorum withdrawn?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. Then, if the point of no quorum is withdrawn, the noes have it, and the bill is lost.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

[Cries of "Too late."]

WATER-MAIN ASSESSMENTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 3294, which is a bill relating to the making of water-main assessments in this District, and as I am sure there will be no objection to it, I ask that it be considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter assessments levied for laying water mains in the District of Columbia shall be at the rate of $1.25 per linear front foot against all lots or land abutting upon the street, road, or alley in which a water main shall be laid: Provided, That no lot shall be taxed twice: And provided further, That corner lots shall be taxed only on their front, with a depth of not exceeding 100 feet; any excess of the other front over 100 feet shall be subject to above rate of assessment.

The SPEAKER. To this bill the committee recommend certain amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in lines 7 and 8, the words "that no lot shall be taxed twice: And provided further," and inserting after the word "assessment," in line 11, the following words:

"And provided further, That in all cases now pending where assessments have been regularly made, and where there has not been paid a sum equal to $1.25 per linear foot, as estimated above, then only so much shall be collected as will make the whole sum paid equal to $1.25 per linear foot. But this act is not intended to give any ground of action for the refunding of any sum already paid in excess of $1.25 per linear foot."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I think there should be some explanation of this bill.

Mr. POST. The present system of taxing for water mains is laid upon the square feet of the lot, one cent and a quarter for each square foot. Now, this works satisfactorily, perhaps, down in the city, where the lots are approximately 100 feet deep; but when you get outside of that, where the lots are much deeper, it makes an enormous tax upon the owners of the lots. The cost of a 10-inch main is about 70 cents per linear foot. It is proposed to change this system, so that the tax shall be levied on the linear foot instead of the square foot. Of course, the present difficulty can be avoided by simply cutting off the back part of the lot; but it is not a satisfactory way, and the fair way is to levy this tax per linear foot. Then every man whose property fronts upon the street pays his fair share of the tax.

Mr. BURROWS. Is the bill unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. POST. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the same is true of the Senate committee.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POST, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. LAYTON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STRAUS, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STOCKDALE, for this day, on account of sickness.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 24, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

POTOMAC FLATS LITIGATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, certain information relative to the present status of the suit in regard to the Kidwell flats, in the District of Columbia, together with drafts of bills relative to litigation concerning that property; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PASCO. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from certain Cherokee delegates, representing the Cherokee Nation, transmitting a memorial adopted by that nation, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called McRae bill, relating to a Territorial form of government for the Cherokee Nation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the early completion of the improvement of the harbor of Galveston, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Henry P. Cox, of Portland, Me., and the petition of F. E. Richards, of Portland, Me., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1534, repealing that portion of the interstate-commerce law which prevents railroads from pooling; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the memorial of Mrs. G. M. Barclay, of Detroit, Mich., and 266 other women of Michigan, members of the Presbyterian Church, remonstrating against the admission of Utah into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of the Trunk Makers' Union, of the Furniture Movers' Union, and of the Book Binders and Rulers' Union, all of Detroit, Mich., praying for the governmental control of the telegraph service; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of 33 citizens of Burlington, Iowa, praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I present several petitions, numerously signed by ex-Union soldiers of Oregon, in which they represent that there are pending before the Commissioner of Pensions 650,000 unadjusted applications for pensions. They represent that many of these have been pending for years, and they pray for the enactment of legislation by Congress compelling the settlement of all those cases by December 31, 1894. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRICE presented a memorial of 913 citizens of Findlay, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the American Agents' Association, of Camden, Ohio, praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the American Agents' Association, of Camden, Ohio, and a memorial of Cigar Makers' Union, No. 48, of Toledo, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Chinese treaty; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation for the better protection of American seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the abrogation of any treaty under which reciprocal relations have been established between the United States and any foreign country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Young Men's Democratic Club, of Zanesville, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 5575, proposing to take from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers all or nearly all control and place the same under the government of the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Cleveland Permanent Building and Loan Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the adoption of a certain amendment relating to building and loan associations to the Wilson tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1542) to amend section 4746, Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late adjutant-general United States Army, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HUNTON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1947) to authorize the erection of a municipal building at Washington City, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin introduced a bill (S. 1948) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 1949) for the relief of James E. North; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 79) to require street railway companies in the District of Columbia to pave and to repair pavements with asphalt, brick, or granite blocks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. POWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3924) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of the Hon. Randall Lee Gibson, lately a Senator and formerly a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1803) to amend the act of June 22, 1892, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak." The bill proposes to extend the time of constructing a bridge across the Missouri River. It is very brief.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of June 22, 1892, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.," is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the 22d day of June, 1894."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the bill reported from a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce without amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON LAND GRANTS.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 1649) providing for the survey of the land described in the grant to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States, out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, and consistent with the provisions of this act;" in line 4, after the word "dollars," to strike out "or so much thereof as is necessary for the purpose of this act, to pay the cost and expense of said survey, which money so appropriated may," and insert "shall;" in line 7, after the word "said," to insert "Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road;" in line 11, after the word "then," to strike out "and there;" and in the same line, after the word "for," to insert "and credited to;" and in line 12, after the word "act," to strike out "and shall be credited to the purposes of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $22,000 shall be deposited by the said Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company in some United States depository which shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be deemed appropriated when so deposited, and shall be then used for and credited to the purposes of this act; any excess of the said deposit and appropriation remaining after paying the cost of said survey, shall be returned and paid to said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after the word "each" to insert "for the amount so expended in making said survey;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That after said survey shall have been completed and the cost thereof ascertained and paid, as above provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to said company certificates of deposit in triplicate for $200 each, for the amount so expended in making said survey, which may be assigned by indorsement and be received in payment for lands entered by settlers under the preëmption and homestead laws of the United States or for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 3, line 8, after the words "United States," I move to strike out the words:

Or for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws of the United States.

The way the bill stands it gives a floating land warrant which can be located upon any land regardless of anything. That is not right, and it is against the policy which the Public Lands Committee, I understand, has pursued for years and years.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I have not the bill before me, but under the existing laws the settlers in any township may have——

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will permit me, it leaves these certificates receivable for lands entered by settlers under the preëmption and homestead laws of the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. In payment, instead of money; that is all.

Mr. COCKRELL. It leaves it that way; but the provision I move to strike out is entirely additional to that. It is very adroitly inserted in the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the bill is not subject to the objection made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. The words are here as plain as A B C.

Mr. MARTIN. In the seventh line of section 3 it is provided that the certificate may be "received in payment for lands entered by settlers under the preëmption and homestead laws of the United States."

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not propose to touch that provision. Will the Senator read the remainder of the clause?

Mr. MARTIN. "Or for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws of the United States."

Mr. COCKRELL. Those are the words I move to strike out.

Mr. DOLPH. In the first place, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, we repealed the preëmption laws several years ago, so that there is probably no case where these warrants could be used in payment of——

Mr. COCKRELL. There are thousands of cases of preëmption pending that have not been disposed of.

Mr. DOLPH. Not preëmptions to be commuted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Liable to be commuted. I ask for the reading of the report. That will explain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. If Senators are not disposed to strike out this clause we shall go into a discussion of the merits of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, March 28, 1894, and was interrupted by—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think the Senator from Missouri is under a misapprehension as to the effect of the words he has moved to strike out.

Mr. COCKRELL. When we get through with the reading of the report we shall know better.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I supposed the reading of the report was finished.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; it has only just commenced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the report will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, and was interrupted by—

Mr. MARTIN. I suggest that it will be impossible to dispose of the bill this morning if the report of the committee is to be read through. I therefore suggest that the bill be passed over until to-morrow morning, and I give notice now that after the transaction of the regular routine business to-morrow morning I shall again ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Why not let the entire report be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the entire report will be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1649) providing for the survey of the land described in the grant to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, in the State of Oregon, have had the bill under consideration, and report the same back with sundry amendments, and recommend its passage as amended.

Your committee recommend that all after the word "that," in line 1, second section, and all of line 2 and all of line 3, in the same section, preceding the words "the sum," and all of line 4, after the word "dollars," and all of line 5 and all of line 6, in the same section, be stricken out, and that in lieu of the word "may," at the end of line 6, in said section, that the word "shall" be inserted. That after the word "said" and preceding the word "company," in line 7 of said section, that the following words be inserted: "Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road." That the words "and there," in line 10, be stricken out, and that the following words be inserted after the word "for," in line 10, in said section, "and credited to." That all of line 11, preceding the word "any," be stricken out. Also that the following words be inserted after the word "each," in line 4 of section 3, and numbered line 5, to wit: "for the amount so expended in making said survey." That lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 in the original bill be renumbered as lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, respectively.

All of which amendments are shown in red ink in the bill herewith submitted.

Your committee herewith return as part of this report a letter from Commissioner of the General Land Office of the date of March 7, 1894, to the Secretary of the Interior and a letter from the honorable Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the committee under date of March 14, 1894, together with a brief submitted in support of said bill.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 14, 1894.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon Senate bill No. 1649, "Providing for the survey of the land described in the grant to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company in the State of Oregon."

The bill authorizes the company named to deposit a sufficient sum of money to make a survey of all the lands within the indemnity limits of their grant, and to receive in satisfaction of such deposit certificates assignable by indorsement and receivable in payment for lands entered under the laws of the United States in the manner now provided for by law for the payment of surveys under what is known as the "deposit system." As the greater part of the lands so surveyed would be subject, after survey, to settlement and entry under the general land laws, I can see no objection to the passage of the bill, provided it is amended in the manner suggested by the Commissioner in his report, to wit, that the appropriation shall not be available until the sum shall be deposited by the company in the manner prescribed.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

HON. JAMES H. BERRY,
Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department on February 21, 1894, for report, of Senate bill 1649, "Providing for the survey of the land described in the grant to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, in Oregon."

The first section of the bill provides for the survey of all the unsurveyed lands within the limits of the withdrawal under the grant to aid in the construction of said wagon road. The second section appropriates $22,000 for making the survey, or so much thereof as may be necessary. It further provides that this money may be deposited by the wagon road company in some United States depository to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and when so deposited shall be deemed appropriated for the purposes of the act; any excess remaining after the survey of all the lands to be repaid to the company.

The third section provides, practically, that after the survey shall have been completed and the cost thereof ascertained and paid, the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the company certificates of deposit in triplicate, for $300 each, assignable by indorsement and receivable in payment of lands entered under the laws of the United States.

Senate bill 819, which provided for the survey of the unsurveyed lands within the withdrawal aforesaid, having been referred to this office, a favorable report thereon was submitted to the Department on October 19, 1893, and on November 24, 1893, a similar report was submitted on House bill 3417, introduced for a like purpose. The latter report was subsequently withdrawn and an unfavorable report submitted on January 15, 1894.

The only objection to the passage of a bill for the survey of these lands at this time is the expense involved, but as the company has agreed to advance the money necessary, this objection is removed.

I would suggest, however, that the second section of the bill appropriates the money without requiring the company, as a condition-precedent, to deposit it, and said section should, I think, be so amended that the appropriation shall not be available until the sum shall be deposited by the company in the manner prescribed.

With letter of February 23, 1894, the attorneys for the company, Messrs. Chandler and Kremer, inclosed a copy of the bill with the third section amended so as to limit the use of the certificates of deposit provided for to that now authorized by law for military bounty land warrants, and asked that the office specify which form is satisfactory in the event of any recommendation concerning the bill.

The bill, thus amended, would be free from objection, and I recommend that it be so passed.

I return herewith the copy of the bill transmitted by the Department, together with the letter of the attorneys for the company, of February 23, and the copy of the bill with the third section amended as aforesaid.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Memorandum in support of S. 1649, providing for the survey of certain Oregon lands.

1. The company is directed by the bill to deposit moneys sufficient to pay for the surveys.

2. This money will go towards paying for surveying the even sections which the company can not get in any event, and all the odd sections, only part of which the company is likely to select, and for drawing out the lines of survey through the lands reserved by proclamation of the President; thus the company is to advance a large sum for work on lands not to be selected by it, and the remainder for work on lands to be selected by it, but which the Government is bound to survey. (Act of July 5, 1866; case of Southern Pacific Railway Company, Copp's Public Land Laws of 1882, volume 2, page 749; Pacific Railway Company vs. United States, 124 U. S., 124.)

3. It is the policy of the Department to close all the pending grants. The object of this is to throw open as much land to settlement as possible. There are within the limits of this grant several hundred thousand acres of land now surveyed, but withdrawn from entry and settlement.

4. By the terms of the act and under the decisions of the courts all the odd sections within the limits of the grant are withdrawn from entry and settlement till the grant is satisfied. (Denny vs. Dodson, 32 F. R., 902; Southern Pacific Railway Company vs. Wiggs, 43 F. R., 333; Wisconsin Railroad Company vs. Price County, 133 U. S., 496.)

5. And the Secretary of the Interior has withdrawn all of the odd sections within the limits of this grant by special order of the Department, and they are now so withdrawn. Neither the present nor any future Secretary has power to revoke these withdrawals, and thus deprive the owners of the grant of the right of selection which inured to them by the force of the statute and the act of the Department. (Noble vs. U. R. Logging Company, 147 U. S., 165.)

6. Thus hundreds of thousand acres will continue to be tied up and closed to the settler until these surveys are completed and the company enabled to make its selections.

7. The surveyor-general has reported in favor of making the surveys in the following words: "Regarding the survey of these lands, I would respectfully recommend that said survey be made, if possible, by special deposit or otherwise, as it would not only be an act of justice to the company, but a relief to a number of home-seekers and of vast interest to the State."

8. Equities in favor of company. These lands were earned over twenty years ago. The company has been paying taxes; has built and kept up the road and taken care of the land; has, by building and maintaining the road, opened up a large country to settlement whereby other lands of the United States have been greatly increased in value. In return for these benefits the Government caused the owners to be harassed by investigations and suits; have put them to great expense and trouble and suspended their rights, whereby appropriations of former years have been diverted to other sections of the country and could not be applied to the purpose of these surveys. Under these circumstances it would seem no more than just that Congress should order the surveys. Where the United States have done or suffered wrong it is presumable they will repair it.

9. The act of July 5, 1866, is a contract. Of this contract the Government has had the benefit. It can not now be heard to repudiate it and refuse the surveys. The duty to survey is an essential part of the grant, being one of the incidents thereof. This was not a donation, gift, or gratuity, but a grant founded on a consideration—a contract conferring mutual benefits and imposing mutual obligations, and the Government is bound to carry it into effect. (Forsyth vs. Reynolds, 15 How., 358.)

10. The special-deposit clause in the bill is beneficial to the Government. The system of special deposits originated in the tenth section of the act of May 30, 1862 (12 Stats., 410). At that time the finances of the Government were exceedingly embarrassed, its entire resources being pledged to the conduct of the war; the reduction of the civil expenses was a necessary object of legislation, and so long as reduction was obtained the means were not too closely scrutinized. Amongst other civil appropriations Congress was indisposed to expend the usual sums upon the public surveys, it being considered that the disposition of its public lands by the Government could reasonably wait upon the preservation of its ownership.

This policy was generally acquiesced in, but the Pacific coast was an exception. The immediate pressure of the war did not injuriously affect that distant region. On the contrary, it rather created there an era of prosperity. For many reasons this was particularly exhibited in the matter of emigration; thousands of people escaped the immediate horrors and personal obligations of the war by settling on the coast; this in turn occasioned a sudden taking up of public land there and a consequent demand for an unusual extension of the public surveys. But this demand encountered the necessity for absolute reduction and almost total cessation of appropriations for that purpose, a condition not essentially dissimilar from that which prevails at present.

It is clearly no injury to the United States to have its public domain surveyed. To that end Congress has yearly appropriated large sums of money which have been a considerable tax upon the public land revenues. But, however large may be such appropriations, the operation of the laws for the sale has always anticipated the survey of the public lands.

11. The making of the surveys will benefit the Government and the people. It is for the interest of the Government in the disposal of its own lands that these surveys should be made promptly. It is of great importance to the citizens of Oregon to have these lands opened up for settlement. The increase of population and the general growth of the country show that the demand for these lands is real. Until quite recently the State of Oregon has made rather slow progress, but the era of improvement has overtaken the country. The title to these lands has been settled by the decition in 148 United States, 31. All that is now required to have the lands opened to actual settlers is the making of the surveys here applied for.

By the terms of the granting act there were granted to the State "alternate sections of public lands designated by odd numbers, 3 sections per mile, to be selected within 6 miles of said road."

After the survey of the line of the road had been filed all the "odd" sections on either side of the road for 6 miles were withdrawn from public entry, and must necessarily remain so withdrawn until the rights of the present owners are fully satisfied. The public is at this moment shut out, not only from the lands owned by these applicants, and from which they and the settlers to whom they would sell are wrongfully excluded by the refusal to survey, but from all the Government's land adjoining theirs, which can not be taken up until the satisfaction of the rights mentioned. The only impediment to further settlement of the lands is the refusal to order the surveys. The benefits, proximate and remote, of immediate action to the Government itself, to the State of Oregon, and to the people at large are incalculable.

12. Delay is injuring the applicants. The further denial of the surveys is a great hardship and injustice to these applicants. Daily their timber is being cut within the grant, and it is only a matter of time when a large portion of the grant may be rendered utterly valueless; and every day's delay increases the number of squatters against whose claims it is necessary to defend the title.

The lands which it is desired to have surveyed are accessible only in the summer season. Unless the bill is passed promptly another year's delay will be unavoidable.

[United States Statutes, volume 14, page 89.]

In 1889 Congress passed an act requiring the Attorney-General to bring suit in the name of the United States in the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon, against all persons claiming an interest in this grant to determine the question of the construction of the road, the legal effect of the governor's certificates, the right of the United States to resume the land, and to obtain judgment declaring the land coterminous with any uncompleted portions of the road forfeited, saving the rights of any bona fide purchaser, the suit to be tried and adjudicated like other suits in equity.

On August 29, 1889, in pursuance of this authority suit was commenced. Two pleas were filed by the defendants, in one of which they set up the foregoing facts as an estoppel, and in the other the defense of bona fide purchaser. The case was heard on the pleas and bill; the pleas were held good and the bill dismissed. The Government appealed to the Supreme Court, which reversed the judgment on the ground that there should have been an investigation into the merits. When the case came back to the circuit court the pleas were withdrawn, a general answer filed, and the case tried on its merits; numerous witnesses were examined, a mass of testimony taken, and judgment was given in favor of the defendants, finding the facts as above stated and dismissing the bill. The Government appealed to the circuit court at San Francisco. In the meantime trials had been had in two other similar cases, and the judgments in favor of the defendants in those cases affirmed in the circuit court of appeals and in the Supreme Court of the United States, whereupon, upon motion of the owners of these lands, and with the consent of the Attorney-General, the Government's appeal from the judgment in their favor was dismissed. During all this time selections had been suspended by the Department and no patents issued since October 30, 1882. Numerous applications to have the lands surveyed were made from time to time, and early in 1892 formal application by the company to have the lands surveyed, and offering to pay for the same, or deposit the sums necessary to pay for the same, was made to Secretary Noble, who denied the application.

After the latest decision of the Supreme Court and the decision of the law officers of the Government to dismiss the appeal at San Francisco, application to have the lands surveyed was made to the Department.

The said application was made March 23, 1893, and on the 25th day of the same month was, by the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, referred to the surveyor-general for the State of Oregon. The surveyor-general was requested to furnish a description of the land in question, and the probable cost of the survey required. On April 15, 1893, he reported to the Commissioner. The report describes the lands and recommends the survey in the following words: "Regarding the survey of these lands, I would respectfully recommend that said survey be made, if possible, by special deposit or otherwise, as it would not only be an act of justice to the company, but a relief to a number of home seekers and of vast interest to the State."

The estimated cost of the survey is $21,155. On April 27, 1893, the Commissioner of the General Land Office reported to the honorable Secretary of the Interior. The report refers to the application of March 23, 1893, particularly to the statements therein contained as to the litigation concerning these lands, and finds that the said statements are correct. Relying on a previous decision of the Department in a railway case (Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company), the report finds that the proposition for deposit can not be entertained. The report states that there are $4,000 in the reserve fund, but that the same is wholly inadequate for the survey applied for, and recommends that the applicant be advised to apply to Congress, as was done in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific Railway Company.

The company acted upon this suggestion, and in September, 1893, bills were introduced in the Senate and House of Representatives. Both bills were referred to the Public Lands Committee of the respective Houses, and by them transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, who referred them to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner wrote to the Secretary October 19, 1893, favoring the passage of the Senate bill 819. His letter was transmitted by the Secretary to the Hon. James H. Berry, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, with a communication from the Secretary concurring in the Commissioner's recommendation and favoring the passage of the bill.

On November 24, 1893, the Commissioner wrote to the Secretary favoring the passage of H. R. 3417. This letter remained in the office of the Secretary of the Interior until about the middle of January, 1894, when it was returned to the Commissioner with the request that it be withdrawn and a contrary recommendation sent to the Secretary of the Interior. This was on January 15, 1894, and the Commissioner's letter recommending that the bill be not passed was sent by the Secretary to the Hon. THOMAS C. MCRAE, chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands, with a letter concurring in the said recommendation. The bill has since been reported adversely.

Thereafter the pending bill was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, who referred it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Commissioner's report favoring the passage of the bill, together with the Secretary's letter concurring therein, has been transmitted to the chairman of this committee. Copies of the report and letter are annexed hereto.

The decision of the Supreme Court sending the cases back to have the merits investigated is reported as United States vs. Dalles Military Wagon Road Company (148 United States, 599).

The decision of the Supreme Court affirming the judgment in the two cases of like instance is reported as United States vs. California and Oregon Land Company (148 United States, 31).

The grant was made by act of Congress approved July 5, 1866. The grant is a conveyance and a contract. Of this contract the Government has had the benefit. It can not now be heard to repudiate it and refuse the surveys. The duty to survey is an essential part of the grant, being one of the incidents thereof. This was not a donation, gift, or gratuity, but a grant founded on a consideration—a contract conferring mutual benefits and imposing mutual obligations, and the Government is bound to carry it into effect. (Forsyth vs. Reynolds, 15 How., 358.)

Section 2, act of July 5, 1866, provides "That the said lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of by the Legislature thereof for the purposes aforesaid, and for no other, and the said road shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from tolls or other charges upon the transportation of any property, troops, or mails of the United States."

By the decision in United States versus this company it is adjudicated that the lands in question were granted and conveyed in consideration of the construction of the road; that the company did construct the road, and that the Government has the benefit of such construction and of the road, and has the benefit of the road to-day. It would, under these circumstances, be in the highest degree immoral and unjust for the United States to repudiate this contract.

IT IS THE DUTY OF THE GOVERNMENT TO MAKE SURVEYS.

The company is not bound to make the survey. This grant was not, like those to the Northern Pacific and other railroad companies, made on condition that the grantee pay for the survey, nor does the act of July 31, 1876, nor any of the decisions thereunder, require the Secretary to demand payment of the cost of surveys from these applicants. (Act of July 31, 1876, 18 Stat., 121; Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Traill County, 115 U. S.; case of Southern Pacific Railroad Company, Copp's Public Land Laws of 1882, vol. 2, p. 749.)

Where the granting act provides for the payment of the costs of survey before issuance of patent, such payment is a condition-precedent, but the act of July 5, 1866, makes no such provision. The only conditions are the building of the road and the certificate of the governor. These conditions have been fully performed, as admitted by the Department. To require the applicant to pay the costs of surveying under these circumstances would be to attach a new condition. This can not be done, as its effect would be to deprive the applicant of property rights. Such conditions may be fixed before but not after a grant is earned. (County of Cass vs. Morrison, 28 Minn., 257; North Pacific Railroad Company vs. Traill County, 115 U. S., 600; Pacific Railway Company vs. United States, 124 U. S., 124.)

LANDS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. MARTIN. I give notice that I shall endeavor to call up, when the bill which has just gone over is disposed of, the bill (H. R. 5065) to ratify the reservation of certain lands made for the benefit of Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes, which is a matter of grave importance and ought to be attended to at the very earliest possible moment if the Territory is to get any advantage from it.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LILLY.

Mr. CAMERON. I give notice that I shall call up on Saturday next, at 3 o'clock, the resolutions of the House of Representatives relating to the death of my late colleague in that body, Hon. William Lilly.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. CAREY, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate upon the bill (H. R. 6442) to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes, and the amendments of the Senate thereto.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 3294) to regulate water-main assessments in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, a legislator is often compelled to make an election between two parliamentary measures, neither of which meets his entire approval. It must necessarily be so, because no one in a large representative body can frame a measure which will command the approval of every member of the assembly. Every act of legislation must necessarily be a matter of compromise, and no act of legislation more necessarily so than that which imposes taxes upon imports.

The bill we are now considering does not meet my entire approval; I doubt if in all its provisions it meets the approval of any Senator on this side of the Chamber; but as it is it shall have my cordial support. If I find there is a prospect of improving it I may offer and support some amendments to it; but whether I succeed in having them engrafted upon it or not I shall bow to the collective judgment of my side of the Chamber and support whatever conclusion it shall reach.

I believe, sir, that is due from me and due from every party man. This is a strict party measure, and it has been a party measure from the foundation of the Government and from the organization of the party to which I belong.

Mr. President, there are two opposing views about tariffs, and the two parties now in existence in this country are marshaled upon these two opposing lines. The party to which I belong believes that taxes should be imposed upon the people for the sole purpose of raising sufficient revenue to support the administration of an honest and economical Government; it believes in equal and exact justice to every citizen of the Republic; it opposes class legislation in all its forms. Hence in imposing duties the Democratic policy and the Democratic principle are to so lay the duty as to raise the revenue and to raise it with the least possible disturbance of the employment and business of the people and the least possible burden to the taxpayer. Our friends on the other side believe in a system of taxation that will make the burden as heavy as possible, because it will build up a favored class in the Government. They do not believe in equality. They believe in favoritism, and their policies are chosen and wisely chosen to build up a governing class in the country to control the administration of the Government.

Had I been chosen to construct the tariff bill, and if I had had the 44 Democratic members of this Chamber in perfect accord with my views, I should have constructed the bill on very different lines from those on which it has been constructed. I would not have left coffee and tea on the free list and taxed woolen and cotton goods and manufactures of iron and steel. I would have put the tax on coffee, tea, sugar, and fruits. Why? Because it carries out the Democratic principle of obtaining the revenues with the least possible burden to the taxpayer. Our friends put the duties on cotton goods, woolen goods, and iron and steel, because in raising the requisite revenue for the Government they raise four or five times as much for a favored class. We raised last year $55,000,000 from the duties on cotton and woolen goods. Fifty-five million dollars could have been raised from a tax on sugar that would have carried $7,000,000 of incidental protection to the sugar-growers in the United States, and the whole burden of taxation would have been $62,000,000 out of the pockets of the people. Fifty-five million dollars was raised on cotton and woolen goods, $600,000,000 worth of which was produced in this country and raised in price by the imposition of the duties, taking out of the pockets of the people two or three hundred millions of dollars, while there was only $55,000,000 of revenue carried to the public Treasury. Here is the distinctive line of difference between the two policies of taxation, the Democratic and the Republican systems.

Mr. President, the Democratic party, from its organization, has been the liberty party of this country. It has believed that the highest possible beneficence that could come to the people of the United States would come when they enjoyed the largest possible liberty and every natural right with which the Creator endowed them. Mr. Jefferson taught us that the proper function of government was not to deprive the citizen of any one of his natural rights, but to declare and enforce every one, and that government was instituted among a free people to secure every right to every citizen. The Democratic party, in its convention of 1836, taking its words from the pen of Thomas Jefferson, declared in the platform upon which Martin Van Buren was nominated and elected:

> That every man is under the natural duty of contributing to the necessities of society, and this is all the law should enforce on him.

There, sir, is the creed of our party, and in 1840 they said:

> That justice and sound policy forbid the Federal Government to foster one branch of industry to the detriment of another, or to cherish the interests of one portion to the injury of another portion of our common country.

In 1844 they reaffirmed that principle, and in 1848 again reaffirmed it, and further said that "the triumph of 1844 had fulfilled the hopes of the Democracy of the Union in the noble impulse given to the cause of free trade by the repeal of the tariff of 1842 and the creation of the more equal, honest, and productive tariff of 1846."

In 1856 they reaffirmed the same principle, and in addition they declared that—

> The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world.

Here is our creed. The Democratic party has never believed in exercising the power to create fortunes for any private individual or any corporation. It has stood for protection, not against competition, but protection against wrong; protection against injury; protection to every right of the citizen, natural and acquired. This has been its creed from the beginning. In harmony with that creed had I drawn the bill to be adopted by my party the very first thing that I should have done would have been to select those articles which would produce revenue sufficient to administer the Government with the least possible draft upon the people.

In the second place, I should have placed upon the free list all coal, all ore, all metals in pigs, bars, blooms, billets, slabs, sheets, in short, everything that is required to be manufactured before going into consumption—all wool, cotton, hemp, jute, and flax, all yarns, and everything that requires to be manufactured Why? In order that we may produce our goods at the lowest possible cost. Why? In order that we may go out into the markets of the world, undersell all rivals, and give employment to all our people. If we tax the materials we place that beyond the power of our labor, however skillful it may be; we shut the doors against its employment, and turn our people into the streets to come as they are coming to Washington now, to beg for relief by demanding that the Government shall issue paper promises that it can not perform. I would have had free materials and a low revenue tax on the finished products. Then, if that did not bring in sufficient revenue for an efficient administration of the Government, I would have put a tax on accumulated wealth.

Mr. President, in dealing with the question of taxing the products of labor going from the producer to the consumer the legislator ought at all times of the day and night to keep his eye upon the employment of the labor of his country. That is a subject of more importance than the revenue. No step should be taken in a legislative assembly that is calculated to narrow the opportunities for work. The great body of the people not only in the United States, but all over the world, have to live by daily toil. It is a daily struggle for subsistence, and that struggle ought never to be made harder or darker by the interposition of the legislative arm. But rather, more opportunities ought to be afforded to the laborer, and every obstruction that either nature or legislative action has interposed should be removed out of the way of that employment.

Look to-day, sir, upon our country. Twenty-two millions of laborers engaged in gainful occupations are struggling to support a population of 67,000,000, three times as many as themselves. The life, the subsistence, the clothing of this vast population depend upon the stroke of the arms of 22,000,000. The most important branch of our industry, the one upon which every other is engrafted, the one upon whose prosperity that of all others depend, is that of agriculture. No man will dispute that. We have 9,000,000 people employed in the fields and farms, 4,250,000 in manufactures, 2,000,000 in transportation, and over 5,000,000 in personal and professional services, all depending upon the farm as the mudsill of the whole industrial system. What does our farmer depend on?

Mr. President, from way back in the past, as far as we have any official statistics, way back to the year 1820, it is shown that from 70 to 80 per cent of all the exports of this country have been from our fields and farms. We have been told in the last thirty years that protection will build up in this country manufactures and mining and other industries which will give us a home market for the consumption of the surplus products of our fields. What, sir, has become of those prophesies? After three years of the most exhausting taxation on imports that this or any other country has ever had, two-thirds of all the cotton in the Southern States still goes to foreign markets to be sold. Why have we not built up cotton manufactures to consume this cotton in this country?

A large surplus of wheat and provisions still seeks a consumption in foreign markets. It can not find it at home. Every mouth is fed, every back is clothed, every want is satisfied that American farmers can satisfy, and yet there are from $700,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of surplus products from the farms that must either go to waste or hunt a market in foreign lands. It has been so continuously with all your promises of adequate home markets for all products. For thirty long years you have been promising us a home market for all our cotton. For thirty years you have been promising us a market for all our surplus provisions. For thirty years you have been promising us a home market for all our breadstuffs, and three years ago when you were making the McKinley tariff you told the people in the wheat fields of the Northwest that you were going to bring them consumers for all their surplus wheat.

The Committee on Finance of the Fifty-first Congress, one of the ablest that ever assembled in the history of this Chamber, reported to this body the bill which is now a law. In their report they told the people of the United States that we could not longer depend on sending our wheat out of the country to find a market, that we must depend upon the more certain and more remunerative home market which they sought to build up by breaking down imports and inviting people to come here from foreign countries in sufficient numbers to consume the surplus wheat produced by the farmers of the Northwest.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] the other day descanted upon some of the lamentations of Mr. Webster in 1846, when he said the country would come to ruin if the Walker bill was passed. It was passed, and universal prosperity followed it. Mr. Webster's prophecies fell to the ground, yet the false prophets are all over the land, still repeating the same prophecies day after day and year after year. I visited a play in the city of Washington some time ago in which there was a character called Col. Maverick Brander, who, contrasting his situation with that of Daniel Webster under similar circumstances, said that he found it very difficult to keep up with Daniel's gait. But there are statesmen in this country who not only find it not at all difficult to keep up with the false prophecies of Mr. Webster but surpass him.

Let me read what the Committee on Finance of the Fifty-first Congress say:

> The competition in wheat-growing which has been developed in India, South America, Australia, and in the British possessions in North America, is likely to make unprofitable the production of this cereal for exportation by our people, and to cause the wheat-grower of the Northwest to look to an enlargement of the certain and remunerative home market. This enlarged and profitable market can only be secured by increasing the number of people engaged in other than agricultural pursuits, and by furnishing to all increased employment without diminution of wages. To cripple our manufacturing interests and reduce the purchasing power of our workingmen will result in augmenting the number of competitors in the field of agricultural production, and the increased supply could, in that event, only find a market in Europe by enforced competition with India at ruinous prices. Wheat can now be laid down in Liverpool from the central provinces of India at as low a cost for transportation as from Chicago, and Indian wheat can be delivered in New York at less cost for tranportation than from the wheat fields of Dakota.

Did the committee mean to say that a bushel of wheat could be produced in India at a cost and laid down in New York and sold at a price that would drive the Dakota wheat out of the market? I am not advised as to the cost of transportation from India to New York. I can not believe that it is as cheap as the transportation from Dakota to New York, but I do know that a bushel of wheat can not be produced in India and sold in the city of New York in competition with a bushel of wheat grown anywhere in the United States. Cost of production has much to do with the market price, and in this instance much more than cost of transportation. Do you tell me that a people who plow with a fork of a tree, who use the primitive methods of agriculture can compete with those who use machinery? Do you tell me that 300,000,000 people, a large majority of whom are farmers, and do not raise as much wheat as our 67,000,000 can take from us our home market?

India produces about 320,000,000 bushels of wheat with her 300,000,000 people. The United States with 64,000,000 people produced 611,780,000 bushels of wheat the next year after this doleful prophecy was made upon the floor of this Chamber. What has been the verification of that prophecy? The bill that they promised was passed. They promised that nonagriculturists should come in sufficient abundance to take up and consume profitably the surplus products of the wheat-growers of the West. That was the prophecy and the promise. What was its fulfillment? The very next year we exported 225,000,000 bushels of wheat; and in three years after that prophecy was uttered on this floor we exported to foreign countries more than 450,000,000 bushels of wheat. Not only could we compete in the city of New York or Boston or anywhere else on this continent, but we could pay the cost of transportation and compete in the markets of the world; and in the great wheat market of the world—the city of London—we have been doing so.

A very exhaustive examination was made of the cost of the production of wheat in the United States a few years ago by Dr. Edward Atkinson. He showed that a bushel of wheat could be produced in the United States at a cost of less than 40 cents, and in California less than 36 cents. There is not a spot on the Continent of Europe that can produce a bushel of wheat at that cost. The lowest I have seen is Germany, at 84 cents. India can not produce wheat at a cost of 40 or 50 or 60 cents a bushel; much less can it produce it at that cost and pay the cost of transportation and drive us out of our own markets. India produces about one bushel of wheat per head of her population. The United States produces eight or nine bushels per head, and could easily produce more if a market could be had. Do you tell me that a man who uses the old sickle to cut wheat, who uses the old plow of past generations and the ox to haul it, who uses the flail to thrash it out, can compete with a man who puts wheat in the ground with a buggy plow, who has his wheat cut, thrashed, winnowed, and sacked by machinery? Some time ago I read in Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics that with Guin's California reaper one machine attended properly could cut, thrash, winnow, and sack the wheat on 60 acres of ground in one day—1,200 bushels of wheat.

I was afraid to quote the authority until a few days ago I was talking with a California farmer who uses the machine. He told me it could be done and was being done, and being done by him. With five hands at $1 per day each he cuts, thrashes, winnows, sacks, sews up the sacks, and puts away ready to be shipped in one day 1,200 bushes of wheat, and the labor cost is less than 2 cents per bushel. And yet we are told that a man in India who never saw a buggy plow or thrasher, who can not cut an acre of wheat in a day with a sickle, can send his wheat to the United States and drive out of his field the most intelligent, energetic, and thrifty farmer on the face of the globe. This is the scary tale our friends are telling our farmers to lull them to sleep while they increase the prices of everything they have to buy, and throw insurmountable obstacles in the way to the markets where they are to sell. They stand before the wheat-growers and sing:

> Hush, hush, hush,
> Here comes the Bogie man.
> You've got no show,
> You'd best lay low,
> He'll catch you if he can.
> Hush, hush, hush,
> Your wheatfields he will scan.
> Run, all ye Western farmers,
> Here comes the Bogie man.

This is the song to the men who were producing in the same time five or ten times as much wheat as the India man, and at a labor cost less than the India producer. And to prevent this direful calamity he must be taxed a hundred per cent on his woolen goods.

Mr. President, it is a magnificent scheme that this very intelligent and able committee reported to us, that by raising the tariff they were going to import "nonagriculturists" into this country to consume the surplus products of the wheat crop. I have ciphered a little on that dazzling problem to see how many people they will have to bring to this country to consume the surplus wheat crop. The very year after the measure was passed, the very year after that prophecy was uttered on this floor, the wheat-growers of the United States produced 611,780,000 bushels of wheat. Mr. Dodge, the Statistician of the Agricultural Department, who has been issuing their protection pamphlets and campaign documents for them for years, says that 4⅔ bushels of wheat is the per capita consumption of the people of the United States. Everybody knows that we are the best fed people in the world. We will suppose that this "nonagricultural" importation that a high protective tariff is to bring to the United States will each consume 4⅔ bushels of wheat.

We will first make a deduction to seed the crops of the next year. There were a little less than 40,000,000 acres sown in wheat. A bushel and a half is the highest amount that is given by farmers as requisite to sow an acre of wheat. Then deduct 60,000,000 bushels for seed, at Mr. Dodge's estimate, four and two-thirds bushels per head, 64,000,000 people will have 299,000,000 million bushels set apart for bread; the total for home consumption, 359,000,000 bushels; surplus, 252,800,000 bushels. To consume, that at four and two-thirds bushels per head would require a "nonagricultural" importation of population amounting in one year to 54,000,000 people. Where are they going to come from? How are they going to get here? Where are the vessels to come from to bring all that population here to consume this surplus wheat? It would take all the armed and mercantile vessels afloat on all the waters of all the seas of the globe.

But that does not make any difference. It is a beautiful thing and ought not to be marred by any such commonplace considerations. I suppose our friends were going to let the immigrants provide the vessels for themselves. But 54,000,000 people have to come here according to that prophecy, and they have got to come in one year, and they have got to come in time to consume that crop of wheat, and they have got to come with money enough to pay for it or it will do the farmers no good. What will they do, Mr. President, when they come here to make the money to buy the wheat from the farmer? It will not do to bring agriculturists. The committee were too sharp for that. They said that they must be "nonagriculturists;" that they must be miners, manufacturers, persons engaged in transportation, laborers, mechanics, and others.

Now, of the nonagricultural population of the United States one-third are manufacturing laborers. Let us assume that one-third of these will be. One-third of 54,000,000 will be 18,000,000, who have to come and be supported by manufacturing labor. That includes men, women, and children.

Again, by the same division of our population, one-third of that number are laborers actively engaged in the shops. That makes 6,000,000 laborers who have to come here in one year. Six million of manufacturing laborers have to be brought by the McKinley law to this country. Very well. What will they do? They will go into manufacturing, of course. How much will they make? If 4,250,000 operatives of ours made $9,370,000,000 worth of manufactured products in 1890, how much will 6,000,000 make? It is a mere sum in arithmetic that an ordinary Republican ought to be able to cipher out. Somebody else will cipher it out if they do not. They will turn out, if they work as well as our people, $13,000,000,000 worth of products. We consume $150 per head of our manufactured products. It will be fair to assume that they will consume a similar amount of their products. Then they will consume of that product $8,000,000,000 worth. That would leave $5,000,000,000 worth of surplus manufactures. What is to be done with it?

The committee did not inform us. We know that they are opposed to exchanging any of our products for the cheap and "nasty" things produced by foreign paupers, and we know that their destructive policy is to confine our trading to this continent. They may even go so far as to agree with Henry C. Carey, that the Creator made a mistake in leaving navigable oceans around America; that he should have made them oceans of fire. But even if these obstacles were out of the way the tariff duties on the materials out of which their products were manufactured would prohibit them from export, just as the tariff duties prohibit ours. These $5,000,000,000 worth of products must be consumed at home. And carrying out the policy so boldly laid down we must now import a "nonmanufacturing" population. We must either carry out the Democratic policy and export the goods or the Republican policy and import people to consume them. The Republican plan was adopted and still prevails. Now, we must import "nonmanufacturing" people enough to consume this surplus. How many will it take? We consume about $150 per head. We will assume that they will consume as much. Then we must import 33,000,000 "nonmanufacturing" people to make a home market for $5,000,000,000 of manufactures.

Of our nonmanufacturing class in the United States 54 per cent are agriculturists, and we will assume that 54 per cent of them will be agriculturists. Then 18,000,000 of these are to be farmers, and of these one-third are laborers—or 6,000,000. We had 9,000,000 laborers in 1890 in agriculture. We were to import 6,000,000 more, and if 9,000,000 farmers produced 611,780,000 bushels of wheat in 1891, 6,000,000 farmers will produce 400,000,000 bushels. They will use for seed two-thirds as much as we, being two-thirds as numerous, or 40,000,000 bushels; they will use for bread four and two-thirds, or 154,000,000 bushels; and then they will have a surplus of 200,000,000 bushels. What are you going to do with that? We have got to import now 43,000,000 nonagriculturists to consume that; and so the thing goes, and if we continue this policy of our Republican friends, in a few years, within the memory of old men like myself, we will see the whole fourteen hundred millions of this world here in the United States, brought here by a high protective tariff—Chinese, Japanese, Fijis, Soudanese, Maltese, chimpanzees, all coming to the United States to join Coxey's army and the aborigines. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it is a singular kind of doctrine for our Republican friends, as my friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggested, to set out to soothe the apprehensions and fears of the Western farmers, to make them lie still while their markets are being torn from them, to tell them in the hearing of the manufacturing operatives that they propose to import manufacturing labor to come to this country and compete with the manufacturing labor here, and on that to raise the wages of labor! Strange as it appears, that has been done. This is another of those magnificent prophecies of which we have heard so much from all the protectionists—false prophets and false prophecies.

When I was a young boy my mother taught me to read the Bible, and I read about Elijah upon Mount Carmel, when he took 450 of the false prophets of Baal and slew them. I then thought all false prophets were dead, but it seems as if some of them got away, and they have come down to the present generation, and have come here to tell the people these scary stories in order to soothe them while they put the strong arm of the Government up to the elbows in the pockets of the working people of the country.

Mr. President, this country would have had the agonies it is now in in 1891 if it had not been that the crop of 1890 was more valuable by $280,000,000 than that of 1889, and the crop of 1891 was $650,000,000 more valuable than that of 1889. The increased value of the two crops, aggregating in two years more than $900,000,000, deferred the coming of the depression until 1892. In that year the value of our principal crops fell over $400,000,000, and in 1893 over $500,000,000 below 1891. The two years' decrease amounted to more than nine hundred millions. The depression that is now distressing the land did not come with the advent of a Democratic Administration, as has been charged. No, Mr. President, the country began to feel the contracting folds of the monster in 1892. The storm signals were put up in the fall of that year. The election on the 8th of November admonished the country to look out for the coming squall.

Still, they tell us that a Democratic Administration has brought on this panic, produced the depression, and filled the streets with marching armies of distressed and wretched people calling on their Government to save them. It was failing crops, exhaustive taxation under the McKinley act, and increased obstruction of the way to a market fixed by that law which prostrated the farmers of the country; and when they fell, they stretched out their arms, like Samson, gathered the posts of the industrial temple and crushed the whole fabric over their heads. They stopped buying; they had nothing with which to buy; when they stopped buying the manufacturers stopped selling; when the manufacturers stopped selling they stopped producing, and when they stopped producing they turned their wage-workers into the streets, and the lines of transportation stopped carrying between producer and consumer. These are the curses that have blighted the land and filled the people with distress.

The Secretary of the Treasury of the Administration which a short time ago went out of power recognized this condition of things when he came to Congress in the closing hours of the Administration of President Harrison and begged this body to pass a law authorizing the sale of bonds to meet the deficiencies in the Treasury that he saw at that time were coming, and coming by the improvident, unwise, and extravagant Administration of President Harrison and his party.

They tell us this panic has come because we Democrats are agitating the question of reducing taxation and opening markets; that it has come by anticipation; they say that the unemployed people are looking ahead, and they see something in the distance that frightens them. I have never known people to take distress and stop work by anticipation in that way. I do not think that the working people of this country are crowding the thoroughfares and highways of the country because they anticipate that the future will be filled with gloom for them. They want meat and bread; they want employment, and they can not get it; the manufacturer can not sell his goods, and will not give them employment; the farmers can not buy them and the manufacturer can not sell them. It is not anticipation, it is the realized condition which follows the exhaustion produced by the McKinley tariff act.

To tell me that people get frightened by anticipation reminds me of an incident I read in a paper sometime ago in a New England town. A gentleman was driving down the street in his buggy and called to a friend to get in the buggy and ride with him. After the friend had ridden some distance down the street he saw a procession coming, headed by a band of music, with colors flying; he saw the drum-major with his stick twirling about in the air, and he said to the man by whose side he was sitting, "Will your horse get frightened at the music?" "Oh, no; my horse is very fond of music; he has a passion for music; he never gets frightened at music." "Are you sure of that?" "Yes; I am sure of it." "If your horse will stand that drum, and stand those brass horns, and stand all that noise and parade, I will continue to ride with you." The man drove on, and when he got within 50 or 100 yards of the procession the drum-major twirled his stick in the air, the kettledrum rolled out the long roll, the bass drum thundered like a park of artillery, the horns brayed, and the horse wheeled at right angles, and shot down the street at the rate of a mile a minute. The buggy was turned over, and the men were thrown out, their faces were scarred and bruised and their noses were bleeding. The guest said, "How is it you told me your horse would not scare at music? I told you I would not get in the buggy, sir, if you had a wild horse. Now, I am hurt; you told me that your horse would not get scared at music—would not get scared at a band." The driver said, "I told you that that horse would not frighten at music, that he loved music, and I repeat it, but you will notice right across there you see the weather man has put up a signal on the side street to indicate that there is an electrical storm coming from California over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and when it comes it will be accompanied by an immense amount of thunder and lightning. My horse is afraid of that lightning." [Laughter.] And the people of the United States are crowding into the highways everywhere because they are afraid that in the future the Democratic Administration will reduce taxation, open up the markets of the world to the sale of their surplus production, and give employment to the idle people in the streets.

But, Mr. President, the only way we can correct this unhappy condition is to restore to the people the natural and normal condition of work and trade, and restore to the people the God-given right to labor and the God-given right to dispose of the products of their labor. Every man in the world is working ten times more for somebody else than he is for himself. The man who is raising cotton in the Southern States does not want any of it; he wants it to go to New England and to Old England, and all over Europe, in order to get the things by exchange that he wants for himself and his family. The man who is raising wheat in the Northwest is not raising the wheat for himself alone. Four and two-thirds bushels, if Mr. Dodge is right, will more than satisfy the wants of each member of his family; but other people all over the world are producing the things he wants and requires, and he has the natural right not only to produce the wheat, but the natural right, which no honest, just government would take from him, to convey his surplus products to the man who is working for him. That is nature's law.

Mr. President, what becomes of all that surplus wheat? Two hundred and twenty-five million bushels, as I have shown, in 1891 went away, and 27,000,000 bushels stayed at home over and above the 4½ bushels for bread for each person in our country. Mr. Dodge is wrong in his estimate, as can be proved, and I have a table here which I shall print which will show that 3.77 bushels of wheat are all that is kept at home for consumption per capita when there is a market that will command its export.

In 1855, when wheat went up, we shipped all but 3.77 per capita; in 1890, when wheat went up again, we shipped all but 3.81 bushels per head; but there have been from forty to fifty and seventy million bushels of wheat kept at home over and above this which could not go to the markets. You will not let the things come to the country that will exchange for that wheat and carry it to market for the class of commodities you need. What will you do with it? It is being fed to hogs.

I examined this question some time ago. I was wondering what had became of the rest of the wheat. Nobody eats more bread than he wants. Our people eat a great deal of bread made from corn meal. This is an abundant country. Our people live largely on vegetables and other food than bread. What becomes of the rest of the wheat? I was astonished when I found in an advance paper, which is to come with the report of the Agricultural Department, that that wheat, even of the crop of 1891, is yet being fed to the hogs! That is a startling fact.

I read from the advance sheets of the report of the Department of Agriculture:

> The returns of the correspondents of the Department throughout the great wheat surplus States indicate a new factor in the consumption of wheat, viz, the feeding of the same to hogs and other stock, a fact due, as declared, to the unprecedently low prices, the claim being made that this mode of disposing of the cereal is profitable as compared with marketing it for human food.
> The returns also indicate that a very considerable proportion of the wheat now in farmers' hands comes from crops prior to that of 1893, and especially from the crops of 1891-1892.

I have here a table which I shall print, which shows that allowing 3.77 bushels, which was consumed in 1885, there was left over 174,335,480 bushels in 1884; 32,000,000 in round numbers in 1886; 59,000,000 in 1887; 45,000,000 in 1888; 2,000,000 in 1890; 84,000,000 in 1891; and 91,000,000 in 1892.

The table referred to is at follows:

Production, consumption, and exportation of wheat.

Mr. MILLS. Why is it that this wheat is kept at home? Because you will not permit the articles to come to this country which the people in foreign countries would gladly give for it and give you their goods at a lower price than you can buy them at home. The heavy duties imposed by the existing law keep out a vast amount of the products of other countries that would otherwise come to take our wheat. In 1885 wheat rose 18 per cent over 1884, and all went out but enough for seed and 3.77 bushels per head for food. In 1890 it rose again 18 per cent, and all went but 2,800,000 bushels. Make it profitable to export it and it will all go again.

I am talking now to the wheat farmers of the Northwest. It is not necessary for me to talk to the cotton-growers of the South. They had nothing to do with placing this nefarious law on the statute books. If they could, they would tear it out root and branch. Now, when the country is suffering in the depths of distress, they can raise their voices and say to you and to the whole world—

> Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake thy gory locks at me.

Every one of their Representatives is against the law. Every one of them voted against its enactment, and every one of them stands ready to vote for its repeal. The people of the Northwest have kept their Senators and Representatives here to destroy their own prosperity, and to be soothed and deceived by the siren song that we must import population to consume our surplus products rather than export the products.

Mr. President, when we prevent things from coming to this country we prevent an equal amount of things from going away from this country. There can be no trade except by the exchange of two or more things. You can not conceive of a trade that does not require at least two persons to make it, and you can not conceive of a trade that does not require at least two things to be exchanged.

Something must come back when something goes, and the something that comes must be the equivalent of something that goes; when you stop sending away, you stop importing; and when you stop importing, you stop sending; and the trade of all countries is balanced by the surplus products of the countries that participate in the trade. When we see that Great Britain is taking 52 per cent of her wheat from the fields of the United States and we are imposing a duty upon her woolen, and cotton, and iron, and steel, and glass, and other goods, it is easy to be seen that we are keeping away many millions of her products that would come here and exchange for our wheat, and thus keeping at home an equal amount of our wheat.

Great Britain imports wheat from a number of countries. She imports 52 per cent from the United States. Then she sends her mercantile fleets around the world and buys from Russia, Germany, France, the Austrian territories, Roumania, Turkey, Bulgaria, Egypt, the Argentine Republic, Chile, British North America, British India, Australasia, and other countries. Why does she not take all her wheat from us? We produce the best wheat in the world. She would be glad to take it from us, but when we get to the point where we have to stop in our importations, we can not sell and she can not buy. We only take a limited amount of her surplus, and then she must go elsewhere to hunt her bread supply. Do you not see when the exports of cotton and wheat fall off the imports fall off? They are doing so now. We exported over $1,000,000,000 in 1891, when we had a large crop. Our exports have fallen off, and our imports have fallen off just in proportion to the surplus we have to send to market.

If we would open the market and remove the obstruction in the way of importation and permit importation to come unchallenged to the country, what would be the first effect of it? Increased exportation, preceded by increased demand for cotton, wheat, and provisions. What would follow from that? Increased prices of agricultural products? Mr. President, the very same products which we export now, and which bring us $799,000,000, would then bring $150,000,000 more. We find that when importations fell off prices fall from 18 to 20 per cent, and when importations flow in the prices of agricultural products rise 18 or 20 per cent or more. The same quantity of products we now send abroad and sell for $799,000,000 we would sell for more than $900,000,000. Then all these millions of bushels of waste wheat, waste corn, waste oats, and other farm products would find a profitable market for their sale. Our importations would increase largely. With open markets I do not doubt but that they would increase $300,000,000. It was said in another place that if this bill were passed it would increase our imports $250,000,000, and that would result in great injury to our manufacturers and throw out of employment thousands of operatives and reduce the wages of hundreds of thousands more. I hope the bill will pass, and that it will increase our imports $300,000,000.

If we shall have fairly good crops this year and the pending bill shall become a law, importations will largely increase; and if the crop of the year equals that of 1891 the increase of importations will go to $300,000,000, and if it does exports will increase to the same extent. An increase of that amount of exports will increase the value of our farm products eight hundred or a thousand millions. What will that do? That money will be spent for manufactures, and will make an active demand for labor and increase its wages. If three hundred millions of imports would displace the labor required to make that amount of goods, nine hundred millions of increased value of farm products would counteract it and make a demand for twice as much more. But it would not displace one workman, but would create a demand for the employment of an amount of additional labor to make $900,000,000 worth of goods. From 1879 to 1881 our imports increased by $250,000,000. It was not goods, but gold; but it made a market for the sale of farm products. The same quantities of the same articles that were worth $1,936,142,502 in 1879 were worth $2,660,901,186. The increased value was $724,758,684.

I submit here a table showing the articles and their increased value:

The increased value of the crop enabled the farmers and their families to buy more manufactures, and not only farm products rose, but the price of manufactures rose, and employment was constant and labor was prosperous. I submit here the prices of several articles which show how manufacturing was prosperous:

I also submit a statement from Mr. Swank in the Census Report of 1880, on the iron and steel industry of the United States at that time:

A YEAR OF PROSPERITY.

The census year 1880, which, it may here be stated, extended from the 1st of June, 1879, to the 31st of May, 1880, was a year of exceptional prosperity for the iron and steel industries of this country. The coincidence is notable, that it exactly covered the period which has been designated as "the boom" during which all iron and steel products were in such great demand by American consumers that the iron and steel works of the country were unable to meet it. The home supply was supplemented by large importations, and even these could not be made with sufficient rapidity to meet the urgent wants of consumers. Prices were high throughout the whole year, but fluctuated violently. Labor was in demand, wages were promptly paid, and disputes between workingmen and their employers were rare and unimportant. The census year 1880 will long be memorable as a year of general prosperity for our iron and steel industries, and as one which witnessed the beginning and the end of a most exciting epoch in their history. (See House Miscellaneous Document, second session Forty-seventh Congress, volume 13, Part II. Page 9, of Part I.)

Not a single man was thrown out of employment then and will not be now if imports are increased. We do not import the things we produce. We import woolen goods, but not the kind we make at home. We import cotton goods, but not the kind we make. We import glass, but not the glass we produce.

Look at your imports, examine them for years back, and you will see that there is a certain line of goods that we import, and import under low duties and import under high duties and import under the highest duties; but you do not import the same amount. They are restricted. In 1890 we imported $54,000,000 worth of woolen goods, and last year $36,000,000 worth of woolen goods. Sixteen million dollars worth of woolen goods were kept away by prohibitory duties, and $16,000,000 worth of wheat was kept at home.

Look at your cotton schedule and you will find we are importing certain kinds of hosiery. You can not make it here. I stated that some years ago, and I was laughed at all over the country as a rawhide fellow from Texas who did not know anything about manufacturing. I spoke by the record, and I had the statements of men who ought to know, that these goods could not be, and were not being, made in the United States, and we are still importing them. We were then importing them over a duty of 35 per cent. In 1883 the duty was raised to 40 per cent, and we still imported them. We are importing them over a duty of 67 per cent to-day. Do you suppose anybody would import into this country cotton stockings at 67 per cent duty if we could make them here without any duty? That kind of hosiery, however, can not be made in this country. Laces and embroideries can not be made in this country, or have not been. You will find that whatever your duties are the goods you are importing, whether glass, or iron, or steel, or cotton, or woolen goods, are of a kind that can not be produced here on account of climatic conditions of other things. Many things can be produced in this country, but there are some things that can not be. We can not raise coffee in this country. Oh, I suppose we might; I suppose you might make an artificial soil, an artificial atmosphere, fence in a district of country and cover it with glass, and raise coffee at $5 a pound; and then it would be good American coffee; it would be none of your "pauper coffee" from Brazil. A distinguished protectionist undertook a few years ago to correct the defects of nature and produce tea in the United States, when the Creator intended that it should be made in China and not in the United States. A chief of the Bureau of Agriculture undertook to correct the deficiencies of nature and to show up some of "the mistakes of Moses," by establishing a tea farm in South Carolina. But he has gone, and his tea farm has gone with him.

If we want to drink tea, we have to send cotton or cotton manufactures, or woolen manufactures, or wheat, or flour, or bacon, or something to China which the people of China want, and exchange it for tea. We can not raise tea in this country.

Our Republican friends are very solicitous about reciprocity. They want reciprocity, and they seem to think that we Democrats are very wicked people; that we are interfering with reciprocity.

We want reciprocity, too. What is reciprocity? It means freer trade, if it means anything; it means reciprocal advantages in trade; it means more trade; it means more of obstructions out of the way of trade. Why are we talking about reciprocity with Brazil and Cuba and Honduras and Gautemala? That is reciprocity between farmers principally. The true reciprocity is that between farmers and manufacturers.

If our Republican friends want reciprocity as badly as we do, let them join with us and try to get some reciprocity with Great Britain, who takes more than half of our exports of wheat. She has blotted out all her tariffs on all our exports. Now, if we are anxious for reciprocity, meet her generosity and blot out all of ours except enough to raise money to support the Government. Take two hundred millions more of her woolen and cotton goods, her iron and steel and glass and other manufactures, and she will take every bushel of our wheat and leave none to be fed to the hogs. If our friends are in favor of real reciprocity, there is the place to extend it. She has put the whole reciprocity scheme completely in the hands of the American Congress. You can have all the wheat exported that you want if you put a duty of 20 or 25 per cent on cotton and woolen goods, 20 or 25 per cent on iron and steel goods, and 20 or 25 per cent on glass. You will find a profitable market for all your surplus wheat with Great Britain alone. There is where your reciprocity lies. We were told the other day most lugubriously that we were breaking down the barriers between Canada and this country and letting Canada have our market. Suppose she does. Do we not have hers? Is Canada going to come in here and steal ten, fifteen, twenty million dollars from us? If Canada brings us $20,000,000 of the surplus of her people does she not give us a market for $20,000,000 of our surplus among her people? How can we be hurt by opening trade to Canada? If Canada sends $10,000,000 worth of lumber the people of Canada will take $10,000,000 worth of wheat or something else to pay for it, and give us a market too. Canada can not give us a market unless we give her a market, and our two markets will be reciprocal. Why not reciprocity with Canada as well as with Guatemala and these other countries?

Why, Mr. President, has reciprocity been confined to sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides? Is there no other reciprocal trade that has any value except coffee, tea, sugar, molasses, and hides? Coffee, tea, sugar, molasses, and hides come from the Southern countries who have no manufactures. Coffee, tea, sugar, molasses, and hides are the articles mentioned in the third section of the existing law, which come here to exchange for manufactures. That is the sort of reciprocity you want. And while you are obtaining this reciprocity for your manufactures in this country, which we are willing to give you, but not willing to make yours an isolated and favorite case, we want to give everybody the same reciprocity. We believe in equal rights to all. That is what Democracy means. We stand for the rights of the whole people, the millionaire and the mendicant alike. But you want reciprocity to sell your manufactures to these people and take their sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides in exchange for it, and when the farmer in the West wants to sell his wheat and the farmer in the South wants to sell his cotton and take cheaper woolen goods and cotton goods, and iron and steel and glass goods, you say, "No, we do not want reciprocity in that direction. We want partial reciprocity. We want reciprocity for the pockets of a favored class in the country, and you are trying to destroy that partial reciprocity and institute in its stead a uniform reciprocity for the benefit of all the people."

Now, Mr. President, our friends say that if we open our markets to the imports of all other countries we are going to throw our laborers out of employment; we are going to destroy their wages; we are going to produce a marvelous condition of society in the country; we are going to spread abroad distress, poverty, and wretchedness. The only way, they contend, to have our people employed at good wages is to shut out the trade from foreign people and give the market to our own people. They say that the products of other countries are made by pauper labor, badly paid labor, a great deal cheaper labor than ours. Our friends who have studied this subject know better than that. When the Democratic national convention at Chicago denounced protection as a fraud they told the truth. It is a fraud that is repeated day after day.

What is a fraud? Something that is told to deceive another to his injury. When they tell the farmer that destroying importation and exportation is for his benefit, and that they are going to bring people from all over the world to come here and consume his surplus products at higher prices they know that they are not making a correct statement. When they tell the wage-earner that the only way he can get high wages and constant employment is to keep away the manufactured products that compete with him in foreign countries they ought to know they are incorrect; men who have studied this question know better than that.

Mr. President, we have got the cheapest labor on the globe. We have got the poorest paid labor in proportion to the work our laborers do that is to be found on earth. Why so? Because we work by machinery, and one laborer in this country produces in some cases five, ten, and even over ten times more than is performed by the man who is doing the same work in other countries. Great Britain approaches more closely to us than any other country in the world, but she is behind us. We can produce the things we are producing cheaper than anybody else on earth can do it, if they can do it at all.

I have a statement here to which I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the country and especially of the wage-workers. Some time ago, looking over Mulhall's Dictionary of Statistics, I came across a statement in which he gives the number of persons employed in manufactures in all the different countries of the world that are manufacturing to any considerable extent. He gives the total value of the product made in each country and the number of persons employed. By dividing the number of hands by the value of the product we get precisely the amount of value turned out by each hand. This statement shows that for 1888 the United Kingdom had 5,189,000 persons employed in manufacture; that they turned out a product worth $4,100,000,000, and the product per hand was $790. France had 4,443,000 persons employed. They turned out a product valued at $2,425,000,000, or $545 per hand. Germany had 5,350,000 persons employed. They turned out a product valued at $2,915,000,000, or $545 per head. Russia had 4,760,000 employed. She turned out a product valued at $1,815,000,000, or $381 per head. I will print this table and will not go over it all. The United States had 3,837,000 persons employed, who turned out a product valued at $7,215,000,000, or $1,880 per head.

Mr. PEFFER. What is the standard, American or British?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, it is dollars; the values are rendered in dollars. The thing that was wanting in this statement was the annual wages paid in each country. He did not give that, but I asked our accomplished Chief of the Department of Labor, who has been studying these questions for years, to give me his estimate of the annual wages paid to labor in manufacture in these countries. In his letter he says:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., February 6, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to yours of January 18 and January 26, I have the honor to state that from the very best sources which I have been able to consult, I estimate the average annual earnings in all manufacturing industries in the countries named by you to be as follows:

1, United States, $347; 2, Great Britain, $204; 3, France, $175; 4, Belgium, $165; 5, Germany, $155; 6, Austria, $150; 7, Switzerland, $150; 8, Italy, $130; 9, Spain, $120; 10, Russia, $120.

The above estimates have been made, so far as the United States is concerned, from the actual number of persons employed and the total wages paid to them as shown by the census of 1880; for Great Britain they have been made largely from British figures, and for the other countries the estimates have been made from statements originating with foreign authorities and verified by facts collected by agents of this Department. While the actual figures given in the above estimates may not be more than approximately correct, the proportions, I feel sure, are fair.

I am, very respectfully,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS,
United States Senate.

The average annnal rate of wages is for 1880. The number of hands and value of product is for 1888. The relative comparison is the same. The wages in all countries would be higher in 1888 than in 1880. But the relative differences would be substantially the same.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator state again the average annual earnings for the United States?

Mr. MILLS. Three hundred and forty-seven dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I submit that that is the statement for 1880.

Mr. MILLS. That is what Col. Wright says in his letter.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I thought the Senator was stating it for 1890.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The statement for 1890 is $485.10.

Mr. MILLS. I am coming to that. I am now making a comparison based on the wage rate of 1880. I am not talking about 1890. I am taking the annual average wages paid in 1880 and comparing it with the product of 1888. It makes no difference, as I said before, that the wages are of 1880 and the product of 1888, for relatively they are the same thing. The wages for 1888 would have been a little larger in all the countries, but it is amply sufficient for the purposes which I have in view. Now, let us apply this. Seven hundred and ninety dollars' worth of product per hand in Great Britain cost in wages $204. In France $545 worth of product cost $175 for wages. In Germany $545 cost $155 for wages, and on going down I will print this table, so that all can read it.

Table showing number of employés, total value of product, value of product per employé, annual average wages paid per employé in manufacturing industries in the countries named below in 1880.

Countries.	Total value of product.	Number of employés.	Product per hand.	Annual wages paid.
United Kingdom	$4,100,000,000	5,189,000	$790	$204
France	2,425,000,000	4,443,000	545	175
Germany	2,915,000,000	5,350,000	545	155
Russia	1,815,000,000	4,760,000	381	120
Austria	1,265,000,000	3,090,000	409	150
Italy	605,000,000	2,281,000	265	130
Spain	425,000,000	1,167,000	364	120
Belgium	510,000,000	953,000	545	165
Switzerland	160,000,000	370,000	433	150
United States	7,215,000,000	3,837,000	1,880	347

In the United States $1,880 worth of product costs $347 for wages. Now, our friends point to the fact that the workman in the United States gets $347 for his annual work; in Great Britain he gets $204; in France he gets $175; in Germany $155. Ours is the high-priced workman, and these are paupers, but when we come to look at the fact that our people are paid less than the foreigner for the amount of work they turn out, the boot is found on the other foot.

Now, let us carry this thing out. Let us take the labor cost in other countries of $1,880 worth of product and compare it with ours. The $1,880 worth of goods imported into the United States is the thing that is to test the condition of our workmen. When the goods come here then the labor cost of a given amount of goods is compared with the labor cost of the same amount of goods in a foreign country. One thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars' worth of goods cost in this country $347 for labor.

Now, then, we imported from England last year $1,880 of cotton yarns that cost for labor in England $485, and in the United States $347. The labor cost in England was $138 more than in the United States, but our tariff taxes it $935 to protect our labor against competition with the Englishman. We imported $1,880 worth of kid gloves from France that cost for labor in France $604; in the United States $347. The labor cost in France was $257 more than in the United States, but they were taxed $1,165 to protect our workmen against competition with the Frenchman. We imported from Germany $1,880 worth of woolen goods the labor cost of which in Germany was $535, which was $188 more than in the United States, but they were taxed $1,985 to protect our workmen against competition with the German. We imported from Russia cables, cordage, and twine valued at $1,880, the labor cost of which in Russia was $593, which was $246 more than in the United States, but it was taxed $487 to protect our workmen against competition with the poorly paid Russian.

We imported $1,880 worth of buttons from Austria, the labor cost of which was $689, or $342 more than in the United States, but these buttons were taxed $2,699 to protect our workmen against competition with the Austrian. We imported $1,880 wort of silk piece goods from Italy, the labor cost of which in Italy was $922, or $575 more than in the United States, but they were taxed $940 to protect our workmen against competition with the Italian. We imported $1,880 worth of iron ore from Spain that cost for labor $620, or $455 more than in the United States, but it was taxed $802 to protect our workmen against competition with the Spaniard. We imported from Belgium $1,880 worth of window glass which cost for labor in Belgium $569, or $222 more than in the United States, but it was taxed $1,936 to protect our workmen against competition with the Belgian, and we imported from Switzerland $1,880 worth of laces and embroideries which cost for labor in Switzerland $651, or $304 more than in the United States, but they were taxed $1,128 to protect our workmen against competition with the Switzer.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it interrupt the Senator from Texas if I should ask him a question?

Mr. MILLS. I will hear the gentleman whether it will or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope before the Senator gets through with his remarks he will explain how it is that Great Britain has the market of the world for cotton yarns in competition with the United States if it costs so much less to make the article here?

Mr. MILLS. I will take great pleasure in doing that right now. Great Britain has the market of the world for cotton yarns against Germany, France, the United States, and every other country on the globe, because the finer cotton yarns can not be spun in this country, nor can they be spun in Germany or France, in competition with Great Britain on account of climate. Your people in New England have been trying to make artificial weather in your manufacturing establishments in order to enable you to make the condition in which fine cotton yarns are spun in Great Britain, and you have failed up to the present time to do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. How about the——

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me a single word just there? The Senator from Texas was never more mistaken in his life.

Mr. MILLS. Then all your experts who write on the subject are mistaken.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can take the Senator to two acres of flooring where the temperature is kept right and the degree of moisture is kept right, measured carefully by instruments, and the best thread in the world is made. It is the easiest problem imaginable.

Mr. ALDRICH. I intended to follow up my question by asking, How about the climate of India? India has recently encroached on the markets of Great Britain and all the rest of the world in the manufacture of cotton yarns.

Mr. MILLS. I have some figures about cotton to give to the gentleman directly. Germany imports cotton yarns from Great Britain and weaves those yarns and sends them back and sells to Great Britain the cloth that is made from them. France imports cotton yarns from Great Britain. We import cotton yarns from Great Britain. There are certain things we can not compete with; there are certain things England can not compete with; and there are certain things that other countries can not. I submit here the table I have prepared, that Senators and others may examine it:

Countries whence imported.	Labor cost of $1,880 worth of product.	Articles produced in the foreign countries named and imported into the United States.	Labor cost less in United States than exporting country.	Amount of tariff tax on $1,880 worth of articles imported.
United Kingdom	$485	Cotton yarns	$138	$935
France	604	Kid gloves	257	1,165
Germany	535	Woolen goods	188	1,985
Russia	593	Cables, cordage, and twine	246	487
Austria	689	Buttons	342	2,699
Italy	922	Silk piece goods	575	940
Spain	620	Iron ore	455	802
Belgium	569	Window glass	222	1,936
Switzerland	651	Lace and embroideries	304	1,128
United States	347

Notwithstanding the fact that our labor is cheaper than that of other countries, our people are paying enormous duties to manufacturers to protect their workmen, not one dollar of which ever finds its way to the workman's pocket. Was not the Democratic national convention barking on the right trail when they denounced protection as a fraud? In the face of all these facts Congress is levying taxes to protect American workmen against competition with pauper labor!

The reports which I have read to you show that $100 worth of manufactures cost for labor in Great Britain $25.82; in France, $32.11; in Germany, $28.44; in Russia, $31.49; in Austria, $36.63; in Italy, $49.05; in Spain, $32.96; in Belgium, $30.27; in Switzerland, $34.64; and in the United States $18.45. Now, who has the cheapest labor?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator before he leaves that branch of the subject allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MILLS. I am not leaving it, but just coming to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. MILLS. I will listen to the gentleman if he wants to ask a question, but I will not yield for a speech. He can answer my speech hereafter.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Texas says it costs less to make kid gloves in the United States than in France. I should like to ask him how it happens that last year we imported from France about $6,000,000 worth of kid gloves, upon which the importers paid 73 per cent duty, and those gloves were sold in the United States in competition with American makers. Is that a question of climate?

Mr. MILLS. It may be a question of skill. We may not be able to make the kind of glove we are importing. I am telling you, and I have been telling you all the time, and I expect to continue to tell you and to tell the whole country, that there are certain things we can not do in this country. We can do more things than anybody else in the world, but God has not given to this country the capacity to do everything. France can make certain things that we can not make; Germany can make things that we can not make.

I read a most beautiful thing sometime ago in a paper where a German, after the conquest of France in 1870, was bragging about what Germany could do in the presence of a French woman who had married a German officer. She told him that France could do almost anything; that the French people had the greatest genius in the world; that they could take the most horrid and ugly thing in the world and make of it a thing of beauty. An old German general sitting around the table pulled out a gray hair from his head and said, "Madame, take that to France and make something nice and beautiful out of it, please, and send it to me." She said, "I will do it. I will take that gray hair and I will return it to you one of the most beautiful things you ever saw. I will invite you and these other officers to dine with me at a certain time and present it to you at the table." She sent it to France to a jeweler and told him her challenge and said, "Redeem it." He made a beautiful pin and he laid that white hair in a trench of gold. The top of the hair was held in the mouth of the Prussian black eagle; at the bottom of it was suspended a representation of Alsace and Lorraine, and under it the inscription, "You hold them by a hair." Was anything more beautiful than that?

Mr. President, this is a question of labor. Our friends are philanthropists as well as statesmen. They never come to Congress and ask for anything for their own pocket; they come in the name of Christianity and philanthropy and humanity, and ask for something for the poor, downcast laborer who is struggling for life. This is not the first time that hypocrisy has stalked before the world and arrayed itself in purple, pleading for its own interests, but pleading in the name of somebody else. He who has read the sacred volume has not failed to notice how often our Saviour condemned hypocrisy. He seemed to have been surrounded at all times with a people who were constantly asserting their own superiority over their fellows—constantly complaining of others. They were purists and philanthropists of the first water. He told them that they drew nigh unto Him with their mouths and honored Him with their lips, but their heart was far from Him.

The humanitarians and philanthropists of to-day are vexing their righteous souls about the contamination of the foreign pauper. They do not want good Americans to touch, taste, or handle anything made by their hands. They are lifting their voices in constant lamentations about the unhappy condition of our poor workingmen. When they pray they pray for the poor workingmen, and then rise from their knees and prey on him. Their knees are indurated like the knees of a camel from much kneeling and much preying.

One of the most distinguished leaders of the Republican party, returning from Europe in 1888, started the campaign of that year in a speech at New York, an extract from which I take from the New York Tribune of August 11, 1888. In that speech Mr. Blaine said:

> I am glad that this meeting is called in the name of the laboring men, because this question from first to last, from beginning to end, from skin to core, and from core back to skin again, is a question of labor.
> In this canvass, in which I shall take greater or less part, I shall hold this question from the beginning to the end as a question that interests every man, woman, and child in this country that depends upon daily labor for daily bread.
> There is no need of making any law to protect capital. Capital always takes care of itself and gets a full share.

Truthful are those words as though they were written in Holy Writ. Capital takes care of itself and it takes care of the laborer, too. "It gets its full share" and never gets left. The only labor that it performs is in getting this immense bounty out of the pockets of the people in the name of labor and putting it in its own pocket. They toil not, neither do they spin. They talk and labor with their mouths to get Congress to give them higher prices for their goods, in trust for their laborers and then never give a farthing to the workman.

Mr. President, I will give some more figures to show how protective tariffs affect labor. In Consul Shaw's report, a very intelligent consul under a Republican Administration, made to this Government in 1882, in reporting on cotton goods, he says that in 1882 Great Britain had 486,000 hands employed in cotton manufacture. They made a product valued at $474,916,363. They were paid as wages $121,662,500. The value of the product of each hand was $977. The average wages of each, $250. The labor cost of the goods was 25.61 per cent.

Now let us compare that with the cotton product of the United States two years before.

In the United States, in 1880, our census returns show that we had 172,544 employés engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods. The value of these products was $192,090,110. They received as wages $42,040,510. The value of the product of each was $1,113. The average wages of each was $243. The labor cost of the goods was 21.6 per cent. The Englishman made for his employer $977 worth of goods. The American made for his employer $1,113 worth of goods. The Englishman got $25.61 for $100 worth of work. The American got $21.60 for $100 worth of work. Our workman turned out for his employer $136 more product than the Englishman and got $7 less pay. But the owners of the cotton goods got the protective tariff benefits all the same. And in 1890 his benefits were enlarged for the sole purpose of helping the workingman. Capital takes care of itself.

To produce in Great Britain the $1,113 worth of product turned out by our workmen it would have cost for labor $284, which was $41 more than was paid to our workmen in the United States.

Mr. Mulhall gives us another statement of cotton manufacture in Great Britain in 1888. He says for that year there were 504,000 operatives employed in cotton manufacture. The value of the product turned out by them was $507,000,000. For which they were paid in wages $147,000,000. The average value of the product turned out by each was $1,006. The average annual wages of each, $291. Labor cost of product 29 per cent. Now, let us compare this with 1890 in the United States, as shown by our census returns. We had in cotton manufacture 218,876 operatives. They turned out for their employers a product valued at $267,981,724. Value of the product of each employé, $1,224. Average annual wages of each, $301. Labor cost, 24.64 per cent.

The Englishman got $29 for $100 worth of work, and the American got $24.64. To have manufactured the $1,224 in England that was made in the United States would have cost for labor $354.96, or $53.93 more than it did in the United States. And if the whole $267,981,724 worth of our product had been made in Great Britain at their wage rate it would have cost for labor $11,000,000 more than it did in the United States; and yet we have a tariff of $57 on each $100 worth to protect our labor against the cheap pauper labor of England! Indeed, it is a question of labor "from skin to core." If the $507,000,000 of cotton goods that were produced in England had been produced in the United States at our wage rate our work people would have gotten $125,000,000 where the Englishmen got $147,000,000.

We imported last year $33,343,553 worth of cotton goods, the labor cost of which in Great Britain would have been $9,669,661, and in the United States $8,335,888. Notwithstanding the foreigner was paid for wages more than a million over the wages paid to our workmen, the people paid a tariff tax of $19,031,638 to protect our poor workmen against pauper competition. No one can deny that it is a question of labor "from skin to core and from core back to skin again." Did not the Democratic convention at Chicago hit the nail on the head when they branded protection as a fraud? In the name of the working people, thousands of whom they have turned out of employment and into the streets, they have plundered the country to build up a plutocracy; and now and here in the midst of the widespread distress which they have sown from their hands they have the effrontery to still defend the monumental robbery in the name of the poor workingman. The American people understood the question in 1892 and took the skin from the party that made the McKinley law, and they will take the core when they come again.

While on the subject I want some one to explain to me, if this tax is for the laborers' benefit and not for the manufacturers, how it is that the laborer never gets the benefit of any of it? How is it that the tariff and the laborer's pocket fail to connect? How is it that the bounty voted by Congress never gets further than the mouth of the manufacturer? How is it that the tariff puts a tax of $13.44 on every ton of steel rails, and yet the laborer gets less than $3. For every ton of pig iron Congress votes to the laborer $6.72, but he never gets more than $1.50. For every $100 worth of cutlery the tariff is $80, but he only gets $44. I give here a list of articles which show from the census returns what wages are paid and from the tariff what protection is voted for our workmen. I hope some one who may be able to do so will explain why it is that the tariff takes the skin off the wrong man.

In 1 ton of steel rails the labor cost is $3; the tariff is $13.44.

In $100 worth of cutlery the labor cost is $44.24; the tariff is $80.11.

In $100 worth of mats and matting the labor cost is $34.90; the tariff is $68.59.

In $100 worth of silk piece goods the labor cost is $22.54; the tariff is $60.

In $100 worth of cigars and cigarettes the labor cost is $34.51; the tariff is $125.36.

In $100 worth of woolen or worsted cloths the labor cost is $20.85; the tariff is $100.02.

In $100 worth of pottery the labor cost is $45.96; the tariff is $60.

In $100 worth of pearl buttons the labor cost is $39.69; the tariff is $143.61.

In $100 worth of tannin the labor cost is $16.34; the tariff is $119.47.

In a ton of coal the labor cost is from 40 to 50 cents; the tariff is 75 cents.

In $100 worth of cotton goods the labor cost is $24.24; the tariff $57.08.

In $100 worth of linen the labor cost is $32.92; the tariff is $50.

In $100 worth of common window glass the labor cost is $53.09; the tariff is $98.39.

In 1 ton of pig iron the labor cost is $1.50; the tariff is $6.72.

In 1 ton of bar iron the labor cost is $4.57; the tariff is $52.98.

I ask again, why is it that what you vote for the benefit of labor does not get to the laborer? You do not stand up and tell the people of the United States that you want this for the protection of the capitalists. You do not dare to stand before the people and tell them that. You continue to tell them that it is for the benefit of labor, and after you have got it you put it in your own pocket, and you pay your laborer just what he gets at free-trade prices, and that is all he possibly can get.

Mr. President, the only way that the laborer can receive any benefit is by the law of nature that gives him employment, that gives him constant employment, that gives him employment with a constantly increasing demand for his work. That is only done when we increase the consumption of the things upon which labor is expended, and we increase the consumption of the products of labor when we reduce the cost of making them—the labor cost and every other. Now, machinery does that, and so does the reduction of taxes. Then we must reduce the cost of reaching market and remove all obstructions out of the way so that we may get there. We must increase the demand for employment, and as the demand for the employment of labor increases by the increased consumption of the things that his labor makes, so wages will increase and employment will be constant.

Suppose that woolen goods were admitted free; suppose that cotton goods were admitted free, and iron and steel and everything else—suppose the Government was supported by taxation on wealth and a per capita tax upon the head, and commerce was free, then there would be the largest possible demand for the employment of labor. Why? Because every product would then be made at its lowest possible cost, and at its lowest possible cost it would find the greatest number of consumers, and finding the greatest number of consumers, the greatest amount of product would be consumed, and as the greatest amount of product would be consumed the greatest amount of product would be produced, and there would be the greatest amount of employment of labor and the highest amount of wages. That is the law of nature. We can injure the laboring man by protective tariff legislation; we can not benefit him. He can only be benefited by a free market, the largest number of markets, and the greatest possible demand for the employment of his labor, and the greatest possible demand for the consumption of the products of his labor.

Mr. President, our friends contend that because prices have been falling here in the United States since they have had a tariff, that the tariff is the cause of the lowering of prices, and they are constantly pointing to us the fact that the price of a certain thing was so much thirty years ago, and it is so much less now. My distinguished and venerable friend across the way [Mr. MORRILL] told us the other day in his speech that two-ply ingrain carpet was worth $1 a yard thirty years ago, and that it is now worth 50 cents a yard. Behold the tariff! The tariff did all this thing! He did not tell us that the labor cost of that yard of ingrain carpet is now 6 cents a yard and the tariff on it is over 60 per cent to protect it against competition, when the labor cost of that amount of goods in Great Britain is 7 cents. How does my friend or how does any other man account for the fact that prices have been falling in free-trade England as well as in the United States for the last thirty years? I have a list here of articles which I have taken from the export prices of Great Britain, commencing with 1873, comparing 1873, 1877, and 1891, and it shows a constant downward tendency of prices all along the line:

It will not do to say that the tariff reduces prices in the United States and free trade reduces prices in Great Britain. The same cause, under the same circumstances, ought to produce the same result. They tell us it will; but here we have prices brought down by free trade in Great Britain and under a protective tariff in the United States. Sir, prices have been brought down by improved production, by machinery, by invention, increasing the amount of product in a given time, and lowering the cost of the product. I have here some figures that will give an illustration of that fact.

A long time ago when we were boys, when our mothers were spinning with the old hand wheel—

One thousand persons in one week spun 3,000 pounds of cotton yarn, No. 10, at $1.50 each	$1,500
One person now spins 3,000 pounds of cotton yarn, No. 10, and receives for wages	6
Reduction in labor cost	1,494

Our friends point to it and say a protective tariff did that, not the spinning jenny—not the skill and genius of the man who worked the machine and the man who invented it, but a protective tariff; and you levy 50 per cent duty on cotton yarn and say the duty did that.

Let us follow that up a little further:

The cost price of 3,000 pounds of yarn then, at 75 cents per pound	$2,250
The cost price of 3,000 pounds of No. 10 cotton yarn now, at 15 cents per pound	450
Reduction	1,800

By a protective tariff!

Labor cost of 247 hand weavers required to weave 3,000 pounds of yarn into 11,100 yards of sheeting, each weaving 45 yards per week and receiving $3 per week as wages, was	741
Labor cost now of 8 weavers who weave that amount in one week and receive $6 per week as wages	48
Reduction in weaving	693
Cost of cloth made by hand spinning and weaving, at 40 cents per yard	4,440
Cost of cloth now, at 7 cents per yard, by machinery	777
Reduction in cost	3,663

And they say a protective tariff did it—not the spinning jenny and the power loom, but the protective tariff that levies 50 per cent duty on cotton yarn and 57 per cent on cotton goods.

Adam Smith tells of the immense benefits that come by the division of labor in making pins, from which I have gathered these figures:

Labor cost of 521 persons required to make 2,500,000 pins in one day, at 1 cent per hundred, was	$250
Labor cost of 1 person, who now makes 2,500,000 pins in one day, and receives as wages $1	1
Reduction	249

That is done by a pin machine. Yet our friends stand here and tell us that is done by a protective tariff, and put on more duty in the interest of the poor workingman, and get him to believe that a protective tariff reduces prices and benefits him. Adam Smith stuck pins in the protective tariff in Great Britain till it was dead, and the common schoolhouse and the schoolmaster in this country are sticking pins in it now, and will continue to stick pins in it until it is as dead in this country as it is in Great Britain.

It would have required 58 persons, working one week, each making 12,000 eight-penny nails to make 704,000, now made by 1, and the wages of the 58, at $6 each, was	$348
They are now made by one hand, at $5 per day, six days	30
Reduction	318

Mr. President, it is not taxing that reduces the price of a thing. Adding to the cost never reduces the price. That can not be done. Adding to the cost of a thing increases the price of a thing, or mathematics is a lie. It is taking from the cost of a thing that reduces the price of it. That is what machinery does, what a revenue tariff does, and that is what free trade does still better. There can be no justification on earth, either in politics or common justice, to tax the products of human labor except to support the administration of government. When this Government was first founded, a hundred years ago, our old fathers advocated moderate protection, for what? Because they were involved in war all the time. They began in war; they continued in war, and for a generation and more they were struggling with the powers of all the world, it seemed. During Jefferson's Administration the question was whether we would fall into the arms of Great Britain and the allied powers of the continent of Europe or France.

Finally, we became involved in war with Great Britain. We needed manufactured products; we needed them every hour and every day, but the honest men of those days said they were in favor of protective duties to build up the infants. They never claimed that it was a permanent policy. They claimed that it was for the purpose of building up infant industries in this country which would eventually come to maturity. One of the most distinguished leaders of the Republican party, Gen. Garfield, twenty-five years ago or less, in voicing the sentiment of the modern protectionist of that day in his own party, said that he was in favor of that kind of protection that led to free trade. That was the kind of protection that Clay advocated; that was the kind that was contended for by the early protectionists. It was not changed until about the time of George M. Dallas, when standing where you are sitting now, Mr. President, he gave the casting vote in 1846 for the Walker tariff. He said then that the infant had its growth; it must now stand upon its own feet; it must depend upon itself. The policy after that time was not infant manufactures, but it changed then to protection of American workmen against the pauper labor of Europe.

The American workman will find that he can only be protected by finding employment, constant employment, and that can only be done when his products are sold at the lowest possible cost, so as to drive everybody out of his way. That can only be done by taking the tax off of materials, so that he can go out in the world. Emancipate our genius and give our people a chance for their skill; give us back the ocean as our right, and give us back the triumphs of our genius. That is our natural and heaven-given right. When that is done the workman will not be walking the streets; he will not be coming to Washington to implore the Government to do something for his relief. His remedy is not to come to Washington now. His remedy is to go home and go to the ballot box and sweep out of existence the party that dares to pile taxes upon him and destroy the prospect of reaching the market for the sale of his goods. The ballot box is his citadel. It is not Washington. We must have more trade, more employment, freer markets, and a greater demand for the products of our labor of every kind. How is that to be done when so much money has to be raised to carry on the administration of the Government?

We must take the tax off those materials that are wrought into manufactures. We must do that as far as we can. We must start in the good work, whether we can accomplish it all now or not. We must start, not protecting our manufactures and making them so high that our people can not consume them, but making them low enough so that their consumption will be universal and to the largest possible extent. To do that we will have to reduce the revenues we are taking from manufactured goods and take something from the accumulated wealth of the nation.

The committee have reported in the bill a tax on incomes. Why should not incomes be taxed? I want to know why wealth should not be taxed. Why is government instituted anyhow, I should like to know. Can anybody tell why this Government exists? What cause was there for the establishment of this or any other government? The object of all just government is to secure to the citizens and subjects of that government all of the rights with which they are endowed by nature or the rights which they have acquired under their government. Security to rights. Among all the rights that depend upon associated power for their protection, property is the most dependent.

A man does not want much government. God in his infinite wisdom has given to almost everything in animal nature something with which to defend itself. The horse has a hoof; the ox has a horn; the serpent a fang; the cat and tiger have claws; the lion his mouth and the stroke of his paw; the man his arms. Take a man who has nothing, and he wants nothing and requires nothing from the Government. Why should he be taxed to death upon everything he buys, necessary to the existence of his life? Yet that is our system of taxation. When people associate together in governments, if it is a free government, if it is a just government, every citizen of the government should contribute his proper share to its support. His proper share is to be determined by the amount that he has to be protected by the strong, organized power of the government.

I wish to read to the Senate what Smith, who is the father of political economy, says. Many writers have come after him. Nearly all of them have indorsed this principle of taxation which he lays down. None of them ever excelled him as a clear and able writer. He lays down as one of the four principles to be observed in taxation:

> The subjects of every state ought to contribute to the support of the government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. The expense of government to the individuals of a great nation is like the expense of management to the joint tenants of a great estate, who are all obliged to contribute in proportion to their respective interests in the estate. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

It is as Smith says, Mr. President. The principle is like the expense of management to the joint tenants of a great estate. Suppose a dozen persons here or elsewhere enter into an association or company to build a railroad. One puts in $1,000, another $5,000, another $10,000, another $50,000, and another $100,000. How is that enterprise managed? Are all the expenses put on the man who contributes $1,000? Do the men who put in $50,000 and $100,000 say, "You can not call on me to pay any part of the expenses, it is odious and inquisitorial; let the little fellow who has the least interest pay all the expenses in this concern, and I will draw all the revenues from it." Every man knows that when the business is conducted the expenses are borne in proportion to the interest that each has invested in the enterprise, and the revenues netted from the concern are paid in proportion to the investment.

It is the same in the case of persons who go to Liverpool and buy cargoes of goods. They put them on a vessel, and the vessel gets in mid-ocean and encounters a storm and is about to sink because it is overloaded. One of the shippers has his goods in such condition on the decks that they can be thrown overboard. They are thrown overboard and the vessel saved and carries all the rest of its cargo safely into port. When they get ashore does the man whose goods were thrown over lose all? Upon what principle are the rights of the shippers settled? Upon the fundamental principle that equality is right; equality is equity. That is one of the maxims of the law books, a maxim never disputed by any commentator. When an account is taken, every shipper on the boat is required to contribute to pay the proportionate part of the loss. It does not all fall on him whose goods have been given to the sea to save the rest. The man who has $100,000 has to pay ten times as much as the man who has $10,000; the man who has $50,000 has to pay fifty times as much as the man who has $1,000. The adjustment is made, and the contribution of each is enforced upon the equal rights and duties of each. Every one interested in that cargo has to pay his proportional part to save the cargo and float the vessel ashore.

But we are confronted with the astounding doctrine that in this Government—the light of all the world and the boast of our own people; the freest and the fairest; a Government with an accumulated wealth of $65,000,000,000 to day, absolutely exempt from taxation for one single dollar to support an administration which requires $500,000,000 for its annual expenditures—that principle is unjust and such a law an outrage. Can it be said to be an outrage on the people that taxation shall be distributed so that everyone shall pay his fair proportion of supporting the Government? Yet it is the same thing. We are haughtily told that it is inquisitorial, socialistic, anarchistic, and sectional to impose an income tax. We are told that nine Eastern States will pay two-thirds of the taxes, and because only a small portion of it will be paid in the West and South, that it is sectional. In the name of common sense, in the name of common justice, if the men of the Eastern States have to-day two-thirds of the wealth of this country, dismissing all questions about how they got it, and if they need the protecting powers of the Government to keep it, to enjoy it securely—in the name of all the holy angels at once, and in the sight of God and man, ought they not to bear their part of the expense to support the Government that protects them? They will do it. The American people intend that they shall do it, not only in the East, but in the West and South and center of the Union. They intend that everyone, wherever he may be, shall have his share of the burdens necessary to support and administer the Government.

I am no communist; I am not an anarchist. I hate communism and anarchy. I am for right. I will make no difference with the man who owns $100,000,000 and the man who owns $1. Each is entitled to the protection of the Government, and if it were necessary I should expend all the resources of the Government to protect the millionaire in the enjoyment of all his rights, and if it were necessary I should call to arms every ablebodied man in this country, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, to protect every hair that hangs on the head of the innocent little babe that has nothing but its helpless infancy. Equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none is the basic principle of just government. I should like to know upon what sort of principle the owners of this immense wealth insist that it shall not be taxed.

There are $10,000,000,000 of railroad property in this country. The owners of this property have annual revenues of $350,000,000; and yet, sir, a few years ago when we had another panic, not a panic by anticipation either, but a panic produced by exhausting the existing resources of the country, when every State government north of the Potomac River was toppling upon its foundation, when the powerful Commonwealth of Pennsylvania could not protect the property of her people in the city of Pittsburg, when the distressed and starving workmen of that city set fire to a part of the town, and the whole State government was powerless to extinguish the flames, I recall the fact that they called upon the National Government, and the Army of the United States had to be sent over the railroad to protect the railroad property. Yet that railroad property from that day to this has never contributed one single cent to the support of the Government that secured it, and it did not then pay one cent of the expenses of transporting the troops that were sent to protect it. I ask you if that is just taxation? I appeal to the quickened conscience of every honest man and every honest woman and every honest child in this land; look each other squarely in the eye and answer if that is a just system of taxation? Look at your millions of property, bonds, banks, lands, moneys, stocks, all this accumulated wealth, which does not pay one cent to support the National Government.

They tell us that a 2 per cent tax on incomes is inquisitorial, socialistic, anarchistic, and sectional. Yet when the poor fellow wants a shirt it is not socialistic, it is not anarchistic, it is not sectional—not at all so—to tax him 100 per cent on that shirt. Look at your woolen goods, bearing an average tax of $98.50 on every $100 worth of goods that the laborer and the man who makes them in the factory has to pay for covering their backs. That tax, I suppose, you think is perfectly proper, but a tax of $2 on an income of $100 after all expenses are paid is terrible; it is inquisitorial; it is odious. All taxes are odious. I never in my life heard of a taxpayer who broke his neck running over logs and barrels and fences to get to the tax collector to pay twice as much tax as he owed. I never heard of a taxpayer complaining that his taxes were too low. Look at the assessment rolls in the census of 1890 and see how low the assessments of value have been made. See how odious the tax is in all the States, counties, and municipalities of the Union. See how hard it is to get money to pay taxes. All taxes are odious, and the odium increases in proportion as the rate of taxation increases. But at last taxes have to be paid; governments have to be supported, and taxes to be just must be assessed in proportion to the ability of the taxpayer to pay, and that is in proportion to the property he has to be protected by the government.

It is objected that the secrets of the income owner will be made known; that his business will be given to the public. It has been stated that grand jury secrets leak out; that the secrets of an executive session of the Senate leak out; that the secret ballots leak out, and that the secrets of the income holder will leak out, and that therefore the tax ought not to be imposed. If there is any sound argument in it there ought not to be any executive sessions of the Senate; there ought not to be any grand juries; there ought to be no secret ballots, because occasionally a ballot is exposed or the secrets of a grand jury or the secrets of an executive session of the Senate get out. Therefore, those bodies ought not to have secret sessions. Let the man pay that which he owes to the support of the government, and his books will not be called for. The books will be called for when the assessor knows enough about the man to know that he has made a fraudulent return. Let him make an honest return that can stand the test of an examination by his neighbors, and then his books will not be called for.

The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] did not go far enough back in French history. There is some very instructive reading in the years preceding the enactment of the income tax. If he had gone back to 1780 and read the piteous appeal of the feeble and falling King Louis XVI to the clergy and nobility to share in paying the expenses of government; if he had looked at the annually accumulating deficit in the revenues; if he had seen the people of France prostrated and exhausted by the long wars of Louis XIV; if he had seen the exposure of the utter helplessness of the Government made to the wealthy classes and read the repeated appeals to them to consent to be taxed, he would have seen that the income tax was forced on France not so much by Talleyrand as by necessity.

Calonne tried to run the Government by borrowing, but borrowing and never paying soon exhausted credit. Still the nobility and clergy indignantly refused to be taxed and insisted upon enjoying their immunity from taxation until the peasantry were crushed in the dust. At last the climax was reached, and in 1789 the States-General were called. Then the income tax was imposed—not at 2 per cent, but 25 per cent. It was too late. Ten years before a 2 per cent tax would have saved France; now a 25 per cent tax could not do it. The revolution had gathered and was bursting with all its fury. The clergy owned land to the value of $400,000,000. They saw it all confiscated and made the basis upon which French notes were issued. The nobility who refused to be taxed saw their wealth swept from them and were themselves driven beyond the boundaries of France while their country, one of the fairest on the globe, wallowed in its own blood. All of this immense suffering and loss of life and property might have been averted by a just administration of government.

I trust no such thing will ever occur in this country, but, Mr. President, the American people are in earnest. The discontent and dissatisfaction prevailing in all parts of our territory shows that the people of the United States intend to have a just system of taxation. They intend that the wealth of this country shall contribute its just share, and no more, to the support of the Government, and when that is done and when the burdens of taxation shall be lifted as far as they possibly can be from the products of labor going to seek a market, in order to give constant and profitable employment to labor in the vast hive of industry in this country, then we may see a returning period of prosperity to our country.

It is useless to stand and denounce the income tax as odious, as sectional, and as inquisitorial. It is useless to make arguments against the right and the duty of every man to contribute to the support of the Government. The Government must be supported, taxes must be paid, trade must be unfettered, and labor employed. The American people are in earnest about that, and if this Congress does not do it another will. It is going to be done, and this prohibitory legislation that is destroying our markets, pauperizing our people, and driving them into the highways, into peaceful armies, as they say, to come in thousands to their capital to plead not for their right, but for fallacies, more ruinous and hurtful than the wrongs under which they are living now, must be repealed.

Mr. President, there is a duty devolving upon this body. It can not be excused. We must pass this bill—make it as good as we can, but pass it. We must not only pass it, but we must stop this continually talking on the bill and pass it. The American people have made up their minds about this measure. They have not sent us here to discuss it for a whole year. We have been here nearly a year discussing this question of taxation since they sent us here to execute their will. They have tried and condemned the present system. They have told us to sweep it into banishment. They did not send us here to hear arguments for a new trial; they sent us here to execute their judgment and drive the criminal out of the country and restore prosperity, and bring the people and the country back to the enjoyment of their natural rights. That is our duty.

It is our duty to so order the parliamentary rules of this body that we close the debate and bring this matter to an issue. I do not care what the traditions of this body are as to debate. In its early history there was no such thing as filibustering known. It began with the agitation of the slavery question, but now it is here in defiance of all law; and the minority boldly assume that they will prevent the majority from executing its will. I say that if the 44 members on this side of the Chamber are of the same opinion that I am, and the forty-fifth in the chair, I would pass this bill in less than forty-eight hours. We have been sent here to execute not to debate, to restore to the people their right to work, and their right to enjoy the benefits of their work—not to wait until they are starved to death, not to wait until the whole land is paralyzed, not to wait until thousands of them are in their graves, but now to pass this bill and put it upon the statute books and let business and prosperity revive throughout all our borders. Sir, whenever we do that, then conditions will be changed, the night will disappear, darkness and distress will leave the land, and a new day will dawn upon it; prosperity will come to all our homes, happiness will be in our bosoms; sunshine will light up all faces, and the country will once more resume its career in prosperity and in peace. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CALL in the chair). The Chair gives notice to the occupants of the galleries that demonstrations of approval or disapproval are in violation of the rules of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, as there seems to be no other Senator inclined to go on with the debate this evening.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriations submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for contingent expenses of a branch hydrographic office at Cleveland, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TABLET COMMEMORATING LAYING THE CORNER STONE OF THE CAPITOL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the Senate resolution (S. R. 78) providing for the placing of a tablet upon the Capitol to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the building, September 18, 1793.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit a communication which has been addressed to him by the committee having in charge the celebration of the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The General Committee on the Centennial of the Capitol has donated a bronze tablet estimated to cost about $900, to be placed upon the exterior southeast wall of the north wing of the original Capitol building, to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol, September 18, 1793, by President George Washington.

As legislation will be necessary to carry out the purpose of the general committee, I have the honor to request that the subject may be brought to the attention of Congress, only suggesting that the matter of the inscription upon the tablet be left to the discretion of the joint committee appointed under the joint resolution of Congress approved August 17, 1893, and that the selection of the precise locality for the insertion of the tablet, as well as the work connected with such insertion, be placed under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

L. GARDNER,
Chairman General Committee.

Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution, which is before the House for reference. The Clerk will report it, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the general committee of citizens of the United States, of which Lawrence Gardner is chairman, have donated to the United States a bronze tablet to be placed upon the Capitol to commemorate the laying of the corner stone of the building, September 18, 1793: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the United States accept the said tablet, and that the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the same, when approved by the joint committee appointed under joint resolution of Congress of August 17, 1893, to be placed in or upon the southeast wall of the north wing of the original Capitol building, upon such suitable place as he, the said Architect, may select, at such distance above the corner stone laid by George Washington, September 18, 1793, as in the judgment of said Architect may be best suited to display the same, without detracting from the architectural effect of the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYNUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL FORCE FOR LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House joint resolution (S. R. 66) providing for additional clerical force for the Librarian of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HENRY HULTEMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Hulteman; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUSK, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BANKHEAD, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. PRICE, from April 19, on account of important business.

ELEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In compliance with the request of a nonpartisan mass meeting held in the city of St. Louis on Friday last, I submit resolutions which were adopted by that meeting of citizens, irrespective of party. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The Clerk, reading the resolutions, read as follows:

Whereas the principles of justice have been outraged in the unseating of the lawfully elected member of Congress from the Eleventh district of Missouri, Mr. Charles F. Joy; and

Whereas this act is a direct assault upon the dearest possession of a citizen—the right to choose his representatives in the enactment of his country's laws—and is the first step in the direction of anarchy, as subverting a government of the people, for the people, and by the people: Be it therefore

Resolved, That this assemblage of voters of the district, irrespective of party, condemns this outrage against the integrity of the ballot, and protests against the misrepresentation of the district by a man——

Mr. McMILLIN (interrupting the reading). That is not a privileged resolution, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, let us hear it all read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has not presented a question of privilege.

Mr. STORER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object?

Mr. McMILLIN. It does not require an objection. A member can not get the floor under a false pretense.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There is nothing to show that there is any false pretense here. The resolution has not been read in full yet.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I have obtained the floor under the rule which provides that when the dignity of the House or the integrity of its proceedings is in question a member has a right to rise to a question of privlege.

Mr. McMILLIN. The dignity of the House is more likely to be affected by a dynamite resolution like this than in any other way.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. For these resolutions the member from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is not responsible. They were passed by a meeting of citizens composed of both Democrats and Republicans.

The SPEAKER. The resolution as read presents no question of privilege.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is in the resolutions, whether or not they present a memorial touching the seat of a member of this House. I say I do not know whether they contain a memorial or not, because the resolutions have not been read in full.

The SPEAKER. No question of privilege has been presented by the resolution thus far.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But it has not been read in full.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that the resolution thus far has not presented a question of privilege. No gentleman has a right to have any resolution read to the House as a matter of right.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But suppose this should be a memorial affecting the right of a Representative to a seat on this floor, it seems to me that that would present a question of privilege. I do not know what the fact is, because I have not heard the resolutions read in full.

The SPEAKER. The House has already passed on the question raised in this resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But, Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that the House having passed upon the question, or anything that may have occurred heretofore, does not prevent the reception of a memorial on the subject.

Mr. McMILLIN. Memorials have their regular channel through which to reach the House, and they can not reach it indirectly or surreptitiously.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the last part of the resolutions states that the Eleventh Congressional dis-
